Mr. HUSTED. The gentleman is referring to the quota for a particular year. The quota is entirely within the determination of the governing board, and for the last two years our quota, based on population, has been $100,000. We pay no more in proportion to our population than any other nation pays, but you can not expect a little republican State like Honduras to pay as much as the United States of America. But here is the all-controlling language:

The Pan American Union shall continue for successive terms of 10 years unless 12 months before the expiration of such term a majority of the members of the union shall express the wish, through the Secretary of State of the United States of America, to withdraw therefrom on the expiration of the term.

No such expression has been given through the Secretary of State or otherwise, and we are still an adhering member of the union, and we can not withdraw, either legally or morally, except as provided in the resolution. As long as we continue in membership it is, of course, our duty to contribute our quota as fixed by the governing board. This is the organization about which Philander C. Knox, when he was Secretary of State, had this to say:

Among the foreign relations of the United States, as they fall into categories, the Pan American policy takes first place in our diplomacy.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUSTED. Yes.

Mr. BURTON. Why does not that provision make this in order? I understood the gentleman from New York to concede that this proviso was subject to a point of order. The obligation to pay money may be incurred by treaty, but a treaty is the law of the land and is like a statute. Why does not that treaty make this provision entirely normal?

Mr. HUSTED. Because under our rules, if I understand them, if any part of a paragraph is subject to a point of order, it vitiates the whole paragraph. The only part of the paragraph that is subject to a point of order is the proviso providing for the distribution by the union of an edition of the monthly bulletin, which reads:

And provided further, That the Public Printer is authorized to print an edition of the monthly bulletin, not to exceed 6,000 copies per month, for distribution by the union during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923.

There is no authorization for the printing of this monthly bulletin.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I think it may help the Chair in arriving at a proper conclusion on this point of order if I review somewhat hurriedly all the legislation in connection with it.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present. This is an important argument and we ought to have a quorum to hear it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland makes the point of order that no quorum is present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and one Members present, a quorum.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, as I stated before I was interrupted by the point of no quorum, I think it will aid the Chair if I review very briefly the acts making this appropriation in order. The first one I find relating directly to it is an act approved May 24, 1888, authorizing the President of the United States to arrange a conference between the United States of America and the Republics of Mexico, Central and South America, Haiti, San Domingo, and the Empire of Brazil.

The first section of this act reads as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, requested and authorized to invite the several Governments of the Republics of Mexico, Central and South America, Haiti, San Domingo, and the Empire of Brazil to join the United States in a conference to be held at Washington, in the United States, at such time as he may deem proper, in the year 1889, for the purpose of discussing and recommending for adoption to their respective Governments some plan of arbitration for the settlement of disagreements and disputes that may hereafter arise between them, and for considering questions relating to the improvement of business intercourse and means of direct communication between said countries, and to encourage such reciprocal commercial relations as will be beneficial to all and secure more extensive markets for the products of each of said countries.

In conformity with this statute the call was issued by Secretary of State James G. Blaine, and the First Pan American Conference met in Washington on October 2, 1889. The countries attending the conference were Argentina, Bolivia, Brazil, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, Ecuador, Guatemala, Haiti, Honduras, Mexico, Nicaragua, Paraguay, Peru, Salvador, United States, Uruguay, and Venezuela. The conference continued until April 19, 1890. On March 29, 1890, a recommendation was approved for the organization of an association under the title of "International Union of American Republics."

In the diplomatic and consular appropriation act, approved July 14, 1890, this language appears:

To enable the President to carry into effect the recommendations of the international American conference so far as he shall deem it expedient, when the same are agreed to by the Governments represented in such conference, or a majority of them.

In another paragraph of this same act is the language which was cited by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HUSTED]. It is as follows:

For the organization and establishment under direction of the Secretary of State of the International Union of American Republics and the prompt collection and distribution of commercial information, $36,000.

The CHAIRMAN. Was that in the same act in which the authorization was made?

Mr. TILSON. It was the same act which made the appropriation for carrying into effect the recommendations of the conference. It was the diplomatic and consular appropriation act approved July 14, 1890, and is found in Twenty-sixth Statutes at Large, 275. Under this act the Union of American Republics was organized and established and appropriations were made for its maintenance in each successive year, 1891, 1892, and 1893.

In the sundry civil act approved August 18, 1894 (28 Stat. L., p. 418), an appropriation is made, and the following additional language appears:

The Bureau of American Republics shall be placed under the control and direction of the Secretary of State, who shall report to Congress at its next regular session the propriety of continuing said bureau, or if any obligation exists on the part of the United States requiring the continuance thereof.

In accordance with this statute the Secretary of State, Walter Q. Gresham, made a report to Congress on December 14, 1894, first citing the act just cited by me, and reported in compliance with that act that the union should be continued. As to the part of the act calling for an opinion as to whether there was an obligation requiring a continuance of our adherence to the union, Secretary Gresham uses the following language in speaking of the agreement which had been entered into:

> While it has not the binding force of a treaty made by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, it has the sanction of the President and both Houses of Congress, and my conclusion is that while a majority of the Governments that became parties to the union at the instance of the United States adhere to it by contributing to its support, this Government can not in good faith withdraw from the organization.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. Yes; I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BLANTON. I am not contending that the union should not be continued. If this appropriation had been $36,000 for carrying on our part of it, I should not have objected; but the gentleman must know that out of this $100,000 some of it at least goes for the numerous entertainments that we have down at that building, and it is the waste that I am objecting to.

Mr. TILSON. The gentleman knows how to draw limitations on an appropriation bill. It will be perfectly easy, after this point of order is overruled, for the gentleman to move an amendment placing any limitation which he desires on the appropriation. Therefore, what the gentleman says is not pertinent to the discussion of the point of order.

Appropriations for the support of the union were made in each succeeding year following 1894 up to 1910, inclusive. In the urgent deficiency bill approved February 25, 1910, the following provision appears in connection with the appropriation:

> To meet the actual and necessary expenses of the delegates of the United States to the fourth international conference of the American States to be held at the city of Buenos Aires.

In accordance with this provision the conference was held, and at this conference the action was taken which has been referred to by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. HUSTED], in which it was agreed by the conference that the union should continue at any rate for a period of 10 years, and thereafter for successive periods of 10 years.

It was also agreed at the Buenos Aires conference to change the name of the organization, but not its purposes; and the name "Pan American Union" was adopted. There has been no subsequent legislation on the subject, but the appropriations have been made every year without interruption. It seems to have been accepted as settled that it was authorized by law, and so the appropriations have been continued until the present time. We now find ourselves in this situation: An organization that has continued for 32 years, the United States has been a participating member all of that time, in fact was the prime mover in bringing it into existence, and yet it is contended at this late date that we have no authority of law to appropriate for its continuance. It should have some weight that Congress has appropriated for this purpose through all these years, and that the acts of the organization have been sanctioned a number of times by acts of Congress. The one act, however, that of July 14, 1890, to which reference has been made by others as well as myself, is of itself sufficient, for it gives direct authority to organize and establish this union of American Republics. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that all of these statutes, taken together with the history of the organization, furnish a sufficient basis for the Chair to hold that this appropriation is authorized by law, and therefore in order.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, there are two points that have not been covered by the two gentlemen who have discussed the point of order. I should like to bring them to the attention of the Chair.

In the first place, the Chair is undoubtedly familiar with the compilation of laws of the United States published in 1919, and known as Barnes's Federal Code. I think most lawyers in the House who have had occasion to use that volume will agree with me that it is reliable and well compiled. As the title to the volume itself discloses, it is a code only of permament law. Perhaps it is not conclusive or binding on this House, but I think it is of some interest and of some evidential value to note that Barnes's Federal Code in sections 7044 and 7045, on page 1661, recognizes and treats of the Pan American Union as permanently established under the laws of the United States. It cites the acts of 1893 and 1894 and a number of other acts, including many of those which have been cited by the gentleman from Connecticut.

One other point I think has not been raised which to me is conclusive on this entire point: Last year Doctor Rowe, who was then and is now Director General of the Pan American Union, testified concerning this item before the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations in charge of the Diplomatic and Consular appropriation bill.

I happened at that time to be occupying the position of chairman, which is now so ably occupied by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HUSTED]. In the course of the discussion—referred to on page 283 of the hearings on the bill for 1922—the following colloquy occurred:

> Mr. ROGERS. Article 11 of the agreement at the Fourth International Conference of American States, made and signed at Buenos Aires August 11, 1912, found in volume 55, Senate document, page 156, Sixty-first Congress, third session, reads:
> "The Director General of the Pan American Union shall submit at the regular meeting in November a detailed budget of the expenses of the following year. This budget, after approval by the governing board, shall be transmitted to the various signatory governments, with a statement of the annual quota which each is to contribute, this quota being fixed in proportion to the population of the country."
> Was this international agreement ratified by the Senate?
> Doctor ROWE. Yes.
> Mr. ROGERS. And it has the force of law?
> Doctor ROWE. Yes.

That statement I am not able to challenge, and I doubt if any member of the committee is able to challenge it. To my mind it establishes conclusively two things, even if there had never been other legislation. First, that we are bound by an international agreement to engage in and continue the work of the Pan American Union until we withdraw by substantive legislation. Second, while it may be true that years ago we appropriated $50,000 or $75,000 or $85,000 a year, we are bound under the agreement of 1912 to conform to the quota obligations that are assigned to us from time to time in accordance with the international arrangement. And, as the gentleman from New York says, if we have authority to appropriate at all we have authority to appropriate for any amount unless there is a definite limitation elsewhere in the basic statutes. There is no such limitation in the law. Therefore our right here is unquestionable to appropriate any amount we desire.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, when I came into the Chamber I was of the opinion that the Pan American Union had been automatically dissolved by the lapse of time, or, in other words, by the expiration of the 10 years. That opinion was reached after hearing only those who appeared before the committee in behalf of an appropriation for the institution.

However, I have become satisfied from the argument made by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] that in that opinion I was in error. I am now of the opinion, just as the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS] said, that the Pan American Union runs for another term of 10 years, because it has not been by some act of Congress or of the other nations dissolved. In admitting that, however, I must agree with the gentleman from New York [Mr. HUSTED], the chairman of the subcommittee, that any appropriation made by the United States for the Pan American Union must be limited to the quota agreed upon. The amount of money authorized to be raised is upon the basis of population. Upon that basis the United States is now paying $100,000. The other Governments are assessed each a quota on the same basis, and their quotas aggregate something like $78,000, I think. It may be said here, however, that everyone of the South American Governments is not now contributing; some of them are in default. Therefore the question arises now, Can this bill provide appropriation of money other than the assessed quota? This bill appropriates a quota of $100,000. In addition to that it provides that 6,000 copies of a certain pamphlet may be printed each month, at the cost alone of the United States, to be paid out of funds other than the quota.

Mr. HUSTED. I would respectfully call the attention of the gentleman from Kentucky to the fact that the 6,000-copy item is not contained in the pending amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I am very glad that the gentleman so informs me, because while I know that that amendment had at one time been withdrawn I thought it had been revived by another motion. That being the case, Mr. Chairman, I have nothing more to say.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. Under the act of July 14, 1890, the Congress organized and established under the direction of the Secretary of State the International Union of American Republics. It is true that that legislation was on an appropriation bill, but no objection was made and it became and was permanent law. There has been no change or modification, so far as the Chair is able to learn, of this organization and the establishment of this union except as to the name. The agreement referred to by the gentleman from Texas between the members of the union is as follows:

> Any of the Republics may cease to belong to the Union of American Republics upon notice to the governing board two years in advance. The Pan American Union shall continue for successive terms of 10 years, unless 12 months before the expiration of such term a majority of the members of the union shall express the wish to the Secretary of State of the United States of America to withdraw therefrom on the expiration of the term.

The Chair thinks that this agreement has not expired and that the notice was not served which would in any manner terminate our relations with the Pan American Union. The Chair therefore overrules the point of order. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland makes the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the Chair, Mr. DOWELL, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 11065 and had come to no resolution thereon.

OPERATION OF GOVERNMENT RADIO STATIONS FOR PRESS MESSAGES—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report upon House Joint Resolution 7, to authorize the operation of Government-owned radio stations for the use of the general public, and for other purposes, and I ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts calls up a conference report and asks unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection?

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, has the gentleman from Massachusetts given information to the ranking minority member that he intended to call the report up this afternoon?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, this conference report is a unanimous report of the committee. This report has been held up for three days on account of my being occupied in a joint session of the Committee on Commerce in the Senate and the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee of the House. I would like to have action on the conference report and have the same sent to the other body for completion. There is no objection to the report and there is no reason for delaying action upon the same.

Mr. STAFFORD. Would it be inconvenient to the gentlemen to defer this matter until morning?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I can not be here in the morning. I am due over with the Senate committee at half past 10 in the morning, as I have been during the past two days, and it will not be possible for me to be in the House at 12 o'clock to-morrow. I could not very well get here at 12 o'clock. This report has been pending for three days, waiting for a convenient opportunity to call it up. Yesterday it could not be considered because of Calendar Wednesday.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the resolution (H. J. Res. 7) to amend section 2 of the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution to authorize the operation of Government-owned radio stations for the use of the general public, and for other purposes," approved June 5, 1920, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 2: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of said amendment insert the following: "on June 30, 1925, except that all such rights conferred by this section in the Republic of China shall terminate and cease on January 1, 1924"; and the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the resolution (H. J. Res. 7) to amend section 2 of the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution to authorize the operation of Government-owned radio stations for the use of the general public, and for other purposes," approved June 5, 1920, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conference committee and submitted in the accompanying conference report:

No. 2: This amendment inserted by the Senate was stricken out on the ground that a five-year limitation extension for transmission and reception of press messages by naval radio stations on the Pacific coast is unwarranted owing to the belief that ample private radio facilities will have been established before the expiration of that period capable of handling all commercial and press business.

WILLIAM S. GREENE,
WALLACE H. WHITE, Jr.,
CARL R. CHINDBLOM,
L. LAZARO,
W. B. BANKHEAD,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am quite well acquainted with the second amendment of the Senate, but I am not acquainted with the Senate amendment No. 1. I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk report the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will report Senate amendment No. 1.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 11, after the word "States," insert a comma and the words "Hawaii, Alaska."

Mr. STAFFORD. What was the reason for that?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. It was to add Alaska and Hawaii to the privileges heretofore granted to the people of the Far East in the use of the naval radio.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman inform the House to what other insular possessions the radio privileges extend?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. The radio privileges extend to the Philippine Islands and to China and Japan.

Mr. STAFFORD. I notice in the amendment agreed to by the conferees that the conferees lessened the time within which the privileges should be extended to China by a period of six months. Instead of the limitation expiring on June 30, 1925, as it did to all countries and possessions, you have restricted it to January 1, 1924. What is the reason for that?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. The reason for that was that at the disarmament conference the Chinese matter was arranged and had been agreed to by the action in the Senate in approving the disarmament conference treaties. The House conferees agreed to that date at the request of the conferees on the part of the Senate, but the House Members did not consider it necessary.

There is no need of having that length of time, even. It does no harm to anyone, and after the report of the disarmament conference reaches China, and they accept it, no further action will be necessary.

Mr. STAFFORD. As the bill passed the House, the limit of time for the exercise of these privileges was extended until June 30, 1922.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. It was thus extended early last year, and by the action of the House, and was promptly sent to the Senate. They delayed action there until very recently they returned the same to the House, asked to have the same extended for a term of five years, simply stating that they wanted the time extended to June 30, 1927. We disagreed to the amendment, and the conference report was finally agreed to as the result.

As soon as private individuals establish this radio connection, for which the Radio Association of America has already obtained concessions in China, and when they are ready to establish the plant and complete its construction that will close the transaction.

Mr. STAFFORD. Not so far as press messages are concerned. Those are continued, I understand, until June 30, 1925.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. They will be continued, so far as press messages are concerned, until that time, I presume.

Mr. MONDELL. As I understand it, if the gentleman will allow me, the House committee believed the House bill was proper, but it was necessary to make some little concession to the other body?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. The other body felt as though they ought to have some concession, inasmuch as they are a very important body. We did not think they needed it, but we finally satisfied them and obtained a full agreement.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 3360. An act to authorize the building of a bridge across the Congaree River in South Carolina.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the House of Representatives be requested to return to the Senate the bill (S. 2992) authorizing the Secretary of War to furnish certain information for historical purposes to the adjutants general of the several States and the District of Columbia, and making an appropriation therefor.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 3360. An act to authorize the building of a bridge across the Congaree River, in South Carolina; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 49 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Friday, April 7, 1922, at 12 o'clock noon.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington: Committee on Indian Affairs. S. 2440. An act extending the period for homestead entries on the south half of the Diminished Colville Indian Reservation; without amendment (Rept. No. 879). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. LARSEN of Georgia: Committee on the Public Lands. H. R. 8763. A bill validating and confirming a certain indemnity school-land selection of the State of Florida; without amendment (Rept. No. 880). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. LARSEN of Georgia: Committee on the Public Lands. H. R. 5224. A bill to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to certify to the Secretary of the Interior, for restoration to the public domain, lands in the State of Louisiana not needed for naval purposes; with an amendment (Rept. No. 881). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

5009. By Mr. SNYDER: Petition of residents of the thirty-third New York congressional district, requesting the prohibition of imitation milk in interstate commerce; to the Committee on Agriculture.

5010. By Mr. STEENERSON: Resolution of International Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers of Thief River Falls, Minn., favoring House bill 10798; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

5012. By Mr. TOWNER: Petition of J. K. Forsyth, of San Francisco, Calif., and 57 other citizens of the State of California, asking for the passage of the Towner-Sterling educational bill; to the Committee on Education.

5013. Also, petition of Jackson E. Mohr and 38 other citizens of Evansville, Ind., asking for the passage of the Towner-Sterling educational bill; to the Committee on Education.

5014. Also, petition of Harry A. Maxwell, of Malden, Mass., and 135 other citizens of the State of Massachusetts, asking for the passage of the Towner-Sterling educational bill; to the Committee on Education.

5015. By Mr. VOLSTEAD: Petition of 82 farmers in the seventh congressional district of Minnesota, urging revival of the Government Grain Corporation and a guaranteed price on farm products; to the Committee on Agriculture.

SENATE.

(Legislative day of Wednesday, April 5, 1922.)

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LENROOT in the chair). The Senate resumes the consideration of House bill 9103.

ADDITIONAL DISTRICT JUDGES.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9103) for the appointment of additional district judges for certain courts of the United States, to provide for annual conferences of certain judges of the United States courts, to authorize the designation, assignment, and appointment of judges outside their districts, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] to the amendment of the committee. The amendment to the amendment will be read.

The READING CLERK. In the amendment of the committee, page 10, line 13, after the word "two" insert "for the district of New Jersey, one."

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. On agreeing to the amendment to the amendment I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FERNALD (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES]. I transfer that pair to my colleague [Mr. HALE] and vote "yea."

Mr. HARRISON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS]. Not knowing how he would vote and being unable to obtain a transfer at this time, I withhold my vote.

Mr. JONES of Washington (when his name was called). The senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] is necessarily absent to-day and I promised to take care of him with a pair. Therefore, I withhold my vote.

Mr. NEW (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR]. Not knowing how he would vote on this question, I withhold my vote.

Mr. OVERMAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY] and vote "nay."

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] to the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] and vote "nay."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. STANFIELD] and vote "yea."

Mr. UNDERWOOD (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. He is absent, and I therefore withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. KENDRICK. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCCORMICK]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] and vote "nay."

Mr. NEW. I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] to the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. NEWBERRY] and vote "yea."

Mr. HARRISON. I transfer my pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] to the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] and vote "nay."

Mr. RANSDELL. I withhold my vote.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Has the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That Senator has not voted.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have a pair with that Senator, and in his absence I am not at liberty to vote. If at liberty to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to announce that the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER], the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON], and the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN] are detained at a meeting of the Committee on Finance.

I wish also to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED];

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS];

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN];

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] with the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL];

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS];

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] with the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING];

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. PHIPPS] with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL]; and

The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN].

The roll call resulted—yeas 25, nays 21, as follows:

YEAS—25.

Ball	Frelinghuysen	Myers	Sheppard
Bursum	Harris	New	Shortridge
Cameron	Johnson	Nicholson	Spencer
Curtis	Keyes	Oddie	Sutherland
Ernst	Ladd	Pepper
Fernald	McKinley	Poindexter
Fletcher	Moses	Pomerene

NAYS—21.

Ashurst	Kendrick	Norris	Walsh, Mass.
Capper	La Follette	Overman	Walsh, Mont.
Caraway	Lenroot	Rawson	Watson, Ga.
Cummins	McNary	Stanley
Gooding	Nelson	Sterling
Harrison	Norbeck	Wadsworth

NOT VOTING—50.

Borah	Gerry	McKellar	Smoot
Brandegee	Glass	McLean	Stanfield
Broussard	Hale	Newberry	Swanson
Calder	Harreld	Owen	Townsend
Colt	Heflin	Page	Trammell
Crow	Hitchcock	Phipps	Underwood
Culberson	Jones, N. Mex.	Pittman	Warren
Dial	Jones, Wash.	Ransdell	Watson, Ind.
Dillingham	Kellogg	Reed	Weller
du Pont	King	Robinson	Williams
Edge	Lodge	Shields	Willis
Elkins	McCormick	Simmons
France	McCumber	Smith

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On this question the yeas are 25 and the nays are 21. The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] announced that he withheld his vote. The Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], the Senator from Alabama [Mr.

UNDERWOOD], and the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] announced their pairs. These Senators make a quorum present, and the amendment offered by the Senator from New Jersey to the amendment of the committee is agreed to.

Mr. HARRISON obtained the floor.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. HARRIS. I offer an amendment which, I understand, is acceptable to the committee, and I ask that it may be read at the Secretary's desk. I do not think there will be any opposition to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 10, line 22, in the committee amendment, it is proposed to strike out the word "district" and to insert "and southern districts."

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment which has been proposed by the Senator from Georgia to the amendment of the committee. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] has the floor.

Mr. HARRISON. I yield for the present to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, the amendment which has just been proposed by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS] to the amendment of the committee does not propose to add to the number of judges. It simply provides for the appointment of an additional judge in Georgia for two districts instead of for one district. The committee, so far as I have been able to ascertain its wishes, accepts the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon the adoption of the amendment of the committee as amended.

APPOINTMENTS TO AND REMOVAL FROM OFFICE.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I was not surprised when the vote was announced a few moments ago on the amendment offered by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN]. It was a perfectly natural thing for Senators on the other side of the Chamber to vote for the amendment; it was only carrying out the policy as expressed in this bill. It would have been very unfortunate for the Senator from New Jersey, who offered the amendment; it would have been highly discriminatory, if Senators on the other side should have failed to accept the amendment and vote for it; for the Senator from New Jersey would have never been able to explain to his constituents in New Jersey why the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], the leader on the other side of the Chamber, had been able to obtain two judges to assist him in his election in Massachusetts in November next, while the Senator from New Jersey received none. Nor could the Senator from New Jersey have explained how he failed to obtain one judge, while the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER], who comes up for reelection in the coming campaign, obtained three judges; or how the two Senators from Pennsylvania, who come up for reelection in the next campaign, obtained two judges while the Senator from New Jersey received none; nor could he have explained how the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND], who, as we understand, has a pretty brisk fight on his hands in Michigan, received one judge while the Senator from New Jersey received none. To Ohio, where a strong contest is on in an attempt to elect a Republican Senator, there has been given one judge. Minnesota, where the distinguished junior Senator from that State [Mr. KELLOGG] has a hard fight on his hands, is to be given a judge; so certainly the Senator from New Jersey would never be able to explain the matter in his campaign if he also had not secured the appointment of a judge. Then, as to Missouri, where there is a contest coming off, the Republicans are to be assisted by the creation of one judgeship. Over in Montana there is also another senatorial contest this year, and an additional judge is to be provided for that State under the pending bill. Out in California, where a Senator is to be elected this fall, the Republicans will be aided to the extent of having an additional judge appointed there.

Mr. OVERMAN. There are two additional judges provided for California.

Mr. HARRISON. My attention is called to the fact that in the pending bill two judges are provided for California.

In Arizona, where, of course, my friend, the senior Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], will have a fight on his hands, the Republicans will be aided to the extent of having a new appointee in the form of an additional judge in that State.

It seems that, running through the whole bill, I think, with four exceptions, the States which are selected to be given from one to three additional judges are States where sharp contests will occur over the election of sitting Members or others who are running on the Republican ticket. So it was but natural that the Republicans should have adopted the so-called Frelinghuysen amendment to give the Senator from New Jersey an additional judge in his State to aid him in the coming campaign.

Mr. President, it is very appropriate in the discussion of the pending bill that the attention of the country should be called to what transpired in this Chamber on day before yesterday. I did not speak on yesterday touching the action of the Senate on the day before, for I did not desire to interfere with the pending bill; so, under an arrangement, the Senate met one hour earlier this morning. It was a perfectly harmless resolution which was before the Senate on day before yesterday, merely asking the President of the United States—to furnish to the Senate the name of every person appointed by Executive order, setting aside civil-service rules, and to furnish to the Senate the reasons therefor.

Is not the country entitled to know who, since the 4th of last March, under Executive order, have been appointed to civil-service positions and the reasons for such appointments? Yet the Senators on the other side of the aisle, for practically three hours, employed every parliamentary maneuver to prevent that resolution from coming before the Senate for discussion and action. During the whole morning hour, lasting for two hours, Senators on the other side, with two or three exceptions, lined up unitedly and voted against the resolution presented by me being laid before the Senate for consideration and action. What was the motive behind their activities? What prompted the majority to employ such tactics in order to strangle the resolution and hold it on the table and prevent it from coming before the Senate?

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. MOSES. In the interest of complete historical accuracy, will the Senator state how the Senators on the other side voted, and whether they lined up with complete solidarity in order to force the resolution through, and will he also give his opinion as to what the motive is on the other side for pressing the resolution?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; that is exactly what I arose to-day to address myself to.

Mr. President, this side of the aisle unitedly voted to bring the resolution before the Senate for consideration and for action. The motive behind their action was the belief that the American people were entitled to know just how many Executive orders had been issued by the President since last March setting aside civil-service rules and the reasons for doing so.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi further yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. HARRISON. I will say to the Senator that I will finish much earlier if I am not interrupted, but I will be glad to yield to the Senator.

Mr. MOSES. I thought the Senator intended to occupy the extra hour which has been afforded this morning.

Mr. HARRISON. No; I want to get through at the very earliest possible moment. I will yield to the Senator, however. I am always glad to yield to him.

Mr. MOSES. I merely wish to point out to the Senator something which he very well knows, but which he has omitted to state, that the American people in due season, when the report of the Civil Service Commission is issued, will have all this information, and I doubt very much if there is any outcry from the country for immediate illumination on the subject.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator advanced that argument the other day and exhibited a report from the Civil Service Commission, which did not contain all the reasons for the issuance of the Executive orders, and only covered the period up to September of last year. It will be a long while before the next report of the Civil Service Commission is issued, and when it is issued it will not contain all the reasons which I am seeking to have furnished to the Senate for the action of the Executive.

Mr. MOSES. It will contain all of the available reasons, Mr. President.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I am led to believe that the reason of the opposition of the other side of the aisle to the resolution is that they are in this diabolical plot, this conspiracy, to do things under cover and in secrecy and withhold information from the American people. I am led to believe that Executive orders have been issued by the President upon the request of certain Senators here; that the reasons for such action which were given to the President will not be transmitted in the report of the Civil Service Commission to the Senate, for, if they should be, they would not be received very well by the constituents of Senators on the majority side. That may be the reason which prompts the suggestion of the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire that the Civil Service Commission can give the reasons and make report better than can the President of the United States.

If certain Executive orders were issued by the President in behalf of certain Senators, and reasons assigned to him, the Civil Service Committee may not know anything about it, and their report would not contain it; and, regretful as I am even to suggest that such an idea might enter my mind, the actions of Senators on the other side of the Chamber and the intense opposition of Republican Senators to this resolution leads me to that conclusion.

A more reasonable request never was made to the United States Senate. You assisted in writing upon the statute books civil service laws. You have always said you believed in the enforcement of and compliance with civil-service requirements. In your platform you enunciated that doctrine. To the American people you proclaimed that theory. Here is what your party said in your last platform—the platform upon which President Harding was elected:

> We renew our repeated declaration that the civil service law shall be thoroughly and honestly enforced and extended wherever practicable. The recent action of Congress in enacting a comprehensive civil service retirement law and in working out a comprehensive employment and wage policy that will guarantee equal and just treatment to the army of Government workers and in centralizing the administration of the new and progressive employment policy in the hands of the Civil Service Commission is worthy of all praise.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. HARRISON. I do.

Mr. STANLEY. The Senator overlooks the fact that that has been interpreted for us now by the ingenious spoilsman from New Hampshire, who says that the President meant that he would only enforce, and his party is only committed to enforce, the civil service law when practicable; and it is never practicable, says the distinguished authority from Indiana, to put a Democrat in, or keep him in, if you can find a Republican to fill the job.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. STANLEY. So, according to the interpretation of the two Senators, this Civil Service Commission is very simple. If that is the case, we have a wolf in sheep's clothing. The sheep's clothing is mangy, and the wolf is sticking out before and behind. I want to smoke out the President on that proposition. I hope he will say whether he approves of this interpretation of his party's platform.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, right along those lines the Senator from Kentucky suggests the position of the Senator from New Hampshire. There is no Senator here who is closer to the President than is the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES]. He was one of the most active workers in the last campaign. He was placed upon the Post Offices and Post Roads Committee. He is one of the most influential members of that committee.

Mr. STANLEY. And the Senator must not overlook the Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW]. The Senator from New Hampshire has no edge—I do not know what that means—on the Senator from Indiana. He speaks over the radio telephone of the Government. The voice is the voice of Jacob, but the hand is the hand of Esau.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes, Mr. President, the two closest friends of this administration have spoken and said they were political spoilsmen; that if it were within their power they would turn out all Democrats and place in office all Republicans. So I am assuming that those are expressions that emanated from the White House, and that they are but giving to the country the views entertained at the other end of Pennsylvania Avenue.

Mr. MOSES rose.

Mr. HARRISON. I hope the Senator will allow me to proceed. So close is the Senator from New Hampshire to the White House, and so anxious, perhaps, was the President to carry out the views proclaimed by the Senator from New Hampshire, that when the Senator from New Hampshire took his man Friday, his warmest and closest political ally and friend from New Hampshire, ex-Governor Bartlett, and recommended him to the President as the most suitable man to serve as chairman of the Civil Service Commission, the President, evidently knowing the views of the Senator from New Hampshire, and knowing how Bartlett could work, placed him in that high and responsible place. He served there just long enough to learn all the ropes touching the civil service laws and regulations. I have no doubt that with his keen intellect he was constantly studying the methods that might be employed to evade the civil service law by those in the executive departments; and so, being anxious to carry out the policies enunciated by the Senator from New Hampshire as well as those of the Senator from Indiana, Bartlett is taken off of the Civil Service Commission as its chairman and selected among all the men in the United States to fill the office of First Assistant Postmaster General.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. HARRISON. I do.

Mr. NEW. I merely wish to observe that the Senator is doing me an honor from which I do not shrink but to which I am not entitled.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; but the Senator knew what was going on, and he knew the motives that lay behind taking Bartlett from the chairmanship of the Civil Service Commission and placing him in office as First Assistant Postmaster General—the man who names all the postmasters, first, second, third, and fourth class, throughout the United States.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi further yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; I yield.

Mr. NEW. I will say that if all the other assertions of the Senator from Mississippi are based upon as slim a foundation as the one he has just made they are not entitled to a great deal of weight, because, as a matter of fact the Senator from Indiana did not even know that the transfer of Governor Bartlett from the Civil Service Commission to the First Assistant Postmaster Generalship was in contemplation until after it was announced in the newspapers.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, of course when things are done behind closed doors, in secrecy, and everything that goes on in the executive departments is withheld from the public we can only assume one's position from circumstances; but I am glad to accept the plea offered by the distinguished Senator from Indiana.

Mr. President, I have not heretofore discussed the order issued turning out 28, I believe, employees from the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. I have not said anything because I believed, or I wanted to believe, that the President would offer some excuse, whether flimsy or not, for that unprecedented action.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. STANLEY. I do not like even to question the motives of the dramatic and forceful utterances of the Senator from Mississippi; but is the Senator from Mississippi candid and sincere when he expresses surprise at the conduct of the President in throwing the benevolent robes of his high office about the spoilsman and the boss, or lending his great influence to the operation of practical politics? Has the Senator from Mississippi forgotten that the President is simply running true to form? Has he forgotten that a good many years ago, when Boss Cox and his machine had become so disreputable that the present Chief Justice of the United States became nauseated, even his gorge rose, and he denounced the methods of Boss Cox, no less a personality than the President himself came instantly to the rescue of Boss Cox against the attacks even of the present Chief Justice and the ex-President, and he went to Cincinnati and delivered a nauseating eulogy of the boss and of his kind, in which he said that Cox was entitled to the deference and devotion of all good Republicans; and for many years thereafter he was referred to as "Warren G. Harding, D. D.," not "doctor of divinity," but "Deference and Devotion Harding"? Is he surprised that the patron saint and especial defender and attorney in fact for Boss Cox should now seek the spoilsmen of the Senate to do his bidding and preserve his party from impending disorganization and ruin?

Mr. HARRISON. I think I had better modify my statement after this very real characterization of my friend from Kentucky; but I remembered the speeches delivered by the distinguished President as a Senator, when he arrayed himself against autocracy, and talked against encroachments of the Executive upon the legislative branch of the Government. I recall his criticisms of the former President for what he said was an inexcusable usurpation of power. I believed him to be a tender-hearted, mild-mannered gentleman, and that at least, while he might throw out some man from office in order to take care of some of his political friends, he would not issue such a drastic order that would take from the service women whose records—in one case for 43 years—had been the best, a woman who in two years' time could come under the provisions of the civil-service retirement law, a woman who from her compensation was supporting two invalid sisters and an old, aged mother; women who as a result of that act, when they are thrown out, never again can obtain a position in the Government service. I did not believe that this man whom I thought to be tender-hearted and fair could do such an act as that.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CARAWAY. If I may interrupt the Senator a moment, the Senator from Indiana, of whom I am very fond, was very angry with me the other day for having, as he said, taken parts of two days to discuss this order, and I notice that he was taking issue with the Senator from Mississippi a moment ago. I have a letter here, if I may read two paragraphs, that may throw some light upon it. I shall not disclose the name of the lady, who comes from Indiana, because she is an employee of the War Department, and she will lose her place if I do; but the letter contains this statement:

On March 30 a canvass was taken, by order of the War Department, in our division of the number of clerks who claimed Indiana as their legal residence. This information was sent to the chief clerk of the War Department, and my name being one of others who are in one of the divisions of the department, I received the inclosed communication this morning. This is evidently being done in other Government departments, as a friend of mine received the same kind of a blank.

Inclosed with that is a circular from the Indiana Republican committee, lock box 345, Washington, D. C., and this blank:

[Executive committee: Mr. Oliver P. M. Brown, chairman; Capt. J. R. Henry; Mr. John B. Newman; Hon. Stanton J. Peele; Dr. Harvey W. Wiley.]

INDIANA REPUBLICAN COMMITTEE OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
March 31, 1922.

DEAR FRIEND HOOSIER:

Are you a Republican? ____ Or if you have not been a Republican in the past, do you desire now to affiliate with that party? ____ If your answer to either question is "Yes," please answer the following questions and return promptly in the inclosed stamped and addressed envelope. If reply is not promptly received, the committee will assume that you are not interested in the Republican Party:

Name in full_____

Washington address_____

Have you retained voting residence in Indiana? ____ If "Yes," in what congressional district? ____ County? ____ Voting precinct? ____

Indiana P. O. address_____

Did you register for 1920 election? ____ If "No," when was the last time you voted? ____

Are you going home to vote at the May 2 primary? ____ Would you like to vote at this primary by mail (any duly registered elector, if absent from the State, is entitled to vote in the primary by mail)? ____ If "Yes," do you want this committee to assist you in obtaining "absent voter's ballot" without expense to you? ____ If your wife or other members of your family are entitled to vote, please give name or names here_____

The right to vote is the heritage of every American man or woman, and the exercise of that right is a requisite to good citizenship.

INDIANA REPUBLICAN COMMITTEE,
O. P. M. BROWN, Chairman.

The letter says that the departments are being combed to find people who can vote in the coming May primary in Indiana.

Mr. MOSES. May I say to the Senator that he did not read anything of that kind from the letter?

Mr. CARAWAY. I did read it from the letter. If the Senator from New Hampshire did not hear it, I am not responsible.

Mr. MOSES. I did hear what the Senator read. He read from the letter a statement to the effect that they went through the departments to find out who lived in Indiana. They said nothing about combing it to find out who would vote at the primaries.

Mr. CARAWAY. If the Senator can not add two and two together, I shall not waste any time explaining to him.

Mr. MOSES. If the Senator will permit me, that is the manner in which this whole discussion has been carried on by Senators on the other side. They make certain deductions. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] says he assumes; in fact, there has been altogether too much assumption. The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY] says, "I want to smoke the President out." That, Mr. President, is the animus of all this discussion on the other side. They assume, they deduce, they want to harass the President. That is all there is to it.

Mr. CARAWAY. That is not all there is to it. Here is what the letter says——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi further yield?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. CARAWAY. The Senator yields to me, if the Chair will just wait a moment. The letter says:

On March 30 a canvass was taken, by order of the War Department, in our division of the number of clerks who claimed Indiana as their legal residence. This information was sent to the chief clerk of the War Department, and, my name being one of others who are in one of the divisions of the War Department, I received the inclosed communication this morning. This is evidently being done in other Government departments, as a friend of mine received the same kind of a blank.

The blank is, "Do you live in Indiana and are you willing to vote in the May primary?"

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. STANLEY. The Senator from Kentucky is perfectly frank in saying that his heart is touched with a sense of regret. I feel sorry for the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES] and the Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW].

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, may I beg both the Senator from Kentucky and the Senator from Mississippi not to waste any crocodile tears on me.

Mr. STANLEY. They will be wasted.

Mr. MOSES. If the Senator insists on spilling them, I can not prevent it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi has the floor. Senators will not interrupt without addressing the Chair.

Mr. STANLEY. If the Senator will just wait a while, he will need the sympathy of all good people. "Put not thy trust in princes."

I hold no brief for the Civil Service Commission. I find no fault with an honest, courageous man who believes in his party. The great trouble with modern politics is that men are not bound together in political or any other kind of organization by a common aspiration. They are held together by the force of an identical appetite.

I know that the utterances of the Senator from New Hampshire and the utterances of the Senator from Indiana are going to be used by this organization to convince the necessitous and the hungry that the time has come to turn the rascals out, and that is what is being done, and it is being done for the purpose of finding places for Republicans.

I am equally certain that when the long-haired men and the short-haired women march on the other end of the avenue, you are going to be repudiated and left out in the cold, a pair of distinguished goats, political goats, scapegoats, to take the burden of your statements and defend them to your people, and the President will still be, if he is permitted to be, the somewhat discredited angel of civil service; and that I am determined shall not be done. He can turn them out; he can wield the ax all he pleases, but he is not going to wield the stiletto, and a poisoned dagger at that, if I can help it—not on Democrats.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CURTIS in the chair). Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. MOSES. Of course, the Senator from Kentucky, as he said in his closing words, maintains all his activity, all his sympathy for Democrats, and being a partisan myself, I respect the partisanship in him. But, Mr. President, the Senator must not think that the Senator from Indiana and I are going out into the desert to wander, because we are not. We think we are coming to our own, and when the Senator says that we are endeavoring to point out the fact that the day is at hand when the rascals should be turned out, I think that day came long ago.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi has the floor, and under the rule has no right to yield except for a question; but it is for the Senator to decide what he wants to do.

Mr. HARRISON. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. STANLEY. I think it is the custom here to yield for an interpolation. While the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY] is reading letters, I have a little companion piece here I think would go well with his. It is like the bass and the contralto or the tenor in the same piece of music. This is written on House of Representatives stationery, headed "Assistant Director, Public Information, National Republican Committee," signed by Congressman CARL W. RIDDICK. This is a form letter, sent to a civil-service employee, to a man who has been under the cloak of the civil service for quite a time. It reads:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., March 29, 1922.

Mr. ——— ———,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. ———: I have been quite disappointed in not receiving a favorable reply from you in answer to my recent letter, written you in behalf of Republican Party leaders. I have been given an official position with the Republican national organization and asked to give much time out of a very busy life to the detail work necessary to carry out a nation-wide educational and publicity program arranged by party leaders and regarded by them as absolutely necessary at this time.

I know you are in full sympathy with this effort. I am expected to raise necessary funds to send the National Republican paper in the widest measure possible into strategical homes and territory, not merely to maintain party integrity and success but that the party and the Nation may proceed along fundamentally sound Republican paths that lead to safety and prosperity.

Because the work of Congress is not perfect creates the greater need for educational publicity work right now. Because times are hard and there is restlessness, there is more need for action now. The Nation can not turn, if it would, to the old-time conservative Democratic Party, for it is no more. If faith is lost in the Republican Party, the only alternative is radicalism, paternalism, confiscatory and destroying.

You are in full sympathy with your party leader friends, who see the imperative need for going on with this work now. The plan is to proceed in a way that will not prove embarrassing to any of our friends, and for that reason we ask you and other good friends to send a check for the small amount of $10 only now, and to sign the inclosed pledge and return with your check, assuring us that we may call upon you every three months for a similar small amount, which you will not feel, but which will in the aggregate make the success of this work possible.

Although exceedingly busy, I am willing to work the long extra hours necessary to carry out this program of party leaders. But it is discouraging and disheartening not to have a reply and cooperation from a real friend like we know you to be. I know you have only overlooked this. I know you are in full sympathy with this work and want to see it succeed and accomplish the great good proposed, and for that reason will excuse my insistence in writing you again, and asking that you be so good as to sign the inclosed slip and send it in with your check for $10 in the inclosed stamped envelope, and thus give encouragement and real assistance to the work. Party leaders will be fully advised of those who are aiding and will be appreciative, and personally I will thank you for lending encouragement to me in my arduous part of the detail work.

Very truly yours,

CARL W. RIDDICK.

This was written to a man who receives about $150 a month, $40 a year to be reported to party leaders. They not only want Republicans in but they want milch cows in which are fresh.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, the action of the President in dismissing these 28 employees in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing in the manner and form in which it was done is unprecedented. If the reports printed in the papers are true, these employees all had good records. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW] the other day intimated that in time something would be given to the people as to what prompted this action which had not been told. The President stated there were no charges against any of these 28 employees who were dismissed. The Secretary of the Treasury made the same statement.

We now read in the papers that since an aroused and indignant public have universally condemned it, that some one has ordered the Secret Service force of the Department of Justice to investigate and unofficial intimations reflecting on the character of these public servants permitted to be printed.

It may be that this administration now deems it wise to find something, if possible, to cover up its polluted tracts.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LENROOT in the chair). Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. HARRISON. I am glad to get the interruption.

Mr. NEW. I do not want to interrupt the Senator from Mississippi, but if he is quoting the Senator from Indiana I would like to have him quote him accurately.

Mr. HARRISON. I will quote the Senator exactly. On April 4, just the other day, the Senator said:

Mr. President, as I have said, there are times when not even the President of the United States may make public every motive that actuates him and every reason which impels action on his part, and the action which was taken two or three days ago with reference to removals in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing falls within that category. There were good and sufficient reasons for the President's action, but whether or not they will be given to the public I can not say.

Mr. NEW. That is right.

Mr. HARRISON. The next day the President told the newspaper correspondents, and it was published broadcast, that no charge was or had been lodged against any of those 28 dismissed employees. Of course, the motive may be given in time, and the motive may have been the reason assigned by the Senator from New Hampshire, that they were turning Democrats out of the public service in order to put Republicans in.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LENROOT in the chair). Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. MOSES. If the Senator will turn to my remarks I think he will find that I never assigned any such reason. I expressed the hope that that might have been the case.

Mr. HARRISON. But the Senator said "they have been fired and will stay fired," and that he indorsed the proposition.

Mr. MOSES. That is assigning no reason. I assigned no reason for their being dismissed. I repeat that they are fired. I repeat that they will stay fired.

I do not understand from the civil service law that the President of the United States has to give reasons and that he may be put upon hearing whenever he wishes to remove anybody from the classified civil service. My understanding of the decision in all these cases is that that applies simply to the heads of the executive departments or chiefs of bureaus. The Senator from Mississippi himself discharging an office boy in his law office might just as well be called to account and be demanded to give causes and reasons in writing and to hold a hearing before firing the boy as to say that the President of the United States can not dismiss a subordinate with or without reason.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, that is a very unfortunate illustration. An office boy in a law office is not under the civil service, but here were 28 persons who took the examinations, passed, and were qualified under the civil service law to hold these positions. Even the director, Mr. Wilmeth, had worked in that department for years and was a civil-service employee and won his place through long service and training.

Mr. MOSES. That does not protect him as against the action of the President of the United States. The President of the United States, as I understand it, is perfectly untrammeled in his action toward the civil service.

Mr. HARRISON. If the Republican Party desires so to interpret that plank in its platform by pursuing such methods, well and good, but we might as well repeal the whole civil service law if that is to be the policy followed by this administration.

Mr. MOSES. When the question arises between the Democratic Party and the Republican Party as to their respective records on the civil service, that undoubtedly will be met. What I am trying to make clear in the course of this three days' debate, when the Senator from Mississippi and the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY] and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY] are keeping Democratic Senators from pressing amendments to give them more Federal judges in their States, is the fact that during the filibuster which they are conducting against the judiciary bill their animus is wholly partisan.

Mr. HARRISON. Why, there is no other Senator who belives any filibuster is being conducted against the judges bill. We consented to a unanimous-consent agreement which was entered into yesterday to vote this afternoon not later than 4 o'clock. I requested the Senator in charge of the bill to meet this morning at 11 o'clock, in order that we might discuss the matter. Otherwise we would have convened at 12 o'clock. We have tried in every way to expedite action on the judges bill, if you had votes enough to pass it, although I am opposed to it. The Senator knows there is no filibuster here. He is trying to strangle discussion that might reveal the iniquities of this administration, and that is what prompted his remarks.

Mr. MOSES. Oh, no, Mr. President. I hope if there are iniquities in this administration the Senator from Mississippi will discuss them, but he certainly has not revealed any yet. The removal of 28 employees from the Bureau of Engraving and Printing does not constitute anything to warrant the language of the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. HARRISON. It would be bad enough if the President, in issuing his Executive order, had removed employees from positions that were not statutory, but under his Executive order, he who had proclaimed against autocracy and the usurpation of power attempted in that order to abolish three statutory positions. Even the Senator from New Hampshire would not contend the President had that right. He could not indorse that kind of policy upon the part of the President. I do not know why the President thinks he has grown so big that the Congress has not sufficient power left to repeal laws or make changes in laws. "Upon what meat doth this our Cæsar feed, that he is grown so great"?

Mr. MOSES. The Senator from Mississippi is a member of the reorganization commission, is he not?

Mr. HARRISON. Oh, yes.

Mr. MOSES. What are the powers of the President under that act?

Mr. HARRISON. The powers of the President under that act, as placed there by the Senator's party, were to appoint one W. F. Brown, who had been spoken of as a prospective candidate for the United States Senate from the State of Ohio, and, I presume, in order to remove him and allay the friction existing within the Republican Party in Ohio, he was made chairman of that commission at the instance of the President. From April 8 of last year to this good hour Mr. Brown, the spokesman and appointee of the Senator's President, after proclaiming that there was going to be a reorganization of the bureaus in the Government and a saving to the taxpayers, has refused to call a meeting of the Joint Commission on Reorganization. The President had it in his power to send word to that commission and have his representative, Mr. Brown, call a meeting of the commission so that we could get to work and unravel these differences. That is what the President has to do with the reorganization work.

That reminds me, Mr. President, that on yesterday the distinguished Vice President spoke in Michigan. Here is what he said:

Commenting on a tour of an automobile plant—

This is an article which appeared in the Washington Post of this morning under a Detroit headline—

Commenting on a tour of an automobile plant here, in his speech the Vice President said he had marveled at the organization and efficiency shown, and he continued: "We are trying at Washington to get the same organization and efficiency into the Federal Government. We are reorganizing departments."

Yes; you are reorganizing departments, and the record is, as I have stated, that this commission has been held back by the President from even having a meeting to consider the question of reorganization. Yet the Vice President of the United States, speaking in far-away Michigan, tries to leave the impression by that speech that you are reorganizing something down here and trying to effect efficiency in the working of the departments. He further said:

We are reorganizing departments, trying to bring more of the efficiency of private enterprise into the Nation's business. We are making progress.

He praises "the efficiency" of the automobile plant in Detroit. I presume he was talking—although it is not mentioned—about Ford's plant up there. About the only difference between Ford's plant and the work of this administration touching efficiency is that Ford's plant turns out one automobile every minute, I believe, and you are trying to turn out one Democrat every second.

Ah, Mr. President, when will you cease this hypocritical policy that you are pursuing? You came into power upon it and you are going to ride to a fall on it.

There is hypocrisy in your every act. Every piece of legislation you have passed has scintillated with it. You go before the country and you proclaim what you have done, and if those good people would analyze it they would know that what you have done has been sugar-coated; that it is merely a patchwork of false pretense.

Your packer legislation was full of hypocrisy. I was on the committee that drafted that bill in the last Congress, and I recall how Senators on the other side of the aisle fought it, and during this Congress the packers wrote the bill and you let it pass, and it was signed, and yet you proclaim it to the American people as a great piece of legislation. Hypocrisy is written in its every line.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President——

Mr. HARRISON. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. MOSES. I merely wish the Senator once more to acquit me. I voted against that bill.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator was for once consistent.

Your Republican spellbinders proclaimed to the country that you passed the grain exchange bill restraining gambling upon the grain exchanges. Every suggestion that was made by the grain exchanges was embodied in that piece of legislation or you never would have voted for it.

The War Finance Corporation amendment was forced upon you and you accepted it reluctantly and unwillingly. We tried to amend it so that it would really give some relief, but you prevented us from doing it.

Every act of yours that you proclaimed as an achievement of the administration is a sham and pretense. That is what you are trying to practice with reference to the civil service laws by insinuating that something is wrong in the departments; that it is for the good of the service; that you are trying to bring about efficiency, and yet you discharge employees who rendered service during the dark days of the war by working into the wee hours of the morning, employees whose records heretofore stand without a blemish or a stain. So anxious are you to cover up your diabolical acts that you allow the papers to carry the intimation that something is wrong, even though the Secretary of the Treasury and the President say there was not a charge against them. I know that you are to-day in power, but do not think that you can ravish the civil service law and defy the other laws as you have attempted to do in this instance and meet the approval of the American people.

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES] the other day said that when the Democratic administration was in control Republicans were dismissed and Democrats placed in their stead. The record is quite to the contrary. In the campaign of 1916 both Mr. Hughes and Mr. Wilson as candidates promised a strict enforcement of the civil service law, and immediately after the 4th of March, 1917, following his second inauguration, Mr. Wilson modified his Executive order, and from that day on the highest man on the eligible list in the matter of postmaster selection was appointed to office.

But, Mr. President, I have here a letter from Massachusetts, from a person who knows what he is talking about, in which he makes this remarkable statement:

The Wilson order further provided that in every instance the person standing first as the result of the examination should be appointed unless it was shown that he was not a resident of the postal district from which the examination was given. From April, 1917—

Listen to this, you who have made contrary statements, and those who believe in the fair enforcement of the civil service law—

From April, 1917, to October, 1920, over 700 vacancies occurred, due to death, resignation, or removal from the service, and in every instance President Wilson appointed the top man on the list.

In the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD under date of March 1, 1921, a chart of appointments under the Wilson order shows that in 37 so-called Northern, Western, and Midwestern States 840 appointees were of Republican affiliation, as against 598 appointees of Democratic affiliation, and that in the entire country 60 per cent of the appointees were of Republican affiliation.

And yet the Senator from New Hampshire and those who stand with him as political spoilsmen would have the country believe that the last administration pursued such tactics as are now being employed by the present régime. Why, sirs, Mr. Phillips, a Republican from Massachusetts, a most efficient and courteous gentleman, was made and retained as Assistant Secretary of State. In the War Department, throughout the war and for the most part during Mr. Wilson's administration, there were three Republicans serving as Assistant Secretaries, and so it was throughout the departments, efficiency was sought and little politics considered.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; I yield.

Mr. MOSES. The fact is, Mr. President, that Mr. Wilson's order was not issued until he had filled the post offices with his partisans. It is true that the order issued after he was reelected provided that the highest man should always be appointed, but the figures just read by the Senator from Mississippi, showing some 800 Republicans forced to be appointed because they were the highest, as against some 500 Democrats, merely indicates that the Republicans were a great deal more intelligent than the Democrats and came out at the head of the list after examination.

Mr. HARRISON. Oh, yes; the Senator from New Hampshire thinks that all virtue is lodged in the Republican Party; but, at any rate, the last administration followed and obeyed the law.

Mr. MOSES. But, Mr. President, if I may add, the classic case is the case of the postmaster at Boston, where a vacancy occurred, I think, by death. An examination was ordered under the President's executive direction; a Republican was about 4 miles out in front of all the procession of Democratic candidates, and yet for more than a year the Democratic Post Office Department, urged thereto by Democratic Congressmen from Massachusetts, prevented the appointment of the successful Republican contestant in the examination.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, that is a case which disproves the statement of the Senator from New Hampshire, for at Boston the last administration named a Republican as postmaster, and the Senator from New Hampshire knows it. The name of that appointee came to the Senate for confirmation, and he was confirmed.

Mr. MOSES. But the appointment was not sent here until it had been inordinately held up by the department, when everybody knew that Mr. Baker was miles ahead of any Democratic competitor.

Mr. HARRISON. I do not care about that. I can show the Senator instances galore where Democratic contestants were 10 miles ahead of any Republican, and yet the Republicans got the office. I can show the Senator by letters which I have here where ex-service men, who fought for their country, traveled miles and miles ahead of Republicans in the examination, and yet Republican pie hunters got the jobs.

Mr. MOSES. Does the Senator mean under President Harding's order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senators must not interrupt the Senator who has the floor without first getting permission. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. MOSES. I should like to carry on a colloquy, but if I must say "Mr. President," and get the floor by the Senator yielding every time I ask a question, I do not wish to do it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the rules a colloquy between Senators may not be carried on without first obtaining the permission of the Senator who has the floor to be interrupted.

Mr. HARRISON. I am glad to have the Senator from New Hampshire interrupt me.

Mr. MOSES. If the Senator from Mississippi is referring to appointments which were made under President Harding's order, that order does not provide that the high man shall be appointed; but Mr. Wilson's order did so provide.

Mr. HARRISON. Of course, the Republicans have modified their order; but they have not even lived up to the modification of their order; and when somebody gets in their way they go to the President and ask him to issue an Executive order, and even statutory positions are abolished.

Mr. MOSES. I have never asked the President to issue an Executive order for anything.

Mr. HARRISON. Then the Senator from New Hampshire is an exception.

Mr. MOSES. I have sat, as a moot court, for the last week hearing every day piffling, childish protests made against the appointment of Republican postmasters in Southern States—some of them in the Senator's own State—but I wish to say that I have not yet found any case where the Executive order has been disregarded.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator from Mississippi yield to me?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. KING. With respect to the appointment of the postmaster at Boston, I regret that the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] is not here, but I am somewhat familiar with that case. With all due respect to the able Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES], I wish to deny the accuracy of his statement that the Republican candidate for that office was miles ahead in the examination. Upon the contrary, I affirm that a fair and impartial consideration of the evidence in the case respecting the applicants and the candidates, a fair appraisement of their records, would show that the Democrat was the more competent, the more efficient, and, measured by every fair standard, should have been appointed. The action of the civil-service examining board was not only indecent but it was unfair; and I assert it was dictated, more or less, by partisan prejudices and by Republican partisan bias.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. MOSES. The RECORD, however, shows exactly what I have stated.

Mr. President, since the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] has undertaken to speak about the Civil Service Commission in the prior administration, let me call to the attention of the Senate and the country the fact that one Charles M. Galloway, a Democrat from South Carolina, resigned from the Civil Service Commission under President Wilson, and in resigning gave out this statement——

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I do not yield for that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi declines to yield further. The Senator from Mississippi will proceed.

Mr. HARRISON. I do not care anything about the statement that Mr. Galloway issued; it has nothing to do with this particular matter. I have here a letter which I received this morning from an ex-service man——

Mr. MOSES. Very well.

Mr. HARRISON. However, if the Senator from New Hampshire desires to read the communication to which he has referred, and thinks it will relieve his excitement, I will yield and let him read the communication.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, possibly I had better read it in my own time, because I find that the Senator from Mississippi is getting a little thin-skinned about the practices of his party. I do not wish to interrupt him further.

Mr. HARRISON. I did not think the Senator from New Hampshire really wanted to read the communication.

Mr. President, this morning I received a letter from an ex-service man who made the highest grade in an examination; but he says that he and other candidates were discarded and that a man who did not take the examination but happened to be a Republican was appointed postmaster at that place. He was inquiring why, and in passing he says:

> I hope you will pardon my saying that if justice were done us in the matter of helping us help ourselves there would not be such a cry for the bonus.

There is a great deal of truth in that statement. I could read many other letters, if I cared to take up the time of the Senate, which reveal a similar state of facts.

Mr. President, I have here a letter all of which I will not read, but among other things the writer says:

> I am a Republican, but I am appealing to you as a Democrat because our good Republicans do not have the courage—

And so forth.

Mr. MOSES. The courage to do what?

Mr. HARRISON. Well, I will read further:

> Do not have the courage or inclination to interfere that justice may obtain. Perhaps, also, because they do not care to embarrass the administration.

This letter comes from a State which is represented by two Republican Senators. I have other letters here from Republicans who denounce the administration because of its policy touching civil-service enforcement.

Mr. President, on yesterday the News, published in this city, contained an editorial in which they analyzed the situation and set forth the reasons behind the action which has been taken by the administration and the consequences of that action. I desire to read a portion of that editorial. It reads:

> Who is lying down on the Government—

The editorial discusses the allegation that Federal employees are lying down on the Government—

> Who is lying down on the Government? Here is the answer and at the same time the complete explanation for President Harding's action:
> Things have been going badly in the Republican organization—National, State, county, municipal. If you doubt it, ask John T. Adams, national chairman. He'll tell you—if he knows you well enough. He may even allow you to see the stacks of letters he has received proving it.
> These letters ring with one refrain—
> "We can't get any action out of the 'boys' if there are no jobs to reward them with."
> That applies to the "boys" in the National, State, county, and municipal organizations.

The editorial continues:

> If you have no access to Chairman Adams, ask any Cabinet officer. He'll tell you of the visits, the continuous, everlasting visits he receives from Senators and Congressmen, singing the same simple tune. With no pie in prospect, the "boys" won't work.
> Yesterday there was an election in Kansas City. The Democrats won—

By 12,000 majority—

> A few days ago there was an election in Tulsa, Okla. The Democrats won. And an election in Hartford, Conn. The Democrats won.

I might also add that there was an election in Rhode Island and the Democrats won, and that there has been an election in Marion, Ohio, since the last election, and that a Republican mayor was turned out and a Democrat elected.

The editorial continues:

> Why? We don't know. There might be a different reason in each city. But the reason given to Chairman Adams, to the Cabinet officers, and, above all, to President Harding, is the reason recited above. The "boys" won't work.
> Harding has been trying to resist the pie pressure for many months. That is to his credit. He has withdrawn his resistance now, and that is not to his credit.
> Because the boys are hungry for pie, a good many Washington families of old and faithful Government employees are likely soon to go hungry for actual food.
> In addition, if they are allowed to get away with it, the men who are bringing this about propose that these faithful employees shall carry with them from the service a stigma that is unfair and false—a charge of having laid down on their jobs.
> We protest this cowardly procedure.

And yet some one says the action of the administration has been taken in the interest of efficiency. O, efficiency, how many crimes are committed in thy name!

Mr. President, why did not the President, if something was wrong in the Bureau of Printing and Engraving, remove the director or demote him and put a new man in that position, one who, in his opinion, would carry out his policies, and make such changes as were necessary in other places, by demotion if need be? That is what was done in the Government Printing Office. A new man was selected for Public Printer, a position that is not in the civil service. Mr. Carter was nominated and confirmed and assumed the position. Immediately in every one of the branches of the Printing Office he demoted Democrats and promoted Republicans. He did not discharge the Democrats from the service. The positions in that office are technical ones, just as they are in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing; it takes years to master the work of those positions. As I have said, Mr. Carter demoted Democrats and promoted Republicans until there was not a Democrat left in that bureau serving as foreman or assistant foreman. Did we raise our voices in protest against that action? No. We thought that was perfectly proper; it was all right; it was within the law; the preceding administration had taken similar action; but never before in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing by any administration had such a policy been pursued.

Mr. President, my resolution is still upon the table. I hope that at the very first opportunity Senators on the other side of the aisle will allow it to be passed, so that the reasons may come from the President for the issuance of the Executive orders and so that the Senate and the country may know the facts. Let us get away from this practice of doing things in secrecy.

Another remarkable thing about the recent Executive order was that it was not issued in the daytime; the cloture of the night was sought to perform this remarkable act. Even when the guillotine was engaged in its bloody work in the dark days of the revolution in France it worked in the daytime and not at night.

Mr. President, if we are going to have civil service, let us comply with the law. Let us not defy it. We can not expect the humblest citizen back in his home to respect the law if he reads in the papers of the President of the United States defying it every minute of the day and then reads of men who hold the highest positions in the gift of the people—namely, Senators—indorsing that policy and preventing these resolutions from being adopted so that the facts can not be made public.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, I would invite attention to the fact that it is now 12.30. For practically an hour and a half the Senate has listened to a stump speech. We were assembled this morning at 11 o'clock in order that the Senate might give intelligent consideration to a bill of transcendent public importance. It substantially involves the revision of the Federal judiciary; and the consideration of that measure is put aside and an hour and a half given to the aimless, purposeless discourse to which we have listened for the last hour and a half.

Mr. President, I should say nothing in reply, and not be myself guilty of taking up a moment of the Senate's time, but for a reference which was interpolated into the remarks of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], to which I am offering no objection; but a letter which was interpolated into those remarks by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY] is so directly personal as to seem to call for a word of explanation from me.

I take it for granted that the letter which was read, and which I have not seen either in the original or by copy, is from an organization which is maintained here by Indiana residents of Washington; that is, temporary residents, Republicans all. I particularly invite attention to the names of the gentlemen who speak for it—Dr. Harvey W. Wiley, Hon. Stanton J. Peelle, a former Member of Congress and a former judge of one of the courts in the District here, and others whose names are disclosed by the record, men and women of the highest standing. At this election, as at every other election which has preceded it for a great many years, they have sent those letters to Indiana people temporarily residing in Washington to aid them in casting their votes under what is known as the absentee voters' law of the State of Indiana. I presume that that is the purpose of this letter now. I hope it is. I admit, and gladly, that there seems to have been a purpose on the part of many of the Indianians who are now here to cast their ballots for me in the Republican primary which is to be held on the 2d day of May. I hope they will carry that purpose into execution. There is nothing about it to which I object, but much that I very heartily and fervently commend.

But, Mr. President, great indignation has been expressed in the progress of the remarks that have been made here. I think that the real basis of it is disclosed more by what the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] said in the closing moments of his address than in the text of the resolution which is the basis for his remarks.

It appears that some Democrats are about to be dislodged, about to be jarred loose from the jobs into which they set their teeth, and to which they have been hanging with a resolution characteristic of a Democratic officeholder, and, as the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES] interpolates, worthy of a better cause. But the probability, the prospect, of that has occasioned great consternation. It started with a wail like that of the banshee arising from the swamps of Arkansas, which swept through the mistletoe and moss, accompanied by scalding tears. It has crinkled up the blue grass of Kentucky. It has wafted across and blistered the buffalo grass of Nebraska. It has caused the canes in the brakes of Mississippi to tremble and to bend, and has caused the Senators on the other side to forget the ravages of the boll weevil and all the other ills from which they have suffered all these weary years.

Mr. President, I regret that their anguish of spirit is so deep and firmly seated as to cause them to forget the bodily ills from which they so long have suffered. My sympathy is with them. I hope the occasion for it, however, is not to be diminished.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, now that all the wreaths have been laid on the doorsteps of these cruelly murdered individuals, now that all the dirges have been sung, now that all the orations have been pronounced, I trust that the funeral may go forward.

The passionate closing remarks of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], however, lead me to think that when he demands that we shall "get away from these things which now pollute the public service, Mr. President," he wishes to go back to those angelic days when Charles Mills Galloway, a Bourbon Democrat from South Carolina, was forced out of the Civil Service Commission, and then made this statement:

> My resignation was forced because I would not cooperate with Postmaster General Burleson in debauching the civil service and making a sham of the merit system. Hermon W. Craven, the Republican member, and I, a Democrat, were ousted from the commission because we were not willing that the commission should be a mere adjunct of the Post Office Department, and subservient to it, especially with reference to the examinations for presidential postmasters under the Executive order of March 31, 1917.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President——

Mr. MOSES. Let me finish reading this, please.

> A very recent example of Mr. Burleson's conduct is furnished by his proposed amendment to this order, which now awaits the signature of the President. The existing order provides that the eligible with the highest standing shall be nominated. A large number of nominations have been held up, many of them for a long time, evidently in anticipation of this amendment, which will enable Mr. Burleson in many cases to deprive those standing highest in these examinations of the nominations to which they are already entitled. Among the post offices affected by the amendment are those of Boston, Mass., and Newark, N. J.

Thus, Mr. President, speaks Charles Mills Galloway, Democrat, of South Carolina; and I commend him to the Senator from Mississippi.

ADDITIONAL DISTRICT JUDGES.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9103) for the appointment of additional district judges for certain courts of the United States, to provide for annual conferences of certain judges of the United States courts, to authorize the designation, assignment, and appointment of judges outside their districts, and for other purposes.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, strange as it may seem, I want to speak about the bill that is pending before the Senate; and to that bill I offer an amendment, to insert at the end of line 22, on page 10, the following words:

> For the western district of Washington, one.

So, Mr. President, that that district, which now has two judges, will be put in the same class with a number of other districts, such, for instance, as the western district of Pennsylvania, the northern district of Illinois, and the southern district of California, which now have two and which by this bill will each be given an additional judge, making three in all. The amount of business which is transacted by the United States district court in the western district of Washington is larger and much more varied than the business that is transacted in the three districts which I have named, which are provided for in the bill.

Not long ago I had an opportunity to talk with the judges who hold the present positions in this district, as well as with a number of attorneys practicing at the bar there; and from that direct personal contact I got a much clearer and much more reliable view and information as to the condition of business in that district than could be gotten from a series of statistics and tables that are prepared, many of which contain a great many erroneous statements and which are formulated upon a basis which is not particularly illuminating, anyhow—such, for instance, as the amount of business pending at the conclusion of the year, rather than the amount of business that is commenced and disposed of during the year. From this personal information which I have, Mr. President, I know that there is an imperative need for an additional judge in this district.

The district consists of two divisions—one of them in the southwestern part of the State and one in the northwestern part. Judge Cushman presides over the southern district, with his residence at Tacoma. Judge Neterer, the other district judge, presides over the northern division of the district, with his residence at Seattle. I want to call attention to the data which they give me, the amount of business commenced—not the amount of business remaining on the docket at the conclusion of the year—the amount of work which is done in that district, and to the opinion of the bar association, contained in a letter addressed to my colleague [Mr. JONES], as to the pressing need of an additional judge; also a statement from the Attorney General of the United States that in his opinion there is a congestion of business there.

I was informed by a number of lawyers that the stress of the work in this court is so great, particularly in Seattle, a large city, a city of more than 300,000 inhabitants, with very varied business, that Judge Neterer, who resides in Seattle and presides over that division, not only works continuously, so far as his physical limitations permit him, during the daytime, but that he works a great part of the night. I was informed that it is his habit to arise at a very early hour in the morning, 4 o'clock, or something like that, and work on his cases, in order to keep up with the pressure and necessities of his court.

I got my information by asking the judges questions, because they are rather modest about pressing their claims. Judge Cushman informed me that both he and his colleague in this court are so overwhelmed with work that they are cut off practically from all association with their fellows. They have no time for anything else, not even for going out in the evening on social occasions. The lawyers tell me that under these conditions it is impossible for a proper, deliberate consideration to be given to the business to which the important business pending in the court is entitled. It is only from a very sincere and a very profound conviction of the actual need of an additional judge in this district, in the interest of the general economy which would result from a proper administration of justice in this important court, as well as in the interest of the proper conduct of business itself, and the proper consideration of cases, that I offer this amendment, and I hope it will be favorably considered.

I want to call attention to some figures given as to the amount of business transacted in this district as compared with that of two or three other districts for which three judges are provided.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator for which district of Washington he is moving this amendment?

Mr. POINDEXTER. The western district of Washington. If the Senate will pardon me for doing so, I do not know of any better way to show the conditions than to read a letter I received from Judge Cushman, one of the district judges now holding office there. It is dated January 11, 1922. In it he said:

> We feel that the public interest requires that we state the conditions in this district requiring another district judge, to the end that public business may be disposed of with reasonable dispatch, and the consideration which it demands.
> Both judges in this district have been exerting themselves to their utmost in endeavoring to discharge the business of this court. Long hours are the rule rather than the exception. It is a physical and mental impossibility to continue under such a strain. Impairment of efficiency necessarily must follow.
> We have prepared a statement of the business of this court during the years 1909 (when an additional judge was provided) and 1920, as shown by the reports of the Attorney General as well as the business of certain districts in which, as we understand, provision has been made for three judges by the recent House bill.

His statement also applies to the bill as amended by the Senate Judiciary Committee, which amendment is now pending before the Senate. He continued:

> Not for the purpose of showing that those districts were not entitled to extra judges but rather to demonstrate that by the same token this district deserves as well. We believe the allowance made to be necessary.
> Of the 18 districts in which at present there are 2 or more district judges only 6 show uniformly a greater number of cases in gross commenced—

I call attention to the fact that he refers to cases commenced and not the cases pending at the end of the year; and it seems to me it is a much more reliable guide in determining the necessities of the courts to consider the cases commenced and disposed of as well as those pending at the end of the year than merely to take those which are left over. If I may interrupt the reading of Judge Cushman's letter at this point, permit me to say that he calls attention to a rule of the court of that district in another letter which I have from him, in this language:

> All cases which have been pending in this court for more than one year without any proceedings or record having been taken may be disposed of by the court on its own motion for want of prosecution at the call of the calendar at the beginning of each term.

He states that "We have strictly enforced this rule." That accounts for the fact that there is not such a showing as compared with some of the districts as to the number of cases left on the docket at the end of the year, because they are stricken from the docket when not prosecuted. Proceeding to read from Judge Cushman's letter, which I was quoting, he says:

> The difference is not great except in the northern district of California and the eastern and southern districts of New York.

That is, there is no perceptibly greater volume of business in any of the other districts which have three judges, except in the northern district of California and the eastern and southern districts of New York, although three judges are provided for many of the other districts, and I call particular attention to the southern district of California, the northern district of Illinois, and the western district of Pennsylvania, for all three of which an additional judge is provided by the Senate amendment.

Continuing his statement, he said:

> Comparing the business in the southern district of California, northern district of Illinois, and western district of Pennsylvania, as shown by the reports of the Attorney General, with that of the western district of Washington, excluding bankruptcy cases which, except for review, do not require much of the court's attention, the estates being administered by the creditors under the suspension of the referee, we have the following:
> Total number of cases commenced in the southern district of California and the western district of Washington during the years 1915 to 1920, inclusive.

I leave out the intervening years for the purpose of saving time and refer only to the year 1920, which is the last year covered by the report of the Attorney General which was used by Judge Cushman in preparing this statement.

In the southern district of California for 1920 there were 726 cases commenced. In the western district of Washington there were 920 commenced. The percentage of volume of cases commenced in the western district of Washington over those commenced in the southern district of California is 29 per cent. There were 29 per cent more cases commenced in the western district of Washington that year, and I may say that a larger excess than that runs through the other years covered by the period over the southern district of California.

He specifies in a separate statement admiralty cases, and calls attention to the fact that admiralty cases, by reason of the nature of the procedure, require a great deal of the time of the judge. In the southern district of California, for which an extra judge is provided in this bill, in the year 1920 there was a total of 96 admiralty cases. In the year 1920 in the western district of Washington there was a total of 489 admiralty cases. So he proceeds:

> The disparity of work under this head is much greater than under the preceding tabulation, for the reason that admiralty causes require the judge to find the facts and law and often to read a long record for such purpose. With a congested calendar, this must be done out of court, and at night.
> The total number of cases commenced in the northern district of Illinois and the western district of Washington for the years * * * 1920 were—

I will refer to only those for 1920. The northern district of Illinois, 902 cases commenced; western district of Washington, 920 cases commenced:

> It would appear, from ordinary experience in court, that more work is required of a judge in the disposition of the cases in the latter than in the former district, in view of the fact that but 19 admiralty cases are reported by the Attorney General during the three years in question in the northern district of Illinois, as compared with 234, so shown, in the western district of Washington.

He turns to another district covered by this amendment, the western district of Pennsylvania, and he shows that in the western district of Washington for the year 1920 there were 920 cases commenced, and in the western district of Pennsylvania only 782 cases were commenced. He does not deny that the committee is right in providing an extra judge for the western district of Pennsylvania, but he, the bar association, and others who are familiar with the situation, including myself, insist that for the same reason that an additional judge is provided for the western district of Pennsylvania one should be provided, and there is much greater need for the provision, in the western district of Washington.

The total number of cases, other than bankruptcy cases in 1909, in the western district of Washington, was 391. The total number of such cases in the same district in 1920 was 920.

I shall not read at this time all the statistics contained in this letter, but call attention to Judge Cushman's statement as to the increase in the volume of business of the district subsequent to the date of June 30, 1920, the conclusion of the Attorney General's report, to which reference has been made, down to the 31st of December, 1921. He said:

> The report of the Attorney General closes June 30, 1920. We have had the clerk check cases filed from July 1, 1920, to December 31, 1921, and find, in Seattle—

That is in the northern division—

as follows:

Admiralty, of which 95 are forfeiture cases for violating the Volstead Act	229
Criminal cases	626
Law and equity cases	243
Bankruptcy cases	244

Total, 1,342 cases, commenced in one division, the northern division of this district, during the period from July 1, 1920, to December 31, 1921.

In the southern division, the same district, in the same period of time, the cases commenced were:

Admiralty cases	14
Criminal cases	298
Forfeitures	18
Law	110
Bankruptcy	154

Making a grand total for both divisions of the entire district of 1,983 cases commenced in this district during the 18 months preceding the 1st of January last past.

In addition to that, I call the attention of the Senate and of the Senator having the bill in charge, who I know wants to be entirely liberal and just in this matter, to the fact that there were other cases not included in this list which were commenced at Bellingham, where four terms of court a year are held, in the northern division of the district, which are not included in the list of cases commenced at Seattle and at Tacoma just given. The judge states:

> The Bellingham cases are not included. The business there only takes from two to four weeks during the year, four sessions being held. It is apparent from the existing business—emphasized by the need established in 1909 for an additional judge in this district, and the adjudicated need in districts already provided for by the bill which passed the House, as compared with the conditions in western Washington—that the present judges can not dispose of the judicial business of this district.

Now, that is not mere empty language. As I said, on a recent visit to Seattle accidently I met Judge Cushman and asked him about this condition, and I know from that talk with him that he means literally what he said in this letter, that the business simply can not go on as it is now with only two judges. He said further:

> The litigation in the western district of Washington is not only of great magnitude, but is important by reason of the fact that this district is the termini of practically all the great transcontinental railroads.

I was going to call attention to that. Every transcontinental railroad in the United States and in Canada has a terminus in Seattle, from the Canadian Pacific to the Southern Pacific. The Great Northern, the Northern Pacific, the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul, the Union Pacific and its affiliated road, the Southern Pacific, and other roads, such as the North Western and the Burlington, which converge with the Northern Pacific, transmit their entire volume of Pacific coast business to Seattle as a terminus. In addition to that I might mention the fact that in this western district are the headquarters, the outfitting and capitalization management, the home and residence of companies which conduct the greatest fisheries in the world, which supply the world with canned salmon, a product which goes to every country and every port.

The greatest lumber business in the world is conducted there. Out of the port of Grays Harbor, which is included in the southern division of this district, ships laden with lumber go to every port where there is sufficient business and sufficient civilization to use the high-class fir, cedar, spruce, and hemlock lumber of western Washington.

There has been no section in the country where there has been a more varied and more rapid growth than in the region of Puget Sound, which is the center of this western district. The great transcontinental railroads connect with the various ship lines which ply to the ports of the Orient, and the lines of trade and commerce and the stream of commodities that go around the world pass through this district and have their agencies and port facilities and their transfer operations from trains to ships and vice versa in Seattle and Tacoma, where rail meets sail and where the great railroads connect up with the ship lines plying to Hawaii, Japan, China, and Siberia.

In addition to that is the business that has been incidental to the development of Alaska, an empire in itself, which has poured into the coffers of the national wealth half a billion dollars during the period of time since we bought it from Russia for the paltry sum of $7,250,000. Mining, fishing, agricultural settlements, development of transportation, all the varied interests that are incidental to the pioneer work of opening up and establishing government in that great dominion, full of natural wealth as is Alaska, find their sustaining headquarters, their impetus and direction, in Seattle. A part of this business is transacted in San Francisco, but the greater part of it, the chief headquarters of Alaskan business and of Alaska, are in Seattle, and out of that arises an immense amount of business which must be transacted in the United States court in that district.

There is one other circumstance to which I want to call attention that distinguishes a comparatively new country, such as is western Washington, from the eastern judicial districts which have been referred to, and that is the fact that a great deal of the business there is transacted by nonresidents, both individual and corporate, and consequently the Federal courts have jurisdiction on the ground of diverse citizenship of litigation in which their business is involved. Being able to go into the Federal courts, it is perfectly natural that they ask that tribunal instead of the local State courts, especially where they have litigation with residents of that State. That is an incident and circumstance which tends to increase to a greater degree than is the case in the normal district Federal litigation in the western district of Washington.

Mr. President, I wish to conclude, by reference, to confirm what I have said, to a statement from the Seattle Bar Association. I do not think there is a more intelligent, more honorable, more reliable bar anywhere in the world than the bar of Seattle. It is a great city, great in its present wealth and population and still greater in its potentialities, and there have gathered a very high class bar. They have the public interest at heart. They look upon these questions from the standpoint of the welfare of the public and of the Nation, rather than from any selfish interest of their profession or from any political advantage of the State or district or of any political party.

I may say, if I may refer for a moment to suggestions which have been made on the political aspects of these matters, that I regret to see that injected into a discussion in the Senate. I like to hear these matters discussed on the stump, but I do not think this is the proper tribunal in which to hang out the dirty linen of political controversies. In my opinion there is no political advantage in getting an additional judge. Personally, in so far as any responsibility devolving upon me in part from the creation of an additional judge, I would seek to avoid it, because I can not imagine any greater embarrassment, particularly in the midst of a political campaign, than to have to select one among a number of candidates, all of whom are fit and qualified and each one of whom has a strong body of adherents, and be compelled to recommend one for a position which can only be held by one.

That is the way the Seattle Bar Association looks upon the matter, and I think that their opinion and their statement, knowing them as I do and vouching for them as I can to the Senate, is entitled to credence and consideration. In a letter addressed to my colleague, dated December 31, 1921—and I shall read only brief extracts from it—the Bar Association of Seattle said:

> The criminal cases resulting from violation of the national prohibition and narcotic acts and customs laws has assumed burdensome proportions. The trials of these cases take priority over civil litigation, and as a result the determination of civil litigation of the most important character, and involving large sums, is of necessity so delayed that the business concerns interested are crying out in righteous indignation. The proximity of the territory in this district to Canada affords ready opportunity for the violation of the prohibition act, and the fact that vessels from all parts of the world are constantly entering this port clearly demonstrates the possibilities open for violation of the narcotic and customs laws. There is no other district in the United States similarly situated, as the congested condition of our Federal court calendar conclusively demonstrates.

They might have added the amount of business in the Federal courts growing out of violations and attempted violations of the immigration law.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. FLETCHER. With reference to the situation in Washington, according to the table furnished by the committee, there appear to be pending in the eastern district of Washington a total of 104 cases, and in that district they have one judge. There appear to be pending in the western district of Washington 713 cases, and in that district they have two judges. How the Senator can reconcile his vote against the giving of an additional judge in the southern district of Florida, where they have 1,336 cases pending, with the claim here for an additional judge in Washington, I can not quite understand.

There are no admiralty cases pending in the eastern district of Washington, and there are only 57 admiralty cases pending in the western district, where there are two judges. We have 165 admiralty cases pending in the southern district of Florida, with only one judge.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator probably was not present when I begun my remarks, when I discussed the best way of determining the need of an additional judge, in which I called attention to the fact that, in my judgment, and it seems to me to be perfectly obvious, the number of cases commenced in a court during the year is a much more reliable test than the number of cases pending at the end of the year.

I called attention to the fact that these judges are working night and day. In one of the letters it was stated that they begin to hold court in the morning at 10 o'clock, and sometimes at 9 o'clock, and hold court, except for a brief intermission for luncheon, until 5 o'clock in the afternoon; that they work at night upon the record in those cases in which they have to find the facts, and that applies to all the admiralty cases. I also called attention to information that I have that one of the judges is not only working all evening at home, but gets up at 4 o'clock in the morning, as he has his law library at home, and works upon cases there before he opens court.

That answers, I think, the question of the Senator from Florida; but I wish to say, in justice to myself or in palliation of my vote on the Senator's amendment, that I was not able to be in the Senate during the discussion of the Florida case and might not have been informed of conditions. Not knowing anything about the case, except what I could ascertain from the report of the committee, I followed the committee. Unfortunately, I was not advised otherwise, not having heard the Senator's speech or seen the data presented in his case.

But I have compared conditions in western Washington in a way which seems to me to show conclusively to the advantage of that district, or rather to its disadvantage, as to its need for an additional judge—its disadvantage in the sense that there is greater congestion, that there is greater stress upon the court than in three other districts which are provided for by the committee, namely, the northern district of Illinois, the western district of Pennsylvania, and the southern district of California.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Washington, inasmuch as he referred to the southern district of California, to the fact that Judge Cushman spent 15 days down in that district.

Mr. POINDEXTER. When was that?

Mr. NELSON. This last year. The Senator from California [Mr. SHORTRIDGE] made the statement that Judge Cushman spent 15 days in that district.

Mr. POINDEXTER. When I was before the committee in this case the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] asked me how it was that Judge Cushman could hold court in New York. I wrote to Judge Cushman about that, and he advised me that he had not held court in New York for two years. It might have been two years ago that he held court in California.

Mr. NELSON. The Senator from California is here. He stated in his remarks that Judge Cushman this last year had spent 15 days holding court in the southern district of California.

Mr. POINDEXTER. It may have been an exchange. It may be that one of the judges from California held court for him and that he held court for that judge, or it may have been the pressure for his transfer was so great that he could not avoid it. But that does not in any way change or depreciate the force of the figures which I have given here as to the amount of business commenced respectively and comparatively in these several districts, nor as to the statement which I have made, which I do not think can be successfully contradicted, of the stress under which the judges are laboring in this Washington district.

There are just one or two additional paragraphs which I wish to read from the letter of the bar association:

> The western judicial district of Washington is divided into two divisions. Judge Jeremiah Neterer presides over the northern division at Seattle and Judge Edward Cushman over the southern division at Tacoma. Court is in session practically every day at both Seattle and Tacoma. Whenever Judge Cushman's engagements at Tacoma will permit it, he comes to Seattle and holds court. The sessions of the court are from 10 o'clock a. m. to 5 o'clock p. m., with an intermission at noon. Frequently, however, both judges convene court at 9.30 a. m., shorten the noon intermission, and hold night sessions.

The concluding part of the letter is as follows:

> It is a positive fact that both Judge Neterer and Judge Cushman are required to do more work than it is physically possible for them to do. Neither of them will be able much longer to stand up under the strain and stress under which they have for months past been laboring. It is not fair to either of them that they should be expected to continue to work in the future as they have in the past. But notwithstanding their ceaseless and untiring devotion to their work, litigation piles up faster than they are able to dispose of it. Important cases arising out of legitimate transactions of trade, industry, and commerce are compelled to practically stand still because of the priority given to the trial of criminal cases.
> This association respectfully but urgently demands that something be done to relieve the conditions above described. We know of no solution except the appointment of an additional judge for this district. We believe the records of the Department of Justice will substantiate every statement herein set forth.

Upon that statement, Mr. President, I submit the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. WALSH of Montana obtained the floor.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Does the Senator from Washington desire to address himself to the amendment proposed by his colleague?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I should be glad to have about two minutes.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Then I yield to the Senator.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I thank the Senator from Montana.

Mr. President, I have not had the opportunity to be on the floor of the Senate very much of the time since the pending bill has been under discussion because of being required to be in attendance upon committees of the Senate, and I am not going to take very much of the time of the Senate now. I do not intend to repeat what my colleague [Mr. POINDEXTER] has so well said. He has covered the conditions in western Washington very fully and very completely. I can only add my statement confirming what he has said with reference to those conditions. The situation there, as he has pointed out, is such as to cause a great deal of litigation of a Federal character. Washington is a new State, and all sorts of Federal activities may be found there. Naturally they are reflected in the business of the court.

I know the judges there personally, and I know that they are men of the most industrious character. They devote all of their time—in fact, more of their time than they ought to devote—to the business of the court.

The correspondence which my colleague has read points out very clearly and very fully the conditions; and that correspondence comes from men who know what those conditions are. I know those judges would not call attention to the situation if they did not feel that it was their duty to do so because of the imperative needs of the public. Neither of them are men who are disposed to obtrude their opinions or their judgments in matters of this kind; in fact, I think they are really oversensitive; and, as I have indicated, it was only the impelling character of the situation which led them to write the letter from which my colleague has read.

I have had occasion to examine the situation in the different districts for which judges are provided in the bill now pending, and I am satisfied that upon the data presented and the data available in the report of the committee, in the report of the Attorney General, and so on, the needs of the western district of Washington appear to be much greater than the needs of some of the districts which are provided for in the pending measure. When I say that, I do not mean to intimate that many districts do not need an additional judge, but if we are going to determine the action of Congress with reference to providing additional judges by the data showing the business transacted, as set forth in the reports of the Attorney General and by the compiled statistics as to the business of the various districts, then the showing made for the district of western Washington, it seems to me, is absolutely conclusive as to the necessity for an additional judge there.

I wish simply to express my view as to the action which I should like to have seen taken with reference to the pending measure, and yet I hesitate to do so because I do not like to set up my judgment against the judgment of the Committee on the Judiciary. I know that that committee has looked into this question very fully and very carefully; I know they have taken a great deal of time to consider it, so I think we ought to attach very great weight to their judgment and to their report; yet I can not get away from the conclusion that what I should really like to see with reference to this proposed legislation is the enactment of a measure providing, possibly, for about 10 or 12 more judges, without having those judges assigned to any particular judicial district in the United States.

I feel satisfied that the business of the courts requires more judges, but when we attempt to assign them by legislation or provide for additional judges for particular districts, then is exemplified the difficulty of doing that, and doing it in what appears to be a just and equitable manner. I have no doubt that there are many districts—in fact, it appears from the report of the Attorney General that there are many districts—in this country which are not provided for in this bill but which can make a stronger showing than some of the districts which are provided for. That presents a rather embarrassing situation, one which we can not very well explain, and one that can not very well be justified.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. NELSON. I wish to state that in the eastern district of Washington, where Judge Rudkin presides, the number of cases outside of draft cases—and there were hardly any of them—and bankruptcy cases pending on the 1st of June, 1921, was only 108. As a matter of fact, Judge Rudkin spends more of his time holding court in California, in both the northern and southern districts of that State, than in his own district. He has not sufficient work in his own district to occupy half of his time. I do not see why his services could not also be utilized in the western district of Washington.

Mr. JONES of Washington. There is no question that his services could be utilized there, but I presume it is thought by the department that his services can be utilized to more advantage in other districts. I do not think the conditions in the eastern district are really involved. We are not asking for an additional judge there. The record shows that Judge Rudkin was holding court in California last year for 175 or 176 days. He has held court also in New York and in many other districts throughout the country.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I imagine he is the judge whom the Senator from California had in mind.

Mr. JONES of Washington. No; I inquired of the Senator. The record does show that Judge Cushman was in California for 15 days, and it also shows that Judge Rudkin was in California, I think, for 176 days.

Let me say with reference to Judge Rudkin that I have known him for thirty-odd years, as I have known the judges in western Washington for a good many years, and I know that the judges in western Washington will take it as no reflection upon them, but that they will agree with me when I say that Judge Rudkin is one of the most remarkable judges in the United States; that he is a man of amazing ability and capacity to discharge judicial functions; that he can take care of the judicial needs of eastern Washington mighty well and devote probably half of his time, if not more, to other districts.

As the Senator from Minnesota has suggested, Judge Rudkin could give a great deal of his time to western Washington, but under orders of the department, or whatever may be the manner of assigning judges to the different parts of the United States, Judge Rudkin is called to various districts and circuits throughout the country. I think it will be the uniform testimony of those who have come before him that he is one of the most wonderful judges in the United States.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. POINDEXTER. In that connection it has been pointed out that in view of the reputation which Judge Rudkin enjoys—and it seems to be almost universal—it is greatly desired that he sit as a circuit judge, for the precedents of that court are regarded as of more importance than those of the district courts, and for that reason he has not been available to sit in the district court in western Washington.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, just a few words more. As I was saying, I do not assume to put my judgment against that of the committee—and I am not speaking in a critical manner, for very likely they have reached a better conclusion than the one I have in mind—but I had hoped that we would have a bill here which would provide for a certain number of judges without assigning them to particular districts. Possibly it might be well to assign them to the different circuits of the United States, but simply provide for probably 10 or 12 additional judges and then let them be appointed and their services utilized wherever necessity requires. That would certainly have avoided any suggestion of what has been termed the "pie counter." It is very unfortunate that any suggestion of that kind should be made in connection with a judicial bill; it is very unfortunate that there should be anything in connection with such a bill to lend color to such a suggestion as that. Of course, I know that the committee had nothing of that kind in mind, for there is not a committee in the Senate for which we all have higher respect than the Judiciary Committee. I realize that we are confronted by a very difficult problem.

The report of the Attorney General discloses that in the various districts of the country there has been a tremendous increase in judicial business during the last few years. If it were possible to provide some other method or means or instrumentality by which a great many of the pending cases could be disposed of without taking the time of a district judge, I think it would be well to employ such means; but I have no doubt that the committee gave that suggestion consideration and probably were not able to work out any scheme of that sort. I had hoped that we could do something of that kind; but, Mr. President, if we are going to provide additional judges for the various districts covered by the bill, it seems to me, upon the showing presented by my colleague, as compared with many of the other districts of the country and as shown by the testimony of the judges themselves, there can be no question as to the need of an additional judge for the western district of the State of Washington.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I simply want to say to the Senator from Washington that I did not want to interrupt him, but I have the highest regard for Judge Rudkin. I regard him as one of the ablest district judges in the country, and for that reason I think western Washington ought to use him.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I am sure that every reflecting Member must subscribe to the very eloquent and pertinent remarks of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] in his address in opening the debate upon this bill, in the nature of a reproach to the Government of the United States for not having provided adequate courts before which litigants might with reasonable celerity be heard with respect to any controversies in which they might be engaged.

Mr. President, I take it that the first and perhaps the prime duty of any government is to provide means by which controversies can be adjudicated; in other words, to provide courts before which litigants can be heard. When organized society demanded of the individual member thereof that he surrender up his bludgeon or his gun, with which he would otherwise defend his rights and redress his wrongs, it very necessarily provided him at the same time with some tribunal before which he could go and have his causes adjudicated and appeal to the community to enforce his rights, instead of taking the law into his own hands. So that, Mr. President, any government which does not provide its citizens and others who may desire to resort to them with courts in which controversies may be tried invites a return to the primitive methods which are destructive of human society.

Mr. President, the bill before us contemplates the appointment of some 20 new Federal judges. It is inconceivable that the necessity for 20 new judges should have arisen all at once. Of course, this has been a growth, a development. At some time in the past, in the regular, orderly development and growth of our country, the necessity for an additional judge arose in some district, and thereafter the necessity for an additional judge in some other district arose, or possibly the necessity for 2 or 3 additional judges arose, and after a time a necessity for possibly 7 or 8 additional judges arose, and for 9 or 10, and eventually, if the necessity arises, for the 20 or thereabouts provided for by this bill. So that, Mr. President, either this bill is, as charged by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], an offensive pork-barrel bill, or else it spells reproach to the Government of the United States for not having seasonably provided for additional judges of the Federal courts as the necessity arose.

Mr. President, I do not subscribe to the accusation that this is a pork-barrel bill. I believe that the judges provided for by the bill as reported by the committee are needed in order that reasonable dispatch may occur in the disposition of the Federal business.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. POMERENE. Is it not true that this need for additional judges has been very largely increased by reason of new Federal legislation which we have had within the last 5 or 10 years?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. There is something to that, Mr. President. Of course, the Federal legislation continues to increase; but a general opinion prevails that the necessity for these judges arises very largely from the enactment of the Volstead law and other prohibition measures. I think the hearings before the committee disclose that while that legislation has swelled the volume of business in the Federal courts it has by no means been the determining factor which public opinion assigns to it.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I did not ask the question in a contentious way.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Oh, I understand.

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator has referred to the constant increase, which is true. Even if there had been no additional legislation there would have been an increase in the necessity for additional judges, due to the natural increase in the business of the country.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator is quite right. The two elements are combined. There is first a continual increase in population and, more than that, an increase in business, and, more than that, an increase in the complexities which attend business, giving rise to controversies which find their way into the Federal court on the one hand and Federal legislation entering new fields upon the other hand. All of these causes have contributed to the growth of business, but we can not escape from the conclusion either that this bill at the present time is entirely unjustifiable or else that Congress in the past has been recreant in its duty in the matter of providing additional judges. That is the fact about the matter. It might as well be admitted.

During the entire eight years of the Democratic administration, during the period of the enactment of many of the additional Federal statutes to which the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] has referred, during the period when the war in Europe brought about an enormous increase in business in the Federal courts, during the period of the war while we were engaged in it, when that volume was swelled, there was just one additional Federal judgeship created—a Federal judge for the district of New Jersey.

Mr. POMERENE. One in eight years?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. One in eight years, to which I shall refer. That was not by any means the only bill which passed the Senate, however.

For instance, a bill to provide an additional judge in the State of Montana passed the Senate of the United States three times and went over to the House. Other bills passed the Senate in very considerable number and went over to the House. I have taken very little part in the political discussions which have arisen over the dismissal of members of the force of civil servants of the Government, but I feel entirely warranted in commenting upon the introduction of politics into the creation of additional judgeships. Half a dozen different bills for that purpose passed the Senate of the United States, went to the other branch of Congress, and were turned down over there or allowed to die, without any bones being made of it; it was openly declared and expressed in the corridors and in the committees that Republican Members over there did not intend to allow any more Democratic judges to be appointed; so that when the bill to which I have referred, to create an additional judgeship for the State of Montana, having passed the Senate twice, went to the House of Representatives it was, upon the objection of Mr. MANN, of the State of Illinois, stricken from the calendar and defeated in the Sixty-third Congress.

So a bill for the appointment of an additional judge for the State of Tennessee, having passed the Senate on several occasions, went over there, and upon the objection of Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts it was stricken from the calendar, and its passage thus prevented.

Mr. President, I have caused to be prepared a list of the bills for the creation of additional judgeships which passed the Senate and met their death in the House in the manner to which I have adverted.

For instance, in the Sixty-fourth Congress Mr. Lea, of Tennessee, introduced a bill providing for the appointment of an additional judge for the middle and eastern districts of Tennessee. It was reported by Mr. SHIELDS, and passed the Senate January 29, 1917. It was referred to the House Committee on the Judiciary February 9, 1917, and no action taken by the House.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Mississippi, introduced a bill providing for the appointment of an additional judge for the northern and southern districts of Mississippi, which was reported by Mr. SHIELDS February 12, 1917, and passed the Senate on the same date. It was reported in the House by Mr. CARAWAY February 21, 1917, and no action taken in the House.

Mr. President, without taking the time of the Senate to read this table, I ask leave to print in the RECORD as a part of my remarks this table which I have prepared, showing in detail the proceedings had with reference to these various judgeship bills.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STERLING in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

BILLS PROVIDING FOR THE APPOINTMENT OF ADDITIONAL JUDGES.

[Sixty-fourth Congress.]

S. 378. Mr. Lea, of Tennessee: Providing for the appointment of an additional judge for the middle and eastern district of Tennessee. Reported by Mr. SHIELDS and passed the Senate January 29, 1917. Referred to the House Committee on the Judiciary February 9, 1917. No action taken by the House.

S. 457. Mr. WILLIAMS, of Mississippi: Providing for the appointment of an additional judge for the northern and southern districts of Mississippi. Reported by Senator SHIELDS February 12, 1917, and passed the Senate on the same date. Reported in the House by Mr. CARAWAY February 21, 1917. No action taken in the House.

S. 789. Mr. WALSH, of Montana: Providing for an additional judge for the district of Montana. Reported by Mr. WALSH June 29, 1916, and passed the Senate July 27, 1916. Reported favorably in the House January 17, 1917, but when taken up for action was objected to by Mr. MANN, and stricken from the calendar.

S. 1809. Mr. Hughes, of New Jersey: To create an additional judge in New Jersey. Reported by Mr. FLETCHER February 8, 1916, and passed the Senate February 9, 1916. Reported favorably February 26 in the House; passed and was approved by the President April 11, 1916.

S. 2512. Mr. Goff, of West Virginia: Providing for an appointment of an additional judge for the southern district of West Virginia. Reported favorably on July 31, 1916, and passed the Senate January 25, 1917. Referred to the Committee on the Judiciary of the House January 26, 1917. No action taken thereon.

[Sixty-fifth Congress.]

S. 70. Mr. WALSH, of Montana: Providing for an additional judge for the district of Montana. Reported by Mr. WALSH May 21, 1917, and passed the Senate September 11, 1917. Referred to the Committee on the Judiciary of the House September 13, 1917. Reported favorably May 21, 1918. No further action taken thereon.

S. 714. Mr. ASHURST, of Arizona: Providing for the appointment of an additional judge for the district of Arizona.

S. 714. Conference reported to the Senate by Mr. ASHURST February 4, 1918, and passed the Senate February 5, 1918. Referred to the House committee on the Judiciary February 7, 1918. Reported by Mr. CARAWAY July 2, 1918. No further action taken thereon.

S. 746. Mr. WILLIAMS, of Mississippi: Providing for the appointment of an additional judge in the northern and southern districts of Mississippi. Reported by Mr. NELSON July 9, 1917. Passed the Senate September 11, 1917. Referred to the Committee on the Judiciary of the House September 13, 1917. Reported favorably June 7, 1918, by Mr. CARAWAY. No further action taken.

S. 1735. Mr. FLETCHER, of Florida: To create an additional judge in the southern district of Florida. Reported favorably February 4, 1918, by Mr. FLETCHER, and passed the Senate February 6, 1918. Referred to the House Committee on the Judiciary February 8, 1918. No further action taken thereon.

S. 1836. Mr. SHIELDS, of Tennessee: Providing for the appointment of an additional judge in the middle district of Tennessee. Reported to the Senate favorably May 29, 1917. Passed the Senate September 12, 1917. Referred to the Committee on the Judiciary of the House September 13, 1917. On July 5, 1918, action blocked in the House by Mr. WALSH, of Massachusetts, on objection, and the bill was stricken from the calendar.

S. 2654. Mr. Lewis, of Illinois: Providing for the appointment of two additional judges for the district of Illinois. Reported in the Senate May 20, 1918, by Mr. OVERMAN, and passed the Senate May 21, 1918. Referred to the House Committee on the Judiciary May 29, 1918. No further action taken thereon.

S. 2777. Mr. Hollis, of New Hampshire: Providing for the appointment of an additional circuit judge in the first New Hampshire district. Reported by Mr. FLETCHER September 11, 1917. Passed the Senate on the same day. Referred to the Committee on the Judiciary of the House September 13, 1917. No further action taken thereon.

S. 3217. Mr. OVERMAN, of North Carolina: Providing for the appointment of an additional judge for the western district of North Carolina.

S. 3217. Conference reported favorably by Mr. OVERMAN February 20, 1918. Passed the Senate May 16, 1918. Referred to the House Committee on the Judiciary May 29, 1918. No action taken in the House.

S. 202. Mr. WALSH, of Montana: Providing for an additional judge in the district of Montana. Reported by Mr. WALSH June 11, 1919. Passed the Senate June 30, 1919. Referred to the Committee on the Judiciary of the House July 1, 1919. No action taken thereon.

S. 282. Mr. ASHURST, of Arizona: Providing for an additional judge for the district of Arizona. Reported by Mr. ASHURST June 30, 1919. Passed the Senate June 30, 1919. Referred to the House Judiciary Committee July 8, 1919. No action taken thereon.

S. 661. Mr. SHIELDS, of Tennessee: Providing for the appointment of an additional judge for the middle judicial district of Tennessee. Reported favorably by Mr. SHIELDS June 23, 1919. Passed the Senate June 30, 1919. Referred to the House Judiciary Committee July 1, 1919. No action taken in the House.

S. 1358. Mr. Phelan, of California: Providing for the appointment of an additional judge for the northern district of California. Reported favorably by Mr. OVERMAN June 30, 1919. Passed the Senate June 30, 1919. Referred to the House Judiciary Committee July 8, 1919. No action taken in the House.

[Sixty-seventh Congress.]

S. 395. Mr. ASHURST, of Arizona: Providing for the appointment of an additional judge for the district of Arizona. Reported favorably by Mr. ASHURST April 19, 1921. Passed the Senate May 2, 1921. Reported favorably in the House June 21, 1921.

S. 694. Mr. ELKINS, of West Virginia: Providing for the appointment of an additional district judge for the State of West Virginia. Reported favorably by Mr. ERNST April 29, 1921. Passed the Senate April 30, 1921, and reported favorably in the House May 2, 1921, and passed the House June 21, 1921. Approved by the President June 27, 1921.

S. 1254. Mr. TOWNSEND, of Michigan: Providing for the appointment of an additional district judge for the eastern district of Michigan. Reported favorably by Mr. NELSON May 31, 1921. Passed the Senate June 17, 1921. Reported favorably in the House June 23, 1921.

S. 1288. Mr. WADSWORTH, of New York: Providing for the appointment of an additional judge for the southern district of New York. Reported by Mr. NELSON May 27, 1921. Passed the Senate June 17, 1921, and reported favorably in the House July 23, 1921.

S. 1960. Mr. SHORTRIDGE, of California: Providing for the appointment of an additional judge for the northern district of California. Reported favorably by Mr. SHORTRIDGE July 20, 1921. Passed the Senate August 11, 1921. Referred to the Committee on the Judiciary of the House August 12, 1921.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I regret to say that this is not the only instance in which these judgeships have been made the football of politics.

A few days ago we were called upon, in the Committee on the Judiciary, to act on the nominations of three judges for the Territory of Hawaii. There was submitted for the consideration of the committee in connection with these nominations a file, including a memorandum prepared by the Assistant Attorney General, Mr. Rush Holland, for the information and guidance of his principal, the Attorney General. It bears date March 16, 1922, and reads as follows:

MEMORANDUM FOR THE ATTORNEY GENERAL.

Hon. Robert Shingle, Republican national committeeman for the Territory of Hawaii, has recommended the appointment of Emil C. Peters, of Honolulu, to be chief justice of the Supreme Court of the Territory of Hawaii, vice James L. Coke, term expired. He also recommends Antonio M. Perry, of Honolulu, to be associate justice of the Supreme Court of the Territory of Hawaii, vice Samuel B. Kemp, term expired.

In addition to the recommendation of Mr. Shingle—

Bear in mind Mr. Shingle being the Republican national committeeman for the Territory of Hawaii—

the above-named gentlemen are recommended by the Republican central committee and by the bar association of the islands. This matter has been carefully gone into, and both Mr. Perry and Mr. Peters appear to be eminently qualified for the positions for which they are recommended, and their selection meets the approval of the large majority of the bar association and of the leading Republicans of the islands.

Then follows this paragraph:

There is at present no Delegate from the islands. Prince Kalanianaole recently died and the election of his successor has not yet taken place. It is believed that if these nominations are made now that such action will materially aid the Republican candidate for Delegate. I recommend that the appointments be made.

Respectfully,

HOLLAND,
Assistant Attorney General.

That is to say, Mr. President, the judgeships in the Territory of Hawaii are being handled in order to promote the election of a Republican Delegate from that jurisdiction.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

Mr. WALSH of Montana. If the Senator will pardon me, it appears that the judgment of the Attorney General was not at fault, because in the recent election the Republican candidate was elected, the result doubtless being contributed to by this fine stroke thus made in presenting these nominations at this critical time. I now yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. POINDEXTER. It is my understanding that the Delegate has been elected, Mr. Alexander Baldwin, of the island of Maui.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I so understand.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I understood the Senator to say that the election had not taken place.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That is what the letter says. It reads:

It is believed that if these nominations are made now that such action will materially aid the Republican candidate for Delegate.

Mr. POINDEXTER. He has already been elected, I am informed.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. He had not been elected at the time this letter was written. If he had been, the Attorney General was misinformed, or perhaps delayed his recommendation a little too long.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I did not hear the first part of the letter.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. This was under date of March 16. The election took place a day or two ago, I understand.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I do not know the exact date, but I have seen the announcement of the election.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That is what I said, that the appointments of these judges at that time in all probability contributed to the result. At least, the result followed.

Mr. President, whenever Federal judgeships become the football of politics, and legislation for the creation of additional judgeships is either promoted or defeated upon political considerations, and appointments are made to these high and important positions as they will either contribute to or defeat the hopes of political candidates, the day for the adoption of the policy advocated by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], the abolition of all Federal judgeships, is at hand, as it should be at hand.

Mr. KING. May I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield.

Mr. KING. Was the Senator discussing a letter of some person in the Attorney General's office relative to judges? I was called from the Chamber for a few minutes and I did not hear all that the Senator was reading.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I was referring to a memorandum prepared by the Assistant Attorney General, Mr. Holland, for the information of his chief, the Attorney General, advising him that if certain nominations for judgeships in the Territory of Hawaii were then made the matter would be helpful to the Republican candidate for Delegate.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator know whether Mr. Holland is still Assistant Attorney General?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. No; I am unable to advise the Senator.

Mr. KING. If he is, it seems to me that his action deserves attention. Every lawyer as well as every thoughtful person recognizes the importance of maintaining the highest possible judicial standard. The judiciary should be above and outside of politics, and the selection of judges, whether State or Federal, should be made having in view only the ability, the learning, the integrity, and the high moral character of those chosen.

It is particularly important that the Federal judges should be men of the highest character and of experience and legal attainments. If their selection is to be employed to aid any political party, that is, in my judgment, not only a grave wrong but an assault upon our Government. It is highly improper to appoint judges because their selection might promote the interest of any political party or aid in any particular election. In the selection of Federal judges the responsibility in the first instance rests upon the Attorney General to make suitable recommendations to the President. This is a heavy and a most serious responsibility. The character of the judiciary is thus largely dependent upon the conduct of the Attorney General and those of his official family who are concerned in making recommendations. They can not afford to recommend improper men, nor can they afford to time their recommendations with reference to any partisan election, or aid in the selection of individuals for judicial positions because of the benefits which such selections may give to their political party.

I respectfully submit that the Assistant Attorney General committed a grievous mistake, to put it in the most charitable light, when he advised that if certain nominations for judicial positions were made in Hawaii, such action would be helpful to the Republican Party in the forthcoming election for a Territorial Delegate.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to inquire whether the nomination was made before the election.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The nomination was made before the election.

Mr. NORRIS. In accordance with that recommendation the nomination was made?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The nomination came to the Committee on the Judiciary with this letter before the time when the papers announced the result of the election in Hawaii.

I suggest to the Senator that, although it is obvious that the Attorney General himself was apprised of the situation, it does not appear at all of record.

Mr. NORRIS. Of course it does not appear on the face of the record that the Attorney General personally saw that letter. I should think the presumption would be, perhaps, that he did.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. NORRIS. But it is not a conclusive presumption. I do not know what their system is. There may be some one in the office under the Attorney General who passes on all these recommendations, and the Attorney General does not do it himself. I agree with the Senator from Utah, however, that that kind of a proceeding should not take place at any time, under any party. While it may be that in this case they secured excellent men—I am saying nothing about that—and may in other cases secure such men, the system is wrong. Everybody must admit that, it seems to me, who wants to place the judiciary on the high pedestal where it properly belongs.

Mr. KING. I am very glad the Senator has expressed those views. I think they do credit to his sense of justice and to his splendid citizenship.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah would not, I know, make any such strictures as he has just made in regard to Assistant Attorney General Holland, and would not propose any such drastic punishment upon him as he has suggested, until the Assistant Attorney General had been heard and given an opportunity to state what connection he had with this matter. In other words, it seems to me that to use such strong language against a man of the standing and character of Assistant Attorney General Holland, upon a mere partisan assertion, growing out of a political controversy, without any opportunity to hear what he has to say about it, is doing him quite an injustice.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator from Montana further yield?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield.

Mr. KING. I think that if Mr. Holland—that, I understand, is the name given by the Senator from Montana—or if any other Assistant Attorney General recommends to his chief, the Attorney General—upon whom the responsibility rests for recommending to the President persons for judicial positions—and he assigns as the reason for prompt action in securing their appointment that it will be helpful to any political party in an election soon to be held, he fails to appreciate his position and the full significance of his act.

I can not believe that Mr. Holland realized how improper his recommendation or statement was. I do not want to believe that the Attorney General's office is to be a political and partisan machine shop.

We are appropriating large sums to this department to enforce the law and to the end that justice may be done in the land. The enforcement of the law is not a partisan matter. If the Attorney General's office is to be run to aid the Republican Party in elections, it is important that the people know it; and if judges are to be selected because their elevation to high position would aid the Republican Party in an election, that fact should be known to the people.

I hope that this is a mere indiscretion and does not indicate any purpose upon the part of the Attorney General's office or any of its officials to prostitute their positions for partisan and political purposes.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I am inclined to believe that the presumption which has been indulged in here that the Attorney General saw that letter may not be well grounded. While we are indulging in presumptions, may I suggest the presumption that the Attorney General did not see it. The Attorney General is a very astute politician, and if he had seen the letter it is rather reasonable to presume that he would have seen to it that it did not get to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator may be right about that. As heretofore stated, I do not assent to the charge made that this is a pork barrel bill, but I do assert that it is a log rolling bill and a vicious form of legislation. I can find no justification whatever for the other branch of Congress absolutely refusing to pass the single bills we have presented to them from time to time and then passing what might be regarded as an omnibus bill. The temptation to get into a bill of this kind a provision for the appointment of judges in places where they should not be appointed, in order to secure the number of votes necessary to pass the bill, is too great to be resisted. It should not pass without protest.

But, Mr. President, while I feel that way about it, I can not feel that I ought to vote against this bill, provided the judgeships for which it provides ought to be created for the transaction of the public business, and I believe that that subject was given the most careful consideration by the Judiciary Committee, and for myself, I voted against the provision to give two additional judges to the State of Massachusetts and against one or two others, but the contrary view was supported by good, strong arguments, and I can not feel that I ought to vote against the bill because there are one or two or possibly three provisions with respect to which I entertain some doubt.

The vicious tendency of legislation of this character must be recognized by everyone, and it ought not to pass without just criticism. On the other hand, Mr. President, I feel some apprehension that as the matter is going in the Senate, it may be loaded down with so many provisions for additional judges in other sections of the country as to make it the duty even of those who are generally favorable to the bill to vote against it.

I voted against the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] for an additional judge in that State, first, because New Jersey was the only State which got an additional judge during the eight years of the Wilson administration. That is to say, the situation in New Jersey was taken care of in 1916. Only five years ago they got an additional judge in New Jersey. I can not believe that the business of the United States courts has grown so rapidly in the State of New Jersey as that, having secured an additional judge in 1916, they ought to have another judge only six years later, and more particularly because it appears that the able delegation from the State of New Jersey was not sufficiently influential to get recognition for that State in the bill when it came from the House, and more particularly because neither Senator from the State of New Jersey was sufficiently impressed with the necessity for an additional judge for that State to induce him to go before the Committee on the Judiciary and represent the condition in his State and ask for an amendment in that regard. So I feel that the bill is weighted down to some extent by the amendment which was adopted by the Senate for the appointment of an additional judge in the State of New Jersey. I dislike to differ with my friend, the senior Senator from New Jersey, upon that matter, but I can not agree that the amendment ought to have been adopted.

Now, let me discuss briefly the situation of my esteemed friend, the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER]. It is admitted by the committee, and the committee recognized fully that there is an enormous amount of business in the southern district of the State of Florida, and if there were no other considerations, the representation made by the Senator from Florida would certainly entitle him to the highest consideration from the Senate in connection with his amendment. But the fact about that matter is that they had a very objectionable judge down in the northern district of Florida some years ago and various acts of Congress were passed taking away a multitude of counties belonging to the northern district of the State of Florida and adding them to the southern district, so territorially, as well as in amount of business, the southern district of Florida greatly outranks the northern district, and the amount of business to be transacted in the northern district is inconsequential.

The committee believed, as I believed, that the judge of the northern district of Florida being called to the assistance of the judge in the southern district, Florida is amply taken care of by the two judges.

In the same way I dislike to differ with my esteemed friend from the State of Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER], but I can not escape the conviction suggested, as entertained by the chairman of the committee, the venerable Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], that in view of the fact that Judge Rudkin will now be somewhat relieved there is no need for an additional judge. I am able to subscribe to every encomium upon Judge Rudkin, because I have had the honor of trying lawsuits before him. I believe that the two judges they now have in the western district of Washington ought easily to take care of the business of that State. Judge Rudkin has been called very frequently to the State of California in the past to help out in that State, but we are making provision for additional judges in the State of California, giving them an additional judge in the northern district and another judge in the southern district, and it is hoped that there will not be such demands from that State for Judge Rudkin in the future.

Now, Mr. President, I wish to say a word or two with respect to sections 2 and 3 of the bill, section 2 providing for what is known as the conference and section 3 for the assignment of judges to districts other than their own.

I am not able to concur in the view expressed nor am I able to share the apprehensions that have been excited with respect to the effect of section 3. Section 3 provides for the utilization of judges of the district court in districts other than their own and provides that the senior circuit judge of the circuit may assign a district judge to some district in the circuit other than his home district if the business in his district will permit him to go to some other district.

In that respect, bear in mind, there is no change whatever in the law. The law now permits the senior circuit judge to require the district judge to go from his home district to another district in the same circuit. Thus far, however, the law now goes no further, except with respect to the second circuit, embracing the southern district of New York. There the Chief Justice of the United States may call a judge from any district and send him to the southern district of New York on account of the extraordinary condition there. But, generally speaking, under the existing law that is the extent of the power of transferring judges from one district to another, namely, that they can not be sent, unless they go voluntarily, beyond the circuit in which they reside.

But the pending bill goes one step further and is intended to permit the utilization of district judges in circuits other than the circuit in which the districts lie. The fear is expressed with respect to that provision of the bill that private interests or particularly associations or combinations organized for the purpose of propaganda or otherwise will be able to shuffle judges of the district court around from one place in the country to the other in order to subserve their purposes; and about the cloakrooms, at least, it is suggested that the Anti-Saloon League, finding some judge in some district to be perhaps lenient toward those who offend against the prohibition laws, will be able to transfer a judge from a remote section of the country who harbors different views upon that subject and thus displace the local judge in the administration of the law.

I find that that is perfectly fanciful. It does not seem to me to be possible at all. In the first place, a judge will not be permitted to leave his district unless the senior circuit judge of the circuit certifies that he may do so without detriment to the business of his own district. He will not be called to serve in another circuit unless the circuit judge of the circuit to which he goes asserts, over his official hand, that he needs another judge in some particular district in his circuit and that he is unable to fill the need from any of the judges in his own circuit. Under those circumstances the Chief Justice of the United States, having before him the certificate of the senior circuit judge of the circuit embracing the district desiring another district judge and having likewise a certificate from the circuit judge of the circuit in which resides the district judge to be transferred, the Chief Justice of the United States then makes the order that he shall go.

In order that anybody can control the situation, in the first place he must control the senior circuit judge of the circuit from which the district judge goes, he must next control the senior circuit judge of the circuit embracing the district to which the judge goes, and he must control the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. NORRIS in the chair). Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield.

Mr. POMERENE. If I may make a suggestion, under the bill as I construe it, assuming that a new judge was needed in a given district, they can only make application, or application could be made for a judge, but they would not designate the particular judge, and I dare say neither the circuit judge nor the Chief Justice of the United States would send a particular judge if one were asked for.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. As to that I do not know, but the operation would be about this way. We will assume that in the northern district of Ohio there is an accumulation of work and an additional district judge is needed. We will assume, and we must assume, that no other district judge can be found in the sixth circuit, and the senior circuit judge of the sixth circuit certifies to the Chief Justice of the United States that another judge is needed for the dispatch of business in the northern district of Ohio and that he has in his circuit no judge whom he can send there. He certifies thus to the Chief Justice of the United States.

One of the judges, we will say, in the State of Montana is not overwhelmed with work, and the Chief Justice thinks that he would be an available man to send to Ohio. Then a certificate must be secured from the senior circuit judge of the ninth judicial circuit to the effect that this district judge in the State of Montana can leave the State without detriment to the public business, and thereupon the Chief Justice may direct him to go to the State of Ohio. In other words, we have to have that combination some way or other of these three eminent judges before the conspiracy can be accomplished.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President——

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I call the attention of the Senator from Montana to line 22, page 13, subdivision (c):

In aid of a district judge when the public interests so require.

Then, in subsection 2 of section 14, we find that—

Such designation may be made by the senior circuit judge (who may designate himself) whenever he is satisfied that the occasion therefor exists and that the public interests so require.

Subsection 3 of section 15, on page 15, includes the District of Columbia in this system.

Then, beginning at line 12, on page 15, we find section 16 providing as follows:

(1) The designation provided for by sections 13, 14, and 15—

Those are the sections I have already mentioned—shall be in writing, signed by the judge or justice designating, and shall specify the district aided, the judge designated, and the period of service.

(2) It shall be filed in the clerk's office and entered in the minutes of the district court of the aided district; and when so filed and entered shall be conclusive evidence of all the facts necessary to support it.

I call the Senator's attention to the fact that a circuit judge, dissatisfied with the manner in which a district judge is conducting the business, may arbitrarily go into that district and oust that district judge from his duties and from his office, and that all the circuit judge says in defense of himself, when properly filed, is conclusive evidence that he stated the truth about it and that it contains all the evidence necessary to support his order.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I do not like to get into anything in the nature of a controversy with my esteemed friend from Georgia [Mr. WATSON], but, perhaps, a few words may be necessary in order to make this matter clear to those who desire to have a clear idea of it. The Senator has invited attention to section 13 of the bill now before us. Section 13 of the bill before us provides for the assignment of judges to sit in a district other than their own within the circuit—" within the circuit," it will be borne in mind.

Let me call the attention of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] to the fact that there is a misprint in line 14, on page 13, where the language should be " in another district of the same circuit."

Mr. SHIELDS. An amendment has been made to correct that.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from Montana means that the word should be " of " instead of " or " ?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes.

Mr. CUMMINS. As stated by the Senator from Tennessee, that mistake has already been corrected by an amendment.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Very well. Then section 13 reads:

A district judge for a district may be designated to act in another district of the same circuit (including territory attached thereto)—

" Of the same circuit," the Senator from Georgia will understand.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Then follow subdivisions (a) and (b). The Senator from Georgia has called attention to subdivision (c), which reads:

(c) In aid of a district judge when the public interests so require.

(2) Such designation shall be made by the senior circuit judge whenever he is satisfied that condition (a), (b), or (c) exists and that the designation can be carried out without such prejudice to the regular work of the designated judge as to make it inadvisable.

In the first place, there is no power in anyone to displace a judge; he continues in his work without any interruption whatever; another judge is sent to his district, and the two judges endeavor to dispatch the business of the district.

The Senator from Georgia will bear with me if I call his attention to the fact that that is substantially the law as it now is, as he will find by referring to sections 13, 14, 15, 16, and 17 of the code of civil procedure.

Mr. NELSON. I will call the Senator's attention to the last part of section 14 of the Judicial Code.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes. The last part of section 14 of the Judicial Code provides:

Each of the said district judges may, in case of such appointment, hold separately at the same time a district court in such district, and discharge all the judicial duties of the district judge therein.

So that one judge does not displace the other at all in the transaction of business. Of course, when a judge is sent to another district by the authority provided by the law, whether a certificate is required or is not required, all question as to whether the conditions required by the statute to exist do in fact exist is, as a matter of course, foreclosed. No one can inquire into that.

Section 15 of the bill provides for the designation of a district judge to sit in another circuit. I ask the attention of the Senator from Georgia to that. The section reads:

SEC. 15. (1) A district judge of a district (called herein the home district) may be designated to act in any district of another circuit or its attached territory (called herein the aided district) in place of or in aid of a judge thereof, in case—

(a) The senior circuit judge of the aided district shall certify to the Chief Justice of the United States that the public interests require the designation of an additional judge or judges in such district and that it is impracticable to supply the need from among the judges of his circuit; and

(b) The senior circuit judge of the circuit of the home district shall certify to the Chief Justice of the United States that neither the business of that district nor of other districts in that circuit will suffer by the proposed designation.

(2) Such designation may be made by the Chief Justice, if, in his judgment, the public interests so require.

The Senator from Georgia also read section 16, which is as follows:

SEC. 16. (1) The designation provided for by sections 13, 14, and 15 shall be in writing, signed by the judge or justice designating, and shall specify the district aided, the judge designated, and the period of service.

And that, the bill very properly provides, shall be conclusive; and it would be conclusive if the bill did not so provide, because, in the event of a judge coming from one district to sit in another district and actually sitting in that district and trying cases, the situation would be intolerable, it would be impossible, if anybody, dehors the record, by parol evidence, could show that the facts did not exist which authorized that judge to sit in the trial of cases there. The designation that he go there is not a part of the record in any case. The validity of a judgment would in no wise depend upon the question as to whether the facts warranted his designation to fill the place.

The governor of a State may often, as is provided by law, designate the judge of one district to go to another district to hold court; he is permitted to do so whenever the business of the district in which the judge goes is such as to require an additional judge and the business of the district from which the judge comes will not suffer by reason of the fact; but the governor having issued his order that the judge go, no one can inquire into the question as to whether or not the conditions provided in the statute existed. So, while it is formally provided in the bill that the certificate will be conclusive, it would be conclusive under the established rules of law in any case. So much for that.

But, Mr. President, I can not give my assent to section 2 of this bill; and I very respectfully suggest to the distinguished Senator in charge of the bill that he take into very serious consideration whether or not that provision ought not to be eliminated from the bill. I have no doubt that its existence imperils the passage of this very much needed measure, and I submit that there is no justification for it. I fully agree with the statement made by the Senator from Nebraska that it means absolutely nothing on earth except a junket and a dinner. If the annual conference in Washington with the Chief Justice shall be held, the senior circuit judge of each of the nine circuits in the country, all estimable gentlemen, will come here; the Chief Justice will give them a dinner and the Representatives from their various States will give them a dinner; they will have a good time and then will go home. There is not any business, so far as I can see, which they can transact; there is no information which they can give which, to my mind, can not as well be conveyed by a letter written by the judges annually to the Chief Justice for his guidance and information in the discharge of the duties which he is to perform.

Of course, the number of judges who will be taken from their own circuits and transferred to districts in remote sections of the country will be comparatively few. They will be brought from all over the country, wherever they are available, to sit in the city of New York and possibly in one or two other congested sections; they may be brought, perhaps, from some adjacent circuit to sit in the city of Chicago, which is not far distant from the boundary between two different circuits; but, generally speaking, that provision of the bill will not impose upon the Chief Justice any particular arduous labor; and, to my mind, it involves an expense, trifling, it is true, when we consider the expenses of the Federal Government, but nevertheless an expense which need not be incurred and which, I think, has no justification whatever in view of the condition of things confronting us. I trust that the bill will not be loaded down with provisions for the creation of judgeships in addition to those recommended by the committee and that this rather obnoxious feature of the measure will be eliminated.

It must be said, Mr. President, that a discussion upon the floor with respect to the merits of a claim for an additional judge in any particular district is not particularly enlightening. It is necessary to consider not only the situation in that particular district but a comparison ought to be made between that district and other districts which may possibly be similarly situated. Accordingly, in these cases where the matter has not been submitted to the committee, or, where, having been submitted to the committee, its action was founded upon due consideration, I think the determination of the committee ought to be very cautiously disturbed.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, before the Senator takes his seat I call his attention to subdivision c, on page 13, to which he and I have both referred, which reads:

In aid of a district judge when the public interests so require.

I call the attention of the Senator to the fact that no provision is made there for the submission of testimony to show that the necessity has arisen and that the public interest does require the designation, whereas the existing law requires the certificate of the clerk under the seal of the court. Under subdivision c, apparently, a circuit judge, arbitrarily, upon his own motion, without any evidence at all, merely because he might be dissatisfied with the manner in which the district judge was conducting the business of his court, could exercise arbitrary power over the district judge.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. It does not give him any power over the district judge at all other than to send another judge to the district, but not to displace the sitting judge at all.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. If another judge were sent there unnecessarily, it seems to me it would be virtually——

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The extra judge would divide the work with the sitting judge no doubt, but he would not displace him at all.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. No; I did not mean to be understood as saying that it would take his office away from him.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. No; and it does not interfere with his work at all; the two judges would simply divide the work.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. If another judge were sent into a district to do the work, the situation might become so humiliating and so mortifying to the sitting district judge, being a man of self-respect, that he would resign. If that condition should arise, there would be some intimidation, and, therefore, an interference with the independence of the judiciary.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Of course, I do not know how sensitive the judges may be, but if the circuit judge finds that two judges are needed in a district I do not see why the sitting district judge should feel in any sense humiliated about the matter.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. But the existing law requires that there shall be some testimony upon which the circuit judge shall act, and that is the certificate of the clerk under seal, whereas in this bill it is left arbitrarily to the circuit judge.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The difference between the present law and the proposed law is that under the present law the clerk of the court furnishes evidence whether the public interest requires another judge to go there or not, while under the proposed law the senior circuit judge of the circuit determines whether the public interest requires the assignment of an additional judge.

CENTRALIZATION OF POWER IN THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I ask leave to have inserted in the RECORD an article from the St. Louis Post-Dispatch of March 19, 1922, dealing with the question of the centralization of power in the Federal Government, a very worthy and very able article.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, Sunday, March 19, 1922.]

APPEAL TO GOVERNORS TO HALT MARCH TOWARD FEDERAL EMPIRE.

(The Post-Dispatch addresses this open letter to the governors of the States of the Union in the earnest hope that they will rally their people and their State legislatures to halt the destructive processes that are transferring all of the powers of local self-government to remote and irresponsible bureaus in Washington and that portend inevitable disaster to the most promising experiment in free government ever before attempted by man.)

Serious as are the great problems of disarmament and peace for the world in general, there is yet another confronting the people of the United States, one peculiarly their own, this is far more vital to their safety and happiness.

It is the advance of our General Government toward the usurpation of all powers, local and national, and the transformation of our system from a limited representative Federal Union to an unlimited bureaucratic empire.

No student of history, acquainted with the anxiety of the framers of our Federal Constitution to circumvent this very danger, can view the rapid destruction of all the barriers they erected without a sense of the deepest alarm.

Those who framed our dual political system had carefully studied the rise and fall of States from the earliest period of recorded history. In Persia, Babylon, Egypt, Carthage, Greece, Rome, and in all the transitions up to their own times, they observed that human liberty was destroyed and nations brought to ruin through the possession and abuse of unrestrained power by Governments; and that the final decay actually set in at the apparent zenith of their greatness, when all cares and all authority had been centered in a single body or group.

Knowing the experience of the ages to contain this lesson they sought deliberately to apply it for the perpetuity of the Government they were about to form and for the preservation of liberty under it. In the Constitution they formulated, therefore, they proposed a Federal Government for definite and specific purposes only, enumerating in writing the objects within its competency. The Constitution delegated to the Federal Government a minimum of power to permit the achievement of these essential ends.

The framers, knowing the sentiment of their respective 13 sovereign States, then loosely united in the Articles of Confederation, realized that no general government would be assented to save for the most necessary purposes of collective representation. They were convinced, too, that if the great expanse of country had not already been divided into States, the States divided into counties, the counties into townships, this must be done so that each might do for itself, locally and directly, what it could do so much more effectively than a distant authority.

Still fearful lest even the limited grant of powers to the Federal Government would find its way into the hands of a single person or group, and mindful of the experience of our English ancestors under the Stuarts and Tudors, and of their own under George III, they invented the device of three distinct, coordinate, coequal repositories of the limited powers they gave, distributing them according to their character to an executive branch, a judicial branch, and a legislative branch; and they declared that neither should ever exercise any of the powers lodged with the others.

All powers not expressly granted to the Federal Government were declared to be reserved to the States or to the people. This appears in the tenth amendment, adopted in 1791, two years after the Constitution went into force. In spite of its other apparent safeguards most of the States refused to come in until they got that promise. There would have been no Union without it.

If one wishes to study the distribution of powers more minutely he may find them diagramed in Prof. Frederic Jesup Stimson's work on the Constitution. His summing up is pertinent. He says:

"But there are other, more political, rights given to protect the people. Congress must assemble every year; it must have freedom of speech and guaranty against arrest; the House alone can introduce revenue bills. No Army can be maintained for more than two years. No direct taxation from the National Government; no unequal indirect taxation from the National Government. No titles of nobility. Jury trials; indictments; civil rights; the forbidding of all class legislation; the supremacy of the Constitution.

"And, finally, after all these rights have been enumerated, the great ninth amendment says that this enumeration, nevertheless, does not deny or disparage other rights still retained by the people; the final and important thing being that the framers founding this Government consciously and expressly did not intend to give general sovereign powers of conquest or national career."

Can anyone deny that we are already embarked upon a national career, with a Government more powerful and less under the control of the people than any other on earth, save possibly in Japan? Hasn't our Federal Government preached and acted upon the claim that it is now competent to do anything that any other sovereign State may do?

An enumeration of all of the Federal powers and prohibitions delegated and declared in the Constitution and an analysis of their use and abuse in practice would lead us into a field too prolix for present purposes. It is sufficient here to consider how far the Congress and the Federal court have set aside the force of the Bill of Rights, those first 10 amendments that the States insisted upon as guaranties against oppression before they would assent to the Constitution.

No one can read the first 10 amendments without realizing the sense of fear and distrust which the wisest citizens of the 13 States felt in entering into this Union. In the words of the Kentucky resolutions of 1798, they held that "free government is founded in jealousy and not in confidence, which prescribes limited constitutions to bind down those whom we are obliged to trust with power."

Were the sturdy men of that period, who had defied and wrested independence from the mightiest power then on the globe, timid and easily affrighted? Was their insistence upon extensive and written restrictions upon the power to the General Government founded in a sort of panicky fear of tyrants incident to the times, or was it based upon a knowledge that out of centuries of struggle of mankind for liberty there had grown up certain tested principles of human association that give the greatest hope of happiness and freedom?

These questions have their answer in the onerous and increasingly vexatious lot of the American citizen to-day, resulting directly from the setting aside of constitutional restrictions by the Federal Government and its assumption of the rôle of universal intermeddler and regulator of all our concerns.

Take the first amendment. What do Congress and the Supreme Court say of it? First, that it is not an absolute prohibition, which it certainly was intended to be and which its terms plainly indicate. Oh, no! say the Federal courts, Congress may not forbid the publication of the truth with good motives, but it may legislate as to publications of other character; it may exclude the press from the mails. Likewise, say the courts, they can forbid any publication of testimony, for example, of such a nature as "to obstruct and embarrass the court," and they can also punish for contempt, without a jury, any improper publication "tending to obstruct the administration of justice." Such judicial interpretations have seriously weakened this constitutional guaranty and have tempted Congress to consider on a number of recent occasions the subject of general regulation of the press. There is such a bill before Congress to-day.

How far has the Federal Government gone in undermining the guaranty of free speech? During the war this right was very drastically abridged; any criticism of the Government or its manner of conducting hostilities was likely to mean a sojourn in the penitentiary. Perhaps that was justified, however much it seems to imply that war abrogates the Constitution. We have recently had some peace-time legislation, however, aimed at suppressing certain philosophies of government, and men will preach them at their peril. We no longer tolerate error of opinion with an assurance that reason left free to combat it is a sufficient safeguard. Reason must be reinforced by an army of secret agents of the Department of Justice. In the words of a Federal decision in an espionage case, freedom of speech means the prerogative of the citizen "to canvass public measures and the merits of public men." Said another, this guaranty does not imply a right to say what one pleases at all times and in all places. However, there is yet a good deal of the substance of this right left to us if we are careful of expressing our political philosophies.

Neither have we as yet been denied the right to assemble and petition the Government for redress of grievances.

As to the second amendment, while the States still have their respective militia establishments, they have been pretty generally federalized by recent legislation and their distinctive place in the State organization correspondingly weakened.

It must be admitted that the Federal Government stands acquitted of any infringement of the third amendment forbidding the quartering of soldiers in private homes.

There is no right the preservation of which is more vital to liberty than that guaranteed to the citizen in the fourth amendment to be free from search save upon warrant, yet there is none in a more precarious condition among us to-day. It was the violation of this principle by James I that destroyed English liberty, but raised up the great Chief Justice Coke as its champion. When the States procured the adoption of this amendment they believed they had rendered the people secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects; that not even an officer, a magistrate, or a policeman could thereafter ever enter the house of a citizen or search his papers and effects without a formal warrant, duly issued upon probable cause, supported by sworn testimony stating the reason why, the crime charged, the place to be searched, and what they expected to find.

Not a day passes, however, but that Federal agents, in the enforcement of the multitude of Federal laws regulating our local concerns, contemptuously set aside this guaranty. Whether the Federal larceny statute, the Federal statutes on morals, on narcotics, automobile thefts, sedition, or what not, are being vindicated, the raids upon homes and the illegal seizures of papers and property go on. While some courts occasionally denounce this lawlessness on the part of Government officials, they nevertheless hold that evidence thus illegally obtained may be used against the accused. Also, they will admit evidence stolen by a private individual which Government officials could not lawfully obtain without a warrant.

The amendment is a general and unqualified declaration that the people have a right to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects, yet the Supreme Court has struck down half of its value by declaring that it applies to criminal prosecutions only. In civil matters, says this tribunal, the people have no such right. Hence the Federal income tax inquisitor, or any other so-called civil officer, may invade your home or your office without a warrant, demand your books and papers, take transcripts of what he likes, and institute a criminal prosecution against you on the evidence obtained. With the amendment thus half frittered away, is it to be wondered at that it affords the most doubtful protection in criminal prosecutions?

We pass on to the fifth amendment, and particularly to that clause forbidding prosecution for a capital or infamous crime save on a presentment or indictment by a grand jury. An infamous crime is any crime punishable by imprisonment. In the Volstead Act we find a vicious assault upon this guaranty, where the courts are authorized to resort to the subterfuge of imprisoning the accused through the summary process of contempt, without either warrant or indictment.

As to the second prohibition in the fifth amendment against twice putting a person in jeopardy for the same offense, we are told this does not mean what it says with respect to violations of the Volstead Act. Offenders against that law may be punished in both Federal and State courts for the same offense, owing to "concurrent" jurisdiction.

The third prohibition in the fifth amendment, forbidding an accused to be a witness against himself in a criminal case, is flagrantly flouted with the connivance of the courts in the rule that evidence, however illegally obtained from the accused, may be used against him. With such a rule established, why should peace and prosecuting officers worry about search warrants in criminal cases? They rarely do. And the view is justified on the ground that it is more important to obtain a conviction than to preserve a constitutional right.

It is also declared by the courts that the guaranty against being compelled to testify against one's self does not apply to corporations, since they are artificial, not natural, persons, nor does it protect a corporation official from being compelled to disclose incriminating matter concerning his acts.

The fourth proposition in the fifth amendment, that no one shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, involves a discussion of the meaning of the term "due process of law." While no exact definition has ever been given, it is generally declared to mean law in the regular course of administration, according to those rules, principles, and forms established for the protection of private rights. Thus all the provisions of the Constitution and all laws made pursuant thereto constitute due process of law with respect to any matter cognizable under them. This prohibition is designed to keep the acts of Government officers within their lawful limits and to prevent arbitrary conduct.

The most condemnable instance of violation of this guaranty is to be found in an act of Congress permitting the deportation and exclusion of persons from the United States upon the mere say of an immigration official, regardless of whether the person so deported or excluded is an American citizen. Thus a single executive official may inflict the grave punishment of banishment, without the necessity of a jury or a judicial trial, which due process of law requires in all other cases of punishment. And the Supreme Court, in the case of Ju Toy, declared that as for him, due process of law was satisfied by a hearing without counsel before the immigration agent. Ju Toy was a poor Chinaman, but before the Supreme Court dismissed the case a Federal court of California, which heard the evidence of his birth in this country, judicially determined him to be an American citizen. It was of no use; the immigration agent had determined otherwise, and the Supreme Court declared his word beyond review by the courts. Some obnoxious or dangerous white citizen may be next.

In the final proposition the fifth amendment forbidding the taking of private property for public use without compensation, the Federal courts have evolved the vague and reprehensible doctrine that no right of private property can exist in property that may be declared to be subject to the "police power," and especially alcoholic liquors; yet Lincoln recognized the justice of compensation even with respect to depriving the South of their slaves. In spite of the licensing of the liquor business and the imposition of taxes and its storage in Government warehouses, under Government protection from time out of mind, the owners are now told that the fifth amendment is designed to prevent stripping the citizen of only certain kinds of private property, the list of which is constantly diminishing.

Further the courts hold that Government acts "merely impairing" the use of private property are not a "taking" within the prohibition, when the only sound and settled view we have known heretofore was that the right of use was an inseparable concomitant in the right of ownership. Also, the destruction of private property for the public safety, which may mean in the interest of public morals as they are viewed at the time, is not a "taking" of property.

The sixth amendment declares that in all criminal prosecutions the accused shall enjoy the right to a trial by jury. At the very outset the courts denied that this clause limited their power to punish summarily for contempt, without a jury, and in a number of Federal statutes, particularly the Volstead Act, we find Congress stooping to evade this prohibition by a provision permitting Federal courts to punish offenders summarily in this fashion. It is to the credit of the Federal judiciary, however, that they have shown no eager disposition so far to break down this great safeguard against tyranny.

While this prohibition does not describe the kind of accused persons entitled to jury trial, Congress and the Federal courts have decided that it does not apply to aliens whom they wish to deport. And, as has been pointed out, it is equally denied to citizens returning to their country from abroad if the immigration agent decides they are not citizens.

The seventh amendment pertains to jury trials in certain civil actions and the eighth forbids excessive bail or the infliction of cruel and unusual punishments, which call for no comment.

The ninth amendment, declaring that the enumeration of powers given to the Federal Government shall not be construed to deny or disparage those withheld by the people, was designed to reenforce the tenth amendment, which makes a positive reservation to the States, respectively, or to the people, of all powers not delegated to the Federal Government nor prohibited to the States. These great amendments were intended forever to hold the Federal Government in check and to control that natural augmentation of power known to be inherent in all government. Yet the Federal Government had hardly gotten fairly started before this dangerous obiter dicta from the Supreme Court thrilled the centralizers at Washington as it startled and alarmed the survivors of 1787.

"This amendment (the tenth), which was framed for the purpose of quieting the excessive jealousies which had been excited, omits the word 'expressly' and declares only that the powers 'not delegated to the United States nor prohibited to the States are reserved to the States, respectively, or to the people,' thus leaving the question whether the particular power which may become the subject of contest has been delegated to the one or prohibited to the other, to depend on a fair construction of the whole amendment."

Thus, in the omission of this little word "expressly" before "delegated" the Federal Government has been judicially confirmed in the exercise of any powers "appropriate" or "conducive" to the ends warranted by the express powers. It has, in effect, overthrown the barriers guarding the reserved powers, leaving little more than the express prohibitions standing waveringly between the States and an unlimited government at Washington. On this doctrine all of the express grants to the Federal Government, the power to levy certain taxes in a certain way, the power to regulate interstate commerce, and the others, have been used to justify all manner of legislation only remotely related to the subjects themselves. One result has been the creation of a so-called Federal police power more and more controlling the local health, morals, and welfare in the States and ousting the States from their constitutional functions. Thus, from the power to regulate commerce has been deduced a right to regulate slaughterhouses, on the assumption of intended shipment of the meats; the right to regulate liability for injury to employees engaged in interstate commerce; duties and qualifications of employees, hours of service, rates of pay, taxing of passengers, diseases of cattle and plants, education of farmers, and what not.

No one can dispute the wisdom and necessity of Federal control of railways and other means of interstate transportation, including navigation, but it was never intended that the Federal Government should construe its power over interstate commerce in a manner wholly destructive of local self-government.

Every such extension of power has only unsettled some established rule or principle of law, till at length no one knows—not even the lawyers themselves—what rule or exception a court is likely to follow in any given case.

And every new subject gathered into the rapacious arms of the Federal Government means, of course, one more bureau, board, or commission at Washington, with another corps of inspectors and agents sent out over this broad land to do for each community what it can so much better and economically do for itself.

SAFEGUARDS AGAINST ABUSE OF TAXING POWER.

When the Constitution was submitted to conventions in the respective States none of the powers conferred upon the proposed Federal Government aroused greater anxiety than that permitting it to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises, even though direct taxes were required to be levied by the rule of apportionment and indirect taxes laid by the rule of uniformity.

Direct taxes had been the main reliance of the States for their support theretofore, but the assessment, collection, and expenditure of such revenue were in the hands of their immediate representatives and under their immediate control. To give this power even concurrently to a distant government, to be administered by agents in no wise responsible to them, they felt would inevitably result in extravagance and oppression. Patrick Henry told the Virginia convention that it would annihilate the States. George Mason visualized what has come to pass—the Federal taxgatherer in every home, with his warrants of distraint, selling out or jailing those citizens unable to pay. Two thousand of such warrants were recently issued in the St. Louis district alone.

Hamilton sought to allay these fears by pointing out that the power to levy direct taxes only according to apportionment would result in such inequalities that it would never be used except in great emergencies; that the States therefore would rarely be disturbed in their power to levy direct taxes by similar action on the part of the Federal Government. In an address to the New York convention, where the fear of conferring the power of direct taxation raised a formidable opposition, Hamilton said:

"As to internal taxation, in which the difficulty principally rests, it is not probable that any general regulation will originate in the National Legislature. If Congress in times of great danger and distress should be driven to this resource, they will undoubtedly adopt such measures as are most conformable to the laws and customs of each State. They will take up your own codes and consult your own systems. * * * They will appoint the officers of revenue agreeably to the spirit of your particular establishments, or they will make use of your own."

Luther Martin told the Maryland convention that the Federal Government should not have the power to levy direct taxes in any case.

Oliver Ellsworth, in reassuring the Connecticut convention, declared that it was probable "that the principal branch of revenue will be duties on imports. What may be necessary to raise by direct taxation is to be apportioned on the several States, according to the number of their inhabitants; and although Congress may raise the money on their own authority, yet that authority need not be exercised if each State will furnish its quota." He defended the power of direct taxation, however, as necessary to meet such exigencies as war.

In the Massachusetts convention Rufus King said:

"It is a principle of this Constitution that representation and taxation should go hand in hand. * * * By this rule are representation and taxation to be apportioned. And it was adopted because it was the language of all America."

John Adams, Dawes, King, Sedgwick, and others expressed the view of all advocates of the new Constitution that a direct tax would be the last source of revenue resorted to by Congress. Without such assurances it can not be doubted that a majority of the States would have rejected the Constitution and gone on as independent sovereignties.

True to these prophecies, the Federal Government for more than a hundred years considered its power to levy direct taxes one to be used only upon extraordinary occasions. Within that period it was resorted to but three times and justified in each case by an emergency. The first was in 1798, during actual but undeclared war with France; the second in 1812, during war with England; and the third in 1861, during the Civil War. In each instance the laws were repealed when the war ended.

In 1894, however, under the title "An act to reduce taxation," etc., Congress passed an income tax law levying directly a tax of 2 per cent on all gains, profits, and income above a $4,000 exemption. It was promptly challenged as unconstitutional, and considered by the Supreme Court in the case of Pollock v. Farmers' Loan & Trust Co.

Chief Justice Fuller, rendering the opinion of a unanimous court, held the law to be in violation of the Constitution, in that it was not apportioned and void. The words of the Chief Justice are worthy of the most solemn reflection to-day. He says:

"Nothing can be clearer than that what the Constitution intended to guard against was the exercise by the General Government of the power of directly taxing persons and property within any State through a majority made up from the other States. It is true that the effect of requiring direct taxes to be apportioned among the States in proportion to their population is necessarily that the amount of taxes on the individual taxpayer in the State having the taxable subject matter to a larger extent in proportion to its population than another State has would be less than in such other State, but this inequality must be held to have been contemplated, and was manifestly designed to operate to restrain the exercise of the power of direct taxation to extraordinary emergencies, and to prevent an attack upon accumulated property by mere force of numbers.

"It is not doubted that property owners ought to contribute in just measure to the expenses of the Government. As to the States and their municipalities, this is reached largely through direct taxes. As to the Federal Government, it is attained in part through excises and indirect taxes upon luxuries and consumption generally, to which direct taxation may be added to the extent the rule of apportionment allows. And through one mode or the other the entire wealth of the country, real and personal, may be made, as it should be, to contribute to the common defense and general welfare.

"But the acceptance of the rule of apportionment was one of the compromises which made the adoption of the Constitution possible, and secured the creation of that dual form of Government, so elastic and so strong, which has thus far survived in unabated vigor. If by calling a tax indirect when it is essentially direct, the rule of protection could be frittered away one of the great landmarks defining the boundary between the Nation and the States of which it is composed would have disappeared, and with it one of the bulwarks of private rights and private property."

This decision leaves no doubt as to Chief Justice Fuller's personal view of the wisdom of the original limitations imposed upon the power of the Federal Government to levy direct taxes. He boldly described it as "one of the great landmarks defining the boundary between the Nation on one hand and the States on the other." However, in 1913 this great landmark defining the boundary between the Federal Government and the States was obliterated through the regular and constitutional method of amendment proposed by the Federal Congress. In place of the old provision, designed to restrain the Federal Government from sending its tax gatherers into every home and to withhold from a limited General Government unlimited power to raise taxes, this, the sixteenth amendment, was ratified by the States:

"The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes on incomes, from whatever source derived, without apportionment among the several States, and without regard to any census or enumeration."

It has been construed by the Supreme Court to authorize the taxation of all manner of profits and gains, as well as capital assets, under such arbitrary rulings as the Treasury Department may prescribe. The lone exception in the way of income that the Federal Government may not reach is that derived from bonds issued by the States and their political subdivisions. In order that nothing may escape, however, a constitutional amendment is now before Congress permitting Federal taxation in this case. If the States acquiesce in this, only the hollow form of our "indissoluble Union of indestructible States" will remain.

There can be no argument against the justice of direct taxes as such; and an income tax is perhaps the fairest of all forms of taxation in that it distributes the cost of government according to the ability of the citizen to pay. However, these taxes, capable of raising such great sums of revenue, were designedly left with the States because it was their governments that were charged, in the constitutional arrangement, with the vast and manifold problems of internal affairs, while the Federal Government was intended to be a mere representative of the States in external relations. So long, therefore, as the Federal Government confined its activities to the limited duties assigned to it, no extensive revenue was required.

In the face of the most anxious endeavors of the framers of the Constitution and the deepest solicitude on the part of the ratifying conventions to maintain the General Government as a limited one, it is inconceivable that the States could have so readily yielded to it their own, an unlimited taxing power, in 1913. It is in deadly conflict with the fundamentals upon which our Government was built. It reverses the essential underlying policy of all who have gone before us to withhold from the Federal Government the inherent temptations and vice of too much power. Heretofore our actuating principle was to deny the exercise of any power where the dangers from possible abuse outweigh the possible good from its use.

What have been the results during the eight years that have followed? Have they justified the alarm and fears of the framers? One has only to observe the universal presence of the agent of the Federal board, bureau, or commission, now overrunning the States, and daily growing more numerous, obtruding themselves into the affairs of the citizen from the hour of his birth and continuing it to his last breath, when they claim a share of whatever estate remains after their previous exactions. It not only regulates his morals but even prescribes the system of accounting he shall use in the record of his personal affairs.

For 10 years prior to and including 1916 the total annual taxes of the Federal Government averaged about $600,000,000. Of this sum more than a third was raised in a manner almost unobserved as excise upon fermented and distilled liquors. About $75,000,000 was similarly raised by tobacco taxes. The remainder was drawn almost entirely from customs, which likewise were nearly invisible in their incidence. The system accorded perfectly with the constitutional design of imposing Federal taxes, with a view to convenience and the least possible irritation. The Government expenditures averaged but $7 per capita.

In beginning the exercise of the power to levy direct taxes under the sixteenth amendment Congress felt its way. It took only $71,000,000 in 1914; in 1915 it collected $80,000,000 from direct taxes, and in 1916, $124,000,000. The rate was low, the exemption high, and the overwhelming majority who were required to pay nothing thought they had no reason to complain. Still, expenditures of the Federal Government in those years passed the $700,000,000 mark.

The years of 1917, 1918, and perhaps 1919 do not afford a fair comparison, owing to the extraordinary expenses incident to our participation in the Great War, but the Federal Government nevertheless raised by direct taxes in those years approximately $700,000,000 in 1917, $3,500,000,000 in 1918, and over $4,000,000,000 in 1919. It revealed to the Federal Government the apparently almost inexhaustible funds it could raise to defray the costs of an infinitude of new Federal enterprises in times of peace. Hence, in 1920, a year and a half after the close of the war, the Federal Government levied nearly $7,000,000,000 of taxes, or $63 per capita. In 1921, in spite of a nation-wide demand for economy and relief from tax burdens that were sapping the vitals of commerce and industry, the Federal Government held to its schedule and extracted over $5,600,000,000 from taxpayers of the States, amounting to $52 per capita. In this year it shifted to income-tax payers a loss of $250,000,000 of liquor taxes no longer available by reason of the adoption of the prohibition amendment. In 1922, nearly four years after the war, the Federal Government's ordinary appropriations are something over $4,000,000,000, with some additional uncalculated hundreds of millions to be raised by new taxes for a bonus to the soldiers.

Former Senator Thomas, of Colorado, declares there are 250 powerfully organized lobbies now maintaining offices and agents in Washington, whose sole aim is to get their hands into the Federal Treasury, now that direct taxes appear to render its supply unlimited; and that Congress, yielding to political pressure thus wielded, is no longer concerned about the ancient doctrine that public revenue shall be devoted only to public needs and that taxes can be levied only for public purposes.

The unlimited Federal taxing power has recently pushed to a dangerous extent the so-called doctrine of "Federal aid." It was initiated to encourage road building in the States, a subject that Congress is constitutionally competent to deal with. But from that point it is now luring the States more and more into subordinating to some Washington bureau such strictly local functions as health and education. In such cases "Federal aid" is nothing more than Federal taxation for State purposes, in which the States receive back a mere trifle of the sums collected.

It is the natural process for all governments, even limited ones, to gain ground at the expense of civil liberty. But if to this inherent quality is added a limitless purse, as was done by the legislatures of our States in 1913, it can cause no surprise if the Government thus endowed becomes a political profligate.

Consciously and unconsciously the people of the United States have sensed this tremendous transformation in their institutions. Never before have they manifested less affection or respect for the Constitution and laws, because never before did that Constitution and those laws afford them less protection in their lives, liberty, and property; never before have they been more deeply irritated and vexed, because never before has a distant government thrust its regulating agents into the manifold activities of their daily lives since 1775.

VAST EXPANSION OF REVENUES AND BUREAUS.

Before our great experiment in self-government was launched history presented the picture of governments in all times involved in the changing tragedy of oppression, rebellion, and reformation in an endless cycle. The framers of our written Constitution felt that they had provided effectually against the need of resort to violence for the correction of our Government, however, in the amendment clause through which the people could from time to time, by peaceful means, add to or take from the Federal Government such power or powers as their safety and happiness seemed to require.

We find the situation to-day, however, to be that the powers declared in the instrument to have been reserved to the people, to be delegated or not in their wisdom, have been largely absorbed by the Federal Government through the subtle processes of legislative construction and judicial interpretation. Through the doctrine that Congress may enact any law "appropriate," "convenient," or "conducive" to the ends of its enumerated powers, nearly the whole realm of power has been gathered into its hands.

We have awakened to the realization that there has grown up over us an almost unlimited Government, to which we have recently given an unlimited purse. The form of dual government remains; the substance has disappeared. We are headed in the same direction that every other unlimited government has taken, and, if we submit, the time may not be far distant when the Federal Government will actually deny the right of the people of the States to limit its power in any respect. Then our only recourse will be rebellion and reformation.

It is useless to reaffirm the written guaranties and limitations; they would only continue to be broken through. But there is a means by which the States can check the present race toward empire and resume the rightful discharge of the obligations of local self-government, and that is:

By repealing the power of the Federal Government to command unlimited revenue, save in time of war.

We have ample evidence that it is the exercise of this power that is drawing all authority to Washington, where it can not be exercised efficiently, economically, or safely.

In an address before the bar association in St. Louis February 13, 1921, James W. Beck, the Solicitor General of the United States, pointed to the taxing power, even before the adoption of the sixteenth amendment, as one that had been perverted with the acquiescence of the Supreme Court. He cited the oleomargarine case as exemplifying an instance in which Congress, by imposing a prohibitive excise, had utterly and intentionally destroyed a perfectly legitimate business, with no remedy whatever for the injured parties, in view of the Federal court's refusal to look into the motives and purposes of Congress.

If Congress may thus without judicial restraint levy an indirect tax for the purpose of destroying a particular business or class of property, to what lengths of oppression may it not now go with an unrestrained power to tax directly? Mr. Beck frankly declared the power to tax directly rendered Congress almost omnipotent.

If eight years of unlimited taxing power in the hands of the Federal Government have wrought such a transformation in the situation of the citizen it is appalling to contemplate the revolution that 20 years would bring.

Citizens of Missouri paid $86,000,000 to the Federal Government in 1921. The sums paid by other States range from $718,136 collected in Nevada to $814,000,000 paid by New York. An exceedingly large proportion of this money is not being applied to the necessary Federal functions or to objects constitutionally within the purview of the Federal powers. The greater part of the revenue properly belongs to the States, and they themselves should raise it by their own income taxes for expenditure under their own supervision.

Let a constitutional amendment be drawn declaring in substance:

"The Congress of the United States shall have no power to lay and collect direct taxes, save in time of actual war."

But, it may be objected, we have a war debt of $24,000,000,000, less $11,000,000,000 representing the allied debt; how can proper provision be made to meet the principal and interest of this? It must be considered. It may be met by quotas from the States, as Oliver Ellsworth suggested. The amendment might even permit the levying of direct taxes for the sole additional purpose of retiring the debt of the United States incurred in the prosecution of war. To permit the levying of direct taxes to meet any debt, however, would open the door to borrowing to meet current expenses and constitute little more than a substitute for direct taxes.

There are ample sources of revenue for the most generous peace-time support of the Federal Government through indirect taxes. Customs will easily yield $300,000,000; tobacco taxes, $150,000,000; the Federal estate tax brought in $154,000,000 in 1921; while it has been estimated that an excise on beer alone would yield $400,000,000. This does not by any means exhaust the list.

The United States of America became a numerous, rich, and contented Nation between 1789 and 1913, when the taxing power of the Federal Government was qualified as suggested by the proposed amendment. Our Government was frugal from necessity. Its invasion of the field of reserved powers, while extensive during this period, was the less dangerous because the absence of an unlimited purse restrained practical ventures based upon them.

There are two alternative modes by which the Constitution may be amended, set forth in Article V, as follows:

"The Congress, whenever two-thirds of both Houses shall deem it necessary, shall propose amendments to the Constitution, or, on the application of the legislatures of two-thirds of the several States, shall call a convention for proposing amendments, which in either case shall be valid to all intents and purposes as part of this Constitution when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States or by conventions in three-fourths thereof, as the one or the other mode of ratification may be proposed by the Congress."

As no government since the beginning of time ever voluntarily surrendered power back to the people it is, of course, too much to expect that Congress could be induced to initiate an amendment that would compel economy by restricting its taxing power and restore to the States the exclusive right to raise and expend their own millions by direct taxes; hence, if any such amendment is possible, it must be undertaken by the States themselves through an application of two-thirds of their legislatures to Congress for the calling of a national convention.

ORGANIZED GOVERNORS SHOULD CHECK ENCROACHMENTS.

The governors of the States of the Union are organized, and have been since 1908, in a continuing body known as the governors' conference. Its affairs are managed by an executive committee of three governors, chosen annually. The present committee consists of Gov. William C. Sproul, of Pennsylvania; Gov. J. B. A. Robertson, of Oklahoma; and Gov. Henry J. Allen, of Kansas. There is a permanent secretariat at Madison, Wis., under the direction of Mr. Miles C. Riley as executive secretary.

That the governors of the States are not blind to the present alarming conditions is evidenced in the reports of their annual meetings. At the meeting at Harrisburg, Pa., in 1920, three governors (Robert D. Carey, of Wyoming; R. A. Cooper, of South Carolina; and Percival W. Clement, of Vermont) delivered urgent addresses upon the need of decentralization of Federal activities.

The following excerpt from Governor Carey's address reveals the outrageous waste and inefficiency growing out of actual contests among Washington bureaus to dominate Wyoming:

"If one desires to study the operations of these Federal bureaus and agencies in all their glory, he should visit the Jacksons Hole country, which lies just south of the Yellowstone National Park. Most of this section is in forest and game preserves, and here we have the best game country in the United States. The Bureau of Parks is endeavoring to add a large part of it to the Yellowstone National Park which the Biological Survey wants it for a game preserve. The Forestry Service is not in favor of park extension, for the reason that it would transfer control from the Agricultural to the Interior Department. The Reclamation Service has a large reservoir at Jacksons Lake which is irrigating lands in Idaho, and on account of the large volume of water that is run during the irrigation season the river is impassable and there are no bridges. The land along the river is being constantly washed away and damaged, but the owners have no redress. There are two Carey Act projects which the General Land Office will neither approve nor disapprove. Practically all lands for homesteading are withdrawn from entry and the development of the country is at a standstill. Numerous writers from the East have been imported into this section to write propaganda to assist the different Washington bureaus to get control of this section. Everyone has a press agent except the man who is trying to live in this country and to establish a home."

With such intimate knowledge on the part of the governors of the evils accompanying the rapid march toward Federal empire and confusion, the Post-Dispatch appeals to them to arrest it.

It urges them as the sentinels, guarding the safety of the people of their respective States, to seize the opportunity now to restore the vigor of that dual system of government in which the States were conceived to be the only safe custodians of domestic affairs.

It urges them, in the light of this narrative, to call their conference into special session, to formulate a definite program of action, and to press it upon their respective legislatures in concert, to the end that the most hopeful experiment in self-government ever attempted by a great people shall not end in failure and despair.

PROPHECIES OF THE FRAMERS OF THE FEDERAL CONSTITUTION.

In seeking to allay a general fear in the States that the Federal Government might usurp all power and become an unlimited and oppressive one, Hamilton, Madison, and Jay concerted in a number of papers, now compiled as the Federalist, to reassure the members of the State conventions to which the Constitution was submitted. The following are excerpts:

"The objectors do not advert to the natural strength and resources of State governments, which will ever give them an important superiority over the General Government. If we compare the nature of their different powers as the means of popular influence which each possesses, we shall find the advantage entirely on the side of the States. This consideration, important as it is, seems to have been little attended to. The aggregate number of representatives throughout the States may be 2,000. Their personal influence will, therefore, be proportionately more extensive than that of one or two hundred men in Congress.

"The State establishments of civil and military officers of every description, infinitely surpassing in numbers any possible corresponding establishments in the General Government, will create such an extent and complication of attachments as will ever secure the predilection and support of the people. Whenever, therefore, Congress shall meditate any infringement of the State constitutions, the great body of the people will naturally take part with their domestic representatives.

"Can the General Government withstand such a united opposition? Will the people suffer themselves to be stripped of their privileges? Will they suffer their legislatures to be reduced to a shadow and a name? The idea is shocking to common sense." (Alexander Hamilton.)

"The powers delegated by the proposed Constitution to the Federal Government are few and defined. Those which are to remain in State governments are numerous and indefinite. The former will be exercised principally on external objects, as war, peace, negotiation, and foreign commerce, with which last the power of taxation will for the most part be connected. The powers reserved to the several States will extend to all the objects which in the ordinary course of affairs concern the lives, liberty, and property of the people, and the internal order, improvement, and prosperity of the State." (James Madison.)

"But ambitious encroachments of the Federal Government on the authority of the State governments would not excite the opposition of a single State or of a few States only; they would be signals of general alarm. Every Government would espouse the common cause. A correspondence would be opened. Plans of resistance would be concerted. One spirit would animate and conduct the whole. The same combination, in short, would result from an apprehension of the Federal as was produced by the dread of a foreign yoke, and unless the projected innovations should be voluntarily renounced the same appeal to a trial of force would be made in the one case as was made in the other." (James Madison.)

FEDERAL REVENUE WHICH STATES SHOULD HAVE FOR LOCAL USE.

Following are the direct taxes levied in States by the Federal Government in 1921 in the form of income taxes, to which the States themselves are historically entitled as the product of their own income taxes for expenditure by their own representatives for improvements within their own borders:

Alabama	$14,222,196	Nevada	$718,136
Arizona	279,821	New Hampshire	8,304,563

MICHIGAN SENATORIAL ELECTION.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, in view of the fact that the statement has been persistently made that I did not oppose the seating of Senator NEWBERRY until after the contest was over, I desire to say that when the Newberry case was lodged with the Committee on Privileges and Elections in January, 1919, as a member of the committee I assisted in passing the resolutions which resulted in the preservation of the evidence and which forced a thorough investigation. I took an active part in the proceedings up to the time the question was taken from the general committee by reference to a subcommittee.

When the subcommittee reported, I opposed the seating of NEWBERRY in a speech made on December 21, 1921, which is reported in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of that date.

On January 11, 1922, understanding that the Newberry vote would occur on the following day, I journeyed from Boston for the purpose of throwing whatever strength I had against the seating of NEWBERRY. And on that day and before the vote I made my second speech, to which I invite the attention of all who care to read it.

The third and last speech was made after the resolution seating NEWBERRY had been passed. It could not have been well made before, for I sought to demonstrate that by adopting the resolution seating NEWBERRY those who had voted for it had written their own condemnation.

ADDITIONAL DISTRICT JUDGES.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9103) for the appointment of additional district judges for certain courts of the United States, to provide for annual conferences of certain judges of United States courts, to authorize the designation, assignment, and appointment of judges outside their districts, and for other purposes.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I thought that I was opposed to this kind of legislation on principle. It seems to me to be a bad principle to follow; and I think it brings the judiciary into disrepute, and certainly subjects it to great criticism.

My relations with the bench have been long and pleasant, but I am not much surprised that we have landed where we are now. I have thought for years that some of the judges did not impose sufficient fines on the lawless element to deter them from violating the law, especially since the prohibition law has been passed. It is absurd to put the Government to the expense of maintaining the courts, and all the machinery of the courts, and officers to risk their lives in arresting criminals, and then have them come before a judge who is not in sympathy with the law, and who imposes a farcical sentence.

I have some matters here which I have gathered from editorials, which I will read as a part of my remarks.

Here is an editorial from the Montgomery Journal. I have left out, intentionally, the names of the judges:

RESPONSIBILITY OF JUDGES FOR LAW ENFORCEMENT.

Judge ———, of the United States district court, but recently called to preside in an emergency session of the Federal court in that city, in an interview published in the local newspapers is quoted as making a severe arraignment of the national prohibition law. He declared the law "the most unpopular ever enacted," and then proceeded to give the version of the liquor and brewery interests as set forth in their propaganda to discredit the law and make difficult its enforcement.

"The amendment," he said, "was adopted under the general belief that war emergencies demanded the conservation of grain and other materials used in making whisky. It was not generally understood that prohibition would be permanent.

"Congress went to greater extremes when it passed the Volstead Act than public sentiment approved. Consequently the law is observed more in the breach than in the performance.

"Prohibition, in fact, will only come by education in the schools of the destructive use of intoxicants. The law would be more respected if its provisions were less drastic. No harm could have come from the domestic use of light wines and beer with limited alcoholic content."

Here is a judge upon the Federal bench who, while professing to desire law enforcement, actually decrying or inveighing the national prohibition law, declaring it too drastic to be enforced, and favoring the domestic use of light wines and beer, both of which are inhibited by the Constitution to which he has sworn allegiance.

The question arises, Is a judge who entertains views prejudicial to any law qualified to sit as presiding judge in cases involving the enforcement of that law?

Is not it a recognized principle of law that a judge who has prejudged a case, or biased either for or against the accused in his court, is disqualified to try such accused person?

Did not the Supreme Court of the United States, the highest judicial tribunal in America, if not in the world, only a few days ago reverse a decision rendered in a court where the presiding judge is alleged to have been biased, had prejudged the case?

If Judge ——— finds it difficult to enforce the national prohibition law, is he not, and all like him who indirectly express sympathy with the accused, largely to blame? Do they put the guilty in prison, as the law authorizes and contemplates, or do they put the minimum fine, which is regarded as a mere license to continue at the old stand?

Would any law be respected—even that providing for the punishment of the highwayman, the murderer, the violator of the pure food law—if judges upon the bench permitted themselves to publicly proclaim against such laws as being too drastic, and giving aid and encouragement to the violators by contenting themselves in assessing small fines instead of imprisonment, as provided by law?

As a matter of fact, with so many judges throughout the country like Judge ———, who assume such an attitude of unfriendliness to the Constitution of his country, and indirectly if not directly, expressing sympathy for the violators of law, fail of their duty in giving the extreme penalties of the law—not only fines but imprisonment—are not those judges who thus fail of their duty largely responsible for the conditions about which they complain and effect to deplore?

The way to stop crime is to punish the criminal. The criminal can not be punished without the judges, as well as executive officers and juries, doing their duty.

Mr. President, I am not a fanatic about the Volstead law or any other law; but it seems to me that when a judge takes an oath to uphold the law it is his duty to do so without criticizing Congress.

I also read an editorial from the Daily Oklahoman of January 27, 1921. It says:

JUDGE ———'S OUTBREAK.

It is surprising that any judge, especially a Federal judge, would be guilty of such an outbreak as that of United States district judge ——— ———, Tuesday. An attack on existing laws such as that made by him would come with better grace from a ward politician than it does from a jurist whose sworn duty is to uphold the laws.

"Repeal of the eighteenth amendment and other prohibition measures is necessary absolutely, or we will face a revolution that may destroy all the cherished institutions of the country," said Judge ———.

"Men can not continue to obey prohibitory laws and retain their liberty and contentment of mind.

"Many people believe that such a thing as a revolution in America is impossible, but I want to say that it can come just as quickly and just as terrifying in our country as in Russia. Repressive laws will bring it about.

"These thousands (who formerly imbibed at saloons and clubs) vigorously resent the law that makes them criminals because they drink and as a result of being forced into drinking beverages manufactured from weird formulas, they are led into crimes that are worthy of the penitentiary."

In the first place, it can not be granted that the presentation of facts as given by Judge ——— is a fair or accurate one.

There is no evidence to support his statement that a revolution will result if the eighteenth amendment and other prohibition measures are not repealed.

It is not true that "men can not continue to obey prohibition laws and retain their liberty and contentment of mind." The great majority of men are just as prosperous, if not more so, and just as happy and contented, if not more so, than when the liquor traffic was legalized.

It is ridiculous to declare, as Judge ——— does, that thousands "are being forced into drinking beverages manufactured from weird formulas." Who is forcing them? These men are drinking vile bootleg stuff of their own free will. Judge ——— does not admit this, nor does he take the trouble to point out that there are hundreds of thousands of men who formerly drank liquor but who do not do so now and whose health and bank accounts are far better as a result.

Not only is Judge ———'s statement deplorable because of its inaccuracy and unfairness, but also because it will have an effect of encouraging men to violate the law.

It is the duty of judges to interpret and enforce the laws. They do untold harm when they make declarations like that of Judge ———, which is bound to create a great disrespect and contempt for the law.

It is not difficult to realize the delight with which moonshiners, bootleggers, and other violators of the prohibition laws will read Judge ———'s denunciation of the eighteenth amendment and supporting measures. Nor is it stretching one's credulity to believe that these criminals may say to each other: "The judge is with us," and that they will break the law more frequently than before.

Mr. President, as I said before, I am not a fanatic about the enforcement of any law; but all laws ought to be either enforced or repealed. I feel that the farce of a judge imposing a little bit of a sentence, and the defendant going practically free, tends to increase crime. It tends to multiply that kind of cases, and hence it tends to create business in the courts, and therefore that has had a great deal to do with bringing about the necessity for more judges, if necessity exists. I have been disgusted to read in the papers where a fine of perhaps $25 was imposed on these highwaymen-bootleggers. They go around and manufacture this stuff, and are prepared to take life in selling it. In my county some time ago one of the best policemen who ever lived was shot dead by one of them; so there is no encouragement for officers to risk their lives in trying to enforce the law unless the judges are going to enforce it.

I realize that judges are appointed for life, and some of them perhaps feel a little above any authority. I think the time has come when the Attorney General ought to look into the enforcement of the law, and, if necessary, take such steps as may be required to do it.

As I said, I thought I was opposed to this bill at the beginning, and I think so yet. I think it would be much better to have passed a bill providing special judges at particular places, if they were necessary; but, to my mind, a great deal of the pending litigation, or litigation that has been pending recently or that will arise in the near future, is the result of the war, and will not remain permanently; and therefore now, when the time of economy is at hand, if the judges would work a little bit harder they would get rid of these cases, and perhaps save the people a good deal of expense. However, it seems that I am greatly in the minority, so much so that I concluded that I would join the procession and offer an amendment for one additional judge in South Carolina.

I was surprised at these figures when I looked over them. I find, briefly, that in Massachusetts—they speak of criminal cases, I believe, as the star cases—in Massachusetts they are going to be given two new judges, and in one district there they have 186 cases, I believe, and in another one 244, or something like that.

In Pennsylvania, in the eastern district, they have 342 cases, and this bill gives them another judge. In the western district they have 450 cases, and they are given another judge.

Down here in South Carolina, in the western district, where I happen to live and where we have only one judge, there are 416 cases, so we are more lawless than I thought; so certainly, under the schedule we have fixed, there is no question in the world that we are entitled to another one, and I rather think we are entitled to two. I will not be hoggish, however, and I will ask for only one piece of the "pie" that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] speaks of, and just ask them to give me one judge.

In the other district we have 316 cases. In the western district, though, where I live, a little nearer the mountains, where they make a little brew, there are 416 cases; so, clearly, under this plan we will have to have one. Otherwise, Senators will not be consistent, and I hope they will not treat me that way.

In Texas, in the western district, the bill gives them another judge, though they have only 279 cases. They are not entitled to one nearly as much as we are.

In Michigan, in the eastern district, the bill gives them another judge, though they have only 378 cases, and they are not entitled to one nearly as much as we are.

In Missouri you had already given them one additional judge in a district where there were only 257 cases; and after listening to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] the other day, you gave the other district, with only 170 cases, another judge. According to that, we ought to have about three more in South Carolina; but I am not going to be expensive in these hard times, and I am just sending up an amendment which I will offer, and I hope it will be unanimously agreed to.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, a point of order. There is an amendment pending, is there not?

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is.

Mr. KELLOGG obtained the floor.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a moment?

Mr. KELLOGG. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I do not see the Senator from Georgia [Mr. WATSON] here; but the particular section to which I desire to invite his attention, showing no change in the present law as to judges appointed to serve within their circuits, is section 17 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which reads as follows:

It shall be the duty of the senior circuit judge then present in the circuit, whenever in his judgment the public interest so requires, to designate and appoint, in the manner and with the powers provided in section 14, the district judge of any judicial district within his circuit to hold a district court in the place or in aid of any other district judge within the same circuit.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I desire to say a few words upon sections 2 and 3 of this bill.

I shall vote for the bill, but I shall not take the time of the Senate to discuss the necessity of additional judges. I should have preferred the original bill introduced by my colleague from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], providing for two judges in each circuit, but, as the committee has seen fit to adopt this plan, I shall vote for the bill as it is.

I am heartily in favor of sections 2 and 3, and quite agree with the reasons given, as I understood them, by the Senator from Montana for those provisions. As the Senator said, so far as assigning judges within a circuit is concerned, the law has not been changed. That can be done now by the senior circuit judge. I think experience has shown that the provision of law as it now exists, and the provision of law extending that to the second circuit, demonstrate not only the workability but the advisability of such a provision.

It is impossible to adopt a judicial system with judges in each district in the country, with varying amounts of business, and have all of the judges busy within their districts all of the time. Take the eighth circuit, the largest circuit in the United States, comprising, I believe, 13 States, extending from the Mississippi River to the Rocky Mountains, and south to Oklahoma and New Mexico, including the latter States. It has been found of very great value that the law provided—in fact, I doubt if the business of the circuit could have been done by the judges had not the law so provided—that the district judges might be assigned to other districts than those in which they reside and for which they were appointed.

I notice in the RECORD that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] was very much opposed to this assignment of judges to other districts than those in which they reside. He said:

That bill provided for roaming judges—

Referring, I suppose, to the original bill.

it provided that a judge from North Carolina might be sent to try cases in Oregon, although the North Carolina judge does not know anything about the laws in Oregon or the conditions in Oregon or the methods of life there.

Mr. President, there is not much more difference between Oregon and North Carolina—although it is not likely that a judge will be sent from North Carolina to Oregon—than there is between Oklahoma and Minnesota. The two States are a little farther apart, but the Senator forgets that the questions usually passed on by circuit and district judges are not particularly local, and that the practice, so far as equity is concerned, is uniform in all the circuits and in all the districts. I doubt very much if, in the assignment of judges heretofore, that has been an objection in any degree whatever. In fact, I think the judges who have been sent to the State of New York, the second circuit, which I believe is the only circuit to which they may be assigned at this time, have been very satisfactory, and the practice has been approved by the bar and the judges. There is no more difficulty in sending a judge from the seventh to the eighth circuit or from the eighth to the ninth circuit than there is in sending a judge from one State to another within the same circuit, especially one as large as the eighth circuit.

This is a system designed to obtain the disposition of the maximum amount of business by the same number of judges, because it is inevitable that some of the judges will not have work enough in their districts. Take the State of Minnesota, for instance. For years the judge in North Dakota has not had enough to do, and he has been assigned a great deal of the time in aiding in the large business of the State of Minnesota. So with South Dakota and many other districts.

I do not see any reason why that system should not be applied to the circuits as well as to the districts within the same circuit. I was at the bar for nearly 40 years in my State and had some experience in the circuit and district courts over the entire circuit and in other circuits, and I have never heard any objection raised to the assignment of judges within the circuit to help out judges overburdened with work.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let me read just a paragraph from a letter of one of the wisest and ablest judges of this country.

Mr. KELLOGG. I have no objection to the Senator reading it.

Mr. OVERMAN. This judge said:

I think the power conferred upon anyone, no matter how great, wise, or patriotic, to send judges into our States and districts, unknown to our people, unfamiliar with our ways, standards of life, manners, conditions, etc., would be exceedingly unwise and dangerous—would tend to bring the Federal judiciary into antagonism to the people, weaken the confidence in their administration of justice, and result in other unfortunate and unhappy conditions.

Mr. KELLOGG. All I can say is that the judge who wrote that letter has probably overlooked the fact that assignments can now be made within the same circuit. The judges may be sent from one State to another, and it has worked well. I have never before heard any complaint of it anywhere in the United States. Certainly it has enabled judges in the different circuits to transact the business more expeditiously than it was possible to do in any other way.

Mr. CUMMINS. May I interrupt just long enough to repeat what the Senator from Minnesota said a moment ago—that a district judge can now be sent from Minnesota to Utah—and certainly there is as much difference between the habits and customs of the people in those two communities as in any two districts.

Mr. OVERMAN. I know what the law is; but I am speaking of the policy and the principle.

Mr. KELLOGG. The principle has worked well within the circuits.

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not know whether it has or not.

Mr. KELLOGG. I have had some experience along that line, and I am sure it has. I do not see any reason why that same principle should not be applied in sending a judge from one circuit to another. Of course, naturally, judges will not be sent to the same extent from one circuit to another that they have been from one district to another inside of the circuit; but it was found necessary to do it in New York, and judges have been found who could spare the time to go to New York to help out in the great accumulation of business in the second circuit.

I notice objection has been made to section 2, which provides for a conference of the senior circuit judge of each circuit with the Chief Justice of the United States in Washington once a year. The provision in relation to the duties of this conference is as follows:

Said conference shall make a comprehensive survey of the conditions of business in the courts of the United States and prepare plans and schedules for the assignment and transfer of judges to or from circuits or districts where the state of the docket or the condition of business indicates the need therefor, and shall submit such suggestions to the various courts as may seem in the interest of uniformity and expedition of business.

I do not see any objection to that. As the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] said, in order to assign a judge from one circuit to another, there must be the certificate of the presiding justice of the circuit from which the judge is taken, the certificate or request from the presiding circuit justice of the circuit to which the judge is to be assigned, and the order of the Chief Justice assigning him. Heretofore there has not been the necessity for section 2 as there will be under this bill, because there has been only one circuit under the law to which judges outside of the circuit could be assigned, and that was the second circuit; but if the judicial force of the United States is to be made most effective and transact the most business, the Chief Justice and the presiding justice of each circuit must be informed as to the necessities of judicial aid in the various districts and circuits of the United States, and if the Chief Justice can, by having a meeting with the circuit judges, review the business, obtain the statistics of the Department of Justice, and see what the necessities in each district and circuit are, so that he may be informed when he is requested to make an assignment from one circuit to another, it seems to me it will be very helpful and very useful.

Why should that not be done? If the Chief Justice is appealed to to make an assignment to-day from the eighth circuit or the seventh circuit to the second circuit, he has to inquire as to the state of business in New York, in the second circuit, he has to inquire as to the state of business in the seventh or eighth circuit, from which the judge is to be taken, and as to the state of business in the particular district, and if he has that information before him in a general way he can act very much more intelligently.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, the Senator seems to have overlooked the provisions of the bill. There was very broad power given the Chief Justice as to making the assignments, but the bill has been amended, and that part has been stricken out. Under the present provision, as construed by the Senator from Montana, the Chief Justice can only designate a judge to a district named by the judge of the circuit, and can only designate a judge from another circuit upon the certificate of the circuit judge of that circuit that he can spare him, so all the information the Chief Justice requires is these two certificates from one circuit that he is needed and from the other circuit that this particular judge can be spared from that circuit. Therefore, why does he want a conference of all the senior circuit judges of the United States?

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I had already stated that fact, but presumably if the Chief Justice is going to make the assignment he ought to have some knowledge of the subject.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Let me make an inquiry. Of course, these conditions change. At this annual conference, how can the situation be met? The year being half over, there is an accumulation of business in a district, and a judge sends word to the senior circuit judge, "I can not do the work here. I am overwhelmed. Give me another judge." The senior circuit judge says, "I have not a judge in my circuit I can send to you, but I will send to the Chief Justice to see what I can do." The Chief Justice surveys the field and thinks he can find a judge somewhere else, in some other circuit, and he communicates with the senior circuit judge there, and that judge says he can let the judge requested go. How at this annual conference can this necessity for a judge somewhere during the course of the year be anticipated? What can they do which would not be met as the situation arises?

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, the business in each district does not radically change in a month or two. If the Senator will take the statistics year after year, he will find that the business in one district, unless its disposition is affected by the illness of the judge, or his inability to attend to his duties, does not suddenly double or treble, or suddenly fall off to 25 per cent. I do not see why the Chief Justice should not be informed from year to year of the general trend of the business in the districts, and by consultation with the senior circuit judge of each circuit annually he may keep informed as to the conditions of the business not only in the various circuits but in the various districts. I can see no harm in the provision, and it seems to me a very wise one.

Mr. CUMMINS. May I make a suggestion at this point?

Mr. KELLOGG. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from Georgia inquired a few moments ago of the Senator from Montana as to the propriety of leaving the selection of judges to be assigned within circuits entirely within the discretion of the circuit judge. The very information which the senior circuit judge should have in order to make designations within his own circuit is contained in secton 2, which the Senator from Montana seeks to strike out. It provides, on page 11:

It shall be the duty of the senior district judge of each district court of the United States to make, on or before the 1st day of August of each year, a report to the senior circuit judge as to the condition of the business in his district and a recommendation as to what additional judicial force, if any, is needed to dispose of the business of such district with reasonable dispatch. It shall not be sufficient for him merely to state in his report the cases as shown upon the docket of the court, but, after investigation, he shall express his best judgment as to the condition of business existing or likely to arise in his court during the ensuing year.

It is made the duty of the senior circuit judge, under the bill, to bring this report of the district judge to the conference, so that not only has the senior circuit judge in that way all the information he possibly can have with regard to affairs in his own circuit, but he acquaints all the remaining circuit judges of the conditions in his circuit, so that there can be an intelligent distribution of the judicial force.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. KELLOGG. I yield.

Mr. SPENCER. I appreciate the force of what the Senator from Montana has just said about the inability of any conference of the circuit judges with any particular intelligence to forecast the business of the coming year. I see the force of that, but to my mind one of the great advantages of such a conference is the getting together of the judicial machinery of the United States in conference with the Chief Justice and the Attorney General regarding the judicial business of the next year, as well as of the present year.

The Senator from Montana knows better than I that the judicial business of the United States is largely administrative. There is a business side to it as well as the law side. There are practices in the different circuits which are commendable. There are some that could be improved. Both are remedied by conference. It seems to me there is very great advantage when the circuit judges of the different circuits of the States get together once a year to discuss the method of transacting business, the state of their dockets, the things that have proved advantageous, the things that have proved disadvantageous. The resultant of it all is a distinct benefit to the administration of justice, and that is precisely what the conference provides for.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, will the Senator from Minnesota yield to me for a remark?

Mr. KELLOGG. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I was not unmindful of the provision to which reference has now been made by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS]. I was looking for it and was of the impression that the particular provision was found in a later portion of the bill. It is one highly to be commended, in my judgment. It is a very wise provision. I should like to see it retained. I was proceeding in my discussion upon the assumption that it would be retained.

But the report having been made by each district judge concerning the condition of his business and the report having been made by the senior circuit judge of the circuit, we have a complete review of the business, and that being laid before the Chief Justice he will be in a situation very easily to determine where to look for a judge whenever he is appealed to. The provision, it seems to me, dispenses entirely with the necessity for the conference.

Mr. KELLOGG. I do not think so. I think the provision as to conference will be a wise one and will be just. We must also remember that the Supreme Court of the United States make the rules of practice in the Federal courts, and that by the rules which were adopted a few years ago the practice has been very much simplified. I do not claim that those rules are perfect and have no doubt that the Chief Justice, in his conferences with the judges of the circuit court of appeals, may find some time other amendments and other improvements that may be made in the practice in order to expedite the business of the courts in the various circuits of the United States. The more information he can get the better for the bench and for the people.

I do not share the feeling expressed by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] that it is unwise for a judge from one district to go into another district because he is unfamiliar with local law. As a matter of fact I take it there are few, if any, district judges in the United States who are not competent to sit in any court in the United States in any State or any district and administer the law. I believe that it is advantageous for a judge to hold court in other districts than that in which he resides and is not at all detrimental to the litigants. Certainly we are never going to get the maximum business transacted unless that is done, because many district judges will not have enough business to do, while others will be overburdened. I am very much in favor of section 2 and section 3 of the bill.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES] yesterday made objection to that feature of the pending bill which proposes an additional district judge for the district of Arizona, and inasmuch as no debate will be permitted after 4 o'clock it is incumbent upon me to state some pertinent facts.

COMPARATIVE AREAS.

The area of the State of Arizona, comprising the district of Arizona, is equal approximately to the combined areas of Connecticut, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, Vermont, Maine, and New York. The figures which bear out this statement are shown in the following table:

	Area in square miles.
Arizona	113,956
Connecticut	4,965
Massachusetts	8,266
New Hampshire	9,341
Vermont	9,564
Maine	33,040
New York	49,204
Area in square miles	114,380

Business transacted in the United States courts for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1920.

[From annual report of the Attorney General, 1920.]

ARIZONA.

1. Cases pending at close of June 30, 1919	338
2. Cases commenced during fiscal year	670
3. Cases terminated during same period	714
4. Cases pending at close of June 30, 1920	294
5. Realized on fines, forfeitures, etc	$51,615.12

Mr. President, in obedience to statute Federal court is held twice a year in four places, namely, Prescott, Phoenix, Tucson, and Globe. The distance by rail from Prescott to Globe is 497 miles. It will thus be observed that the distance between Prescott and Globe is about the same distance as from Washington to Cincinnati or from Washington to Portland, Me. Litigants and witnesses are frequently required to traverse the entire distance—497 miles—to reach the place where court is held, and court is held as directed by statute. In some instances a term is suspended at one place while the judge travels to another place upon its business, after dispatching which he returns to the former place, completes the business there, and then returns to the latter place and dispatches the business there. In this connection it should be remembered that a grand jury must be assembled in each place twice a year. Thus it will be observed that the present judge convenes eight grand juries each year.

One-third of the copper produced in the United States is mined and smelted in the State of Arizona, its Indian population is greater than that of any other State excepting Oklahoma, and the area which is included within forest, Indian, and other reservations under the jurisdiction of the United States courts is larger than that of any other State.

Mr. President, much has been said about the political effect of this proposed legislation. I hope I have not reached, and I trust I may never reach, the point where I would vote either for or against an additional judgeship for political effect.

If the necessity for an additional district judge for Arizona existed when Woodrow Wilson was President, and it did exist, that necessity has not diminished, but rather has increased. When Mr. Wilson was President the distance from Globe to Prescott by rail was 497 miles, and the distance has not been shortened by the election of Mr. Harding.

Simply because the gentleman to be appointed will be a Republican, as I assume he will be, does not afford me any justification for opposing a bill which I urged under a previous administration.

Whilst on this subject I sound note of warning that it will become judges in the future simply to follow the written law, declare what the law is, and not to attempt to make law. We have had a surfeit of judge-made law. I have here a resolution adopted by the Arizona corporation commission, pointing out that the Federal judges, both district and circuit, are attempting to assume jurisdiction to fix the rates of public-utility corporations doing intrastate business only. Mr. President, I ask leave at this point in my remarks to include in the RECORD a copy of the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission is granted.

The resolution referred to is as follows:

STATE OF ARIZONA,
OFFICE OF THE ARIZONA CORPORATION COMMISSION.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
State of Arizona, ss:

The Arizona Corporation Commission does hereby certify that in regular executive session held in the offices at the capitol on Tuesday, March 14, 1922, the following resolution was adopted by the commission:

Whereas Federal, district, and circuit courts have assumed jurisdiction to fix rates for public utility corporations doing only an intrastate business in cases where utility corporations have not followed the procedure established for a review of their rates by the State of their domicile; and

Whereas the regulation of rates of public utility corporations has always been a purely State function pertaining to the legislative branch of the State government or to a public utility commission created by virtue of the constitution or laws of a State; and

Whereas utility corporations not only have the right to have their rates passed upon by a public utility commission or a State legislature, but possess the right of appeal from such body to State courts and thence, if desired, to the United States Supreme Court, in any one of which courts every right that the utility corporation has would be carefully safeguarded; and

Whereas such an assumption of power on part of a Federal court or of the Federal district and circuit courts is a repudiation of the established procedure and is a revolutionary attack upon a State's unquestioned sovereignty: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Arizona Corporation Commission, That the Representatives of the State of Arizona in Congress be requested to lend their aid and support to the adoption of House bill No. 10212, which has been introduced in the Federal House of Representatives by the Hon. ISAAC BACHARACH upon the request of the Board of Public Utility Commissioners of the State of New Jersey, the object of the bill being to take from Federal district and circuit courts their assumed jurisdiction to fix rates for utility corporations doing only an intrastate business.

In testimony whereof the Arizona Corporation Commission, by its chairman, has hereunto set its hand and affixed its official seal. Done at the city of Phoenix, the capital, this 14th day of March, A. D. 1922.

[SEAL.] ARIZONA CORPORATION COMMISSON.
D. F. JOHNSON, Chairman.

Attest:
F. J. K. MCBRIDE, Secretary.

Mr. ASHURST. I also ask leave to have read at the desk by the Secretary a letter from the Governor of Arizona directing attention to this subject.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The reading clerk read the letter, as follows:

EXECUTIVE OFFICE, STATE HOUSE,
Phoenix, Ariz., March 20, 1922.

Hon. HENRY F. ASHURST,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR ASHURST: There has recently been called to my attention by Governor Edwards, of New Jersey, House Resolution No. 10212, relative to the assumption by Federal courts of jurisdiction in the fixing of rates of public-utility corporations doing only an intrastate business.

Upon receipt of Governor Edwards's letter, copy of which I am inclosing herewith, I referred same to the Arizona Corporation Commission and am to-day in receipt of copies of a formal resolution adopted by the commission, which I am transmitting herewith.

I feel sure that you will agree with me that this is a matter of the greatest importance to the States, and I sincerely hope that you will, after you have had opportunity to familiarize yourself with this proposed legislation, see fit to give it your earnest support. I can not but feel that the assumption by the Federal courts of jurisdiction in the fixing of rates to be charged by utility corporations doing only an intrastate business would, if it became generally effective, constitute a very serious violation of the sovereignty of the States.

Sincerely yours,

THOMAS E. CAMPBELL.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from Arizona understands that an additional judge is provided for Arizona in the pending bill, and I have not heard of anyone who has any notion or desire to strike it out. There are contested items upon which I think some of the Senators desire to be heard. I do not wish to attempt to abbreviate the remarks of the Senator from Arizona, but we shall begin to vote without further debate at 4 o'clock.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, the Senator from Iowa is one of the few Senators whom I would permit to tell me to quit talking.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not intend to be impertinent at all, but there is a real necessity.

Mr. ASHURST. I will yield the floor, but before doing so I ask unanimous consent to include in the RECORD a letter from Governor Edwards, of New Jersey, to Governor Campbell, of Arizona, upon this same subject.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the letter will be printed in the RECORD.

The letter referred to is as follows:

FEBRUARY 20, 1922.

Hon. THOMAS E. CAMPBELL,
Governor of Arizona, Phoenix, Ariz.

MY DEAR GOVERNOR: A bill, known as H. R. 10212, has been introduced in the House of Representatives, Washington, by Hon. ISAAC BACHARACH upon the request of the Board of Utility Commissioners of this State.

The object of the bill is to take from Federal, district, and circuit judges the jurisdiction to fix rates for utility corporations doing only an intrastate business.

In New Jersey, until recently, we had supposed, as doubtless the people of your State suppose, that the regulation of the rates of the utility corporations of the State was a purely State function and belonged to the legislative branch of the Government. That there could be such an assumption of power by a Federal judge as to a rate for an intrastate utility was considered impossible, but the impossible has happened in New Jersey. A Federal court has authorized the utility corporation supplying two-thirds of our population to increase its rates. This was done, notwithstanding the fact that our public utility commission had already granted an increase in rates to the utility; that the utility in question had the right of appeal to our State courts and thence, if desired, to the United States Supreme Court, in any one of which courts every right that it had would have been safeguarded. It saw fit to repudiate the established procedure for review of the commission's decision through the State courts and resorted to a Federal judge with the result above stated. The evidence before the commission, consisting of some 14,000 pages, was not admitted and the court decided that the utility was entitled to increased rates after a hearing of a summary character.

What has happened in New Jersey will doubtless happen in your State and every other State. I am informed that the utilities throughout the country are watching this case in New Jersey with the intention of following the example of the utility corporation here in the endeavor to transfer from the State boards and State courts to the Federal judges the jurisdiction over rates for State utilities. If that effort succeeds, in my judgment, State sovereignty will have been dealt the most serious blow it has ever received.

May I not ask you to lend all the help you can to secure the passage of this bill. Already your public service commission has been communicated with regarding the matter by our commission. I would respectfully ask that you take it up with your Representatives in Congress. The matter is of such great importance, to my mind, that there should be a concentrated effort by all the States to secure this legislation.

No partisan political considerations influence this appeal to you. The utility commission, whose matured decision was overridden by the Federal court, was universally proclaimed to be of the highest character, both as to ability and fairness. The State pays the judges of our supreme court, which has the power of review of the commission's decisions, salaries which attract to that bench the ablest lawyers in the State, and the learning of that court is exceeded only by its sense of justice. The people of our State, without regard to party, do not want our legislature and our courts deprived of their functions in utility rate cases. As an indication of this, I may point out that while the bill for which I ask your support, in the name of the people of my State, was drawn by the utility commission, a majority of which is Democratic, it has been introduced by a Republican, Congressman BACHARACH.

Respectfully,

E. I. EDWARDS, Governor.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, under the unanimous-consent agreement the Senate will begin to vote in about 30 minutes. Therefore, I will not be able to discuss the conditions in any particular district at length and shall not attempt to do so. There are several other Senators who desire to be heard in respect to various items in the bill, and, on that account, I am going to be as brief as possible in my remarks.

The Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], evidently seeing the weakness of his case, has supported it by an argument before it was attacked, and I presume he has invited attack. A motion can yet be made to strike the Arizona item from the bill, as the case has been fully stated. All I have to say in that regard is that in this general omnibus bill the case of Arizona is the weakest one presented.

I believe that the statistics set forth in the Attorney General's report show that the judge of the district court in Arizona only tried 160 cases last year.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I know the Senator does not desire to create a misapprehension. I read from the Attorney General's report, which shows that 714 cases were disposed of in 1920.

Mr. SHIELDS. But, Mr. President, those figures represent cases where pleas of guilty were filed, cases in which the entry nolle prosequi was entered, and so forth.

Mr. ASHURST. They were cases prosecuted in which final judgments were entered.

Mr. SHIELDS. The judge in Arizona does not try any such number of cases, and does not have that many to decide, as the record here shows. The Senator from Arizona has merely overlooked the facts. The number he has stated represents the number of cases terminated; but in all of the Federal courts about three-fourths of the criminal cases are nolle prossed or pleas of guilty are entered, and that is the case in the court in Arizona.

Mr. President, I wish to refer briefly to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] providing an additional district judge for the western district of Washington. That district presents as good a case as several already in the bill, but it is utterly without merit. The Senator from Washington dwelt very much upon the splendid resources of his State. While I never was in that State, according to my information he is correct in every statement, but the people there do not litigate concerning everything they have.

The Senator referred to the number of admiralty cases. The fact is that there were only 55 admiralty cases brought in that district, and 43 of them were compromised or dismissed, leaving only 12 to be tried. The Senator also referred to the great amount of prohibition business arising because of the proximity of British Columbia. It is shown by the statistics, however, that there were only 75 prohibition cases pending on the docket in the western district of Washington.

What was the total number of cases tried by the two judges in that district? During the last fiscal year the number of cases tried was 272, or 136 apiece. How many cases are pending there? According to the report of the Attorney General, 607 are pending, to be disposed of by two judges, or 300 apiece; and, according to all of the statistics, at least two-thirds of them will go off on pleas of guilty or will be dismissed. I shall not dwell further upon the situation in the western district of Washington.

Mr. President, I do not care to discuss further the propriety of striking out section 2 of the bill. I shall modify my motion to strike out the entire section, and will move now——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FERNALD in the chair). The Chair will inform the Senator that there is already an amendment pending, being that offered by the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER].

Mr. SHIELDS. I shall not ask to have my motion disposed of now, as there is a pending motion; but I am going to modify it so as to exclude from the section lines 22, 23, 24, and 25, on page 11, and lines 1 to 8, inclusive, or part of line 8, on page 12, being the provision for the district judges to make reports to the senior judges of their circuits, which is entirely in line with the argument I now propose to make in regard to striking out section 3.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I suggest to the Senator that the word "year," in line 8, is the only one in that line that he ought to take out.

Mr. SHIELDS. Yes; I said "part of that line." It ends with that sentence.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Lines 1 to 7, inclusive, and the first word in line 8.

Mr. SHIELDS. Yes.

Section 3 of this bill provides for the designation of judges from one circuit to another circuit, or, in other words, without the circuit. We have already upon the statute books provisions for the designation of judges in cases of emergency and disability of judges, which, I think, are ample to meet all the necessities of the case. This bill only connects up the Chief Justice with this designation, and is wholly superfluous, unnecessary, and confusing, and connects the court of last resort with the trial courts in the administration and trial of their cases or in providing judges for the districts—a thing that is bad policy in any case. It ought to be limited as much as possible, and I am opposing its extension by the present law.

Before I read the present law, as I am going to do, I wish to call attention to one very material difference between the present law and the proposed statute in lieu of the present law, and that is that these district judges, without their consent, are sent from circuit to circuit far from their homes. I think that is a very unjust modification of the present law. There is no limit to the time when these judges may be designated to another State, another circuit, from coast to coast, and from the Gulf to the Lakes. They may be sent away from their homes and their families without their consent at any time under the provisions of this bill. They do not know when they are to go to this distant place or how long they are to stay there. The whole effect and tendency of it is in the nature of a degradation and a humiliation of the district judges of the United States—a thing that ought not to be done. The confidence of the people in their independence and integrity ought not in any way to be lessened.

Another objection to this increase in the power of designation is that it is wholly unnecessary. This provision comes from what is called the "flying squadron" bill that provided for 18 judges from the Nation at large, 2 from each circuit, to be called judges at large. They were not to be designated to any court. They were not to be commissioned to hold a court anywhere. They were not to have jurisdiction anywhere, except when the Chief Justice assigned them to hold a court. Without an assignment they were supernumeraries, loafers, and powerless to do anything. Therefore this provision empowering him to assign judges was put in.

There was nothing in that bill providing for judges for the congested districts. This bill already adds, by the amendment, 20 new judges, relieving this congestion in every State where it exists and in cases where it does not exist. Therefore there is no necessity for the extension of that rule. There is no necessity of giving the Chief Justice command or power over these district judges. It is absolutely without excuse, unless it is thought it would be ornamental to have the Chief Justice order these district judges around; but I do not think it is an ornament these judges will appreciate. I think they will feel humiliated and degraded, and they will think their Senators have not treated them right in allowing it to be done.

Here is the present law, and it is ample to cover all the cases required and all the necessities of the conditions of every docket:

When any district judge is prevented, by any disability, from holding any stated or appointed term of his district court, and that fact is made to appear by the certificate of the clerk, under the seal of the court, to any circuit judge of the circuit in which the district lies, or, in the absence of all the circuit judges, to the circuit justice of the circuit in which the district lies, any such circuit judge or justice may, if in his judgment the public interests so require, designate and appoint the judge of any other district in the same circuit to hold said court, and to discharge all the judicial duties of the judge so disabled during such disability. Whenever it shall be certified by any such circuit judge or, in his absence, by the circuit justice of the circuit in which the district lies, that for any sufficient reason it is impracticable to designate and appoint a judge of another district within the circuit to perform the duties of such disabled judge, the Chief Justice may, if in his judgment the public interests so require, designate and appoint the judge of any district in another circuit to hold said court and to discharge all the judicial duties of the judge so disabled during such disability. Such appointment shall be filed in the clerk's office and entered on the minutes of the said district court, and a certified copy thereof, under the seal of the court, shall be transmitted by the clerk to the judge so designated and appointed.

Mr. President, I do not want to consume all the time that is left, but I want these statutes to appear in this connection in my remarks. I have just read section 13 of the Judicial Code. I ask that sections 14, 15, 16, and 17 be printed without my reading them, so as to save time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

SEC. 14. When from the accumulation or urgency of business in any district court the public interests require the designation and appointment hereinafter provided, and the fact is made to appear, by the certificate of the clerk, under the seal of the court, to any circuit judge of the circuit in which the district lies, or in the absence of all the circuit judges to the circuit justice of the circuit in which the district lies, such circuit judge or justice may designate and appoint the judge of any other district in the same circuit to have and exercise within the district first named the same powers that are vested in the judge thereof. Each of the said district judges may, in case of such appointment, hold separately at the same time a district court in such district and discharge all the judicial duties of the district judge therein.

SEC. 15. If all the circuit judges and the circuit justice are absent from the circuit, or are unable to execute the provisions of either of the two preceding sections, or if the district judge so designated is disabled or neglects to hold the court and transact the business for which he is designated, the clerk of the district court shall certify the fact to the Chief Justice of the United States, who may thereupon designate and appoint in the manner aforesaid the judge of any district within such circuit or within any other circuit; and said appointment shall be transmitted to the clerk and be acted upon by him as directed in the preceding section.

SEC. 16. Any such circuit judge, or circuit justice, or the Chief Justice, as the case may be, may from time to time, if in his judgment the public interests so require, make a new designation and appointment of any other district judge in the manner, for the duties, and with the powers mentioned in the three preceding sections, and revoke any previous designation and appointment.

SEC. 17. It shall be the duty of the senior circuit judge then present in the circuit, whenever in his judgment the public interest so requires, to designate and appoint, in the manner and with the powers provided in section 14, the district judge of any judicial district within his circuit to hold a district court in the place or in aid of any other district judge within the same circuit.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, I will state briefly the effect of these statutes. I am sorry I can not read them, because they are so clear and conclusive in the remedy provided. They show that the present modification of them is utterly without merit, and that there is no necessity of it. It is simply connecting up the Chief Justice with the trial courts—not only the trial courts, but the intermediate appellate courts, the circuit courts of appeal. There ought to be no such connection between the highest court in the land and the court of last resort, and it ought not to be required to interfere in such matters; and this is especially important in view of certain legislation that the Chief Justice is now pressing upon the Congress. I understand that he has had prepared a bill, revolutionary in its character, absolutely changing the appellate jurisdiction—I might say the revisory jurisdiction—of the Supreme Court of the United States. It has been introduced in both Houses, and I saw from the newspapers that the Chief Justice had appeared before the House Committee on the Judiciary advocating its passage. That bill is too long for me to state its terms, but in effect it takes away from litigants the right to prosecute appeals or writs of error from the Circuit Court of Appeals, and makes that court a court of final jurisdiction. The only possible way to review its proceedings is by a petition for certiorari, to be decided by the Supreme Court without oral argument—a very poor way to try lawsuits.

In effect, I say, the Circuit Court of Appeals is being made a court of final jurisdiction; yet in this bill we are connecting the chief officer of the Supreme Court with this intermediate appellate court, and thus exercising more or less influence over a court where litigants have no really available remedy in review. It is in a sense a denial of a final review of their cases in the court of last resort. No lawyer will assert that he can get his case before a court upon a printed brief as well as he can by looking the judges of that court in the eye and talking to them, and no judge will agree that he can get as intelligent and clear a view of a lawsuit as when he is looking the lawyer in the face and having him tell the merits of it.

This bill provides first in this section, simply for cases within the circuit, that the senior circuit judge may designate judges from one district to another.

That is the law now. Secondly, it provides that where there is a congestion or other emergency in a circuit the senior judge of that circuit may make a request for aid of the senior judge of another circuit—that is the effect of it—or, if he makes it to the Chief Justice—the bill is a little ambiguous—of course, the judge of the circuit from which the district judge is to go must certify that he can spare him, and thereupon the Chief Justice designates a judge to go.

What is the use of connecting the Chief Justice with that transaction? All there is in it is, let it be done as it now is, as it now can be done under the statute. First, let the judge of the first circuit certify that he needs help in one of the districts of his circuit. Then let the judge of the fifth circuit to whom he applies say, "There is a district judge in my circuit who can be spared, and I designate him," and it is all done; and that is more or less local self-government. That is all that is required. There is no use of this indirect thing of passing it through the Chief Justice.

That is the law now, but in the event these senior judges are disabled or absent from their circuits, or can not act, then the Chief Justice can make the designation under the present law, but the value of the present law over the other is that it is more or less local self-government. It is the work of the inferior courts, unconnected with the Supreme Court, and they do not have to work through a third party. This is simply more cumbersome machinery and puts a burden upon the Chief Justice. Why he wants it I do not know, but it should be passed, because, as I have said, he is now complaining that he has too much jurisdiction and that there are more cases in his court than the court can take care of. I will not consume any more time on this bill.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, just a few words with regard to the matter, for our time is very limited now.

I hope the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] will not prevail. I can well understand that the judges in Washington are under some pressure, but the committee distributed this judicial force as best it could, and to the districts in which the committee believed the additional judges were most needed. I have not the time to go over the statistics in regard to the State of Washington, but I only want it to be remembered that that State has a population of about one million three or four hundred thousand, as I recollect it. There are already three judges for that population, and I am sure that until we have an opportunity in the future to review that situation, there should not be added at this time an additional judge.

I must say a word with regard to the motion which I understand is to be made to strike out section 2, and first with regard to the assertions made by my friend, the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS]. He is all wrong with regard to what the law is now. There is no authority in the law for a senior circuit judge or any circuit judge to assign a district judge to another circuit. There is the right on the part of the Chief Justice under some circumstances to assign a district judge to another circuit, and an almost unqualified right to assign a district judge to the second circuit, but beyond that his authority does not go. Section 3 does enlarge materially the authority for designation, as was so carefully pointed out by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH].

I think it is absolutely necessary that some one shall have this authority if we are to utilize our judicial force so that it will be entirely efficient, and the whole purpose of this bill is, first, to create a judicial force that is sufficient, and then make it possible to utilize it by assignment from one district or one circuit to another.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. I must be permitted to say just a word, for I have not spoken very much upon the bill lately. I want to say a word with regard to the proposal to strike out section 2. I am not alarmed with regard to the influences which will be thrown about the Chief Justice and nine circuit judges if they happen to come to Washington. To me that is a nightmare that is never afflicting. I do not believe there is any such influence. I do not believe that the judges would be susceptible to the influence if it existed, and therefore I put out of view entirely this supposed seductive effect of a dinner here or there which may be given to the Chief Justice or to those senior circuit judges if they happen to arrive in Washington. I must pass that, however.

I am in favor of section 2, because it makes this bill more workable and more efficient. I am in favor of section 2, because I believe that a conference face to face between the Chief Justice and the circuit judges will result in an assignment or designation of judges to various parts of the country which will result in a more effectual disposition of the arrears of judicial business. I think the almost negligible expense attending a conference of that kind is vastly overborne by the beneficial effects of surveying all the judicial needs of the United States at a single time and reaching a conclusion as between the circuit judges and the Chief Justice with respect to places to which the district judges may be assigned.

Mr. President, I have said all I care to say about the matter, and I close by expressing my very sincere hope that section 2 of the bill will neither be eliminated nor mutilated.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Iowa to an amendment which I propose to offer, and I believe the Senator from Iowa will be willing to accept it.

There is a peculiar situation in the State of New Mexico. There has been no modification of the provision as to the place of holding courts in that State since the enabling act was passed. It is a State containing 10,000 more miles than Arizona, the area being 123,000 square miles. Under the enabling act the terms of the district court are to be held at one place only, the city of Santa Fe, the capital of the State, and I submit that in a State 350 miles wide and 400 miles long the courts should be held at more than one place. I offer this amendment, which I desire to read, and I hope the Senator from Iowa will accept it. The amendment is as follows:

Regular or special terms of the district courts of the district of New Mexico may be held in any incorporated municipality in the State of New Mexico.

The enabling act provides that they must be held in one place only. The amendment continues:

Regular or special terms of said court other than at the capital of said State shall be held at such time or times and at such place or places as the judge of said district court shall by order prescribe, and such order may be changed from time to time as may be deemed necessary in the public interest: Provided, however, That at any place where such regular or special terms of court may be so ordered to be held a suitable building in which to hold such term or terms of court shall be available without expense to the Government of the United States.

Mr. CUMMINS. What does the Senator mean by "the senior judge"?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. My colleague proposes to offer an amendment to the bill providing another judge for the State of New Mexico, and I assumed that that amendment would carry, and this is to be offered as an additional section at the end of the bill. I may say, however, that if the additional judge should not be awarded, then the language would still be applicable to the situation.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I have no authority, of course, to accept an amendment on behalf of the Judiciary Committee; but, in so far as I am concerned, I see no objection whatever to the amendment suggested by the Senator from New Mexico, if he will strike out the word "senior."

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I will strike that out and insert it only in the event we get another judge. I thank the Senator, and hope the other Senators will bear this in mind.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I make a point of order against the amendment, on the ground that there is an amendment pending.

Mr. ASHURST. I will ask the Senator from Washington to withhold his point of order for a moment, because after 4 o'clock there can not be any debate. I think the amendment presented by the Senator from New Mexico ought to prevail. In Arizona they hold court in four places each year, in Montana in five places, and in a State which, as the Senator has said, is larger than Arizona, it seems to me an injustice to require that the court shall sit in one place only. The amendment offered by the Senator ought to prevail at the appropriate time. I hope it will be accepted.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SPENCER in the chair). The absence of a quorum is suggested. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	France	McNary	Shields
Ball	Gooding	Moses	Shortridge
Borah	Harris	Nelson	Smoot
Broussard	Harrison	New	Spencer
Bursum	Hitchcock	Nicholson	Stanley
Calder	Johnson	Norbeck	Sterling
Cameron	Jones, N. Mex.	Norris	Sutherland
Capper	Jones, Wash.	Oddie	Townsend
Caraway	Kellogg	Overman	Trammell
Cummins	Kendrick	Owen	Underwood
Curtis	King	Page	Wadsworth
Dial	Ladd	Phipps	Walsh, Mass.
Dillingham	La Follette	Pittman	Walsh, Mont.
Elkins	Lenroot	Poindexter	Warren
Ernst	McCumber	Pomerene	Watson, Ga.
Fernald	McKinley	Rawson	Weller
Fletcher	McLean	Sheppard	Williams

Mr. DIAL. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. SMITH] is absent on official business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-eight Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] to the amendment of the committee. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 10, at the end of line 22, add "and for the western district of Washington, one."

Mr. POINDEXTER. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], who is unavoidably detained from the Senate to-day. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] and vote "nay."

Mr. JONES of Washington (when his name was called). The senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] is necessarily absent, and I agreed to take care of him for the day with a pair. I find, however, that I can transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CROW]. I make that transfer and vote "yea."

Mr. KELLOGG (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] and vote "nay."

Mr. KENDRICK (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCCORMICK]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] and vote "nay."

Mr. OVERMAN (when Mr. SIMMONS's name was called). I wish to announce that my colleague is detained on important business. He has a general pair with the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG].

Mr. MCNARY (when Mr. STANFIELD's name was called). I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. STANFIELD] is detained on public business.

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] to the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] and vote "nay."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. STANFIELD] and vote "yea."

Mr. WALSH of Montana (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN], who is absent. I am unable to obtain a transfer and therefore withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote I would vote "nay."

Mr. WATSON of Georgia (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PEPPER]. On this question he would vote as I shall vote, and I therefore am at liberty to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON], who is unavoidably absent from the Chamber. I do not know how that Senator would vote if he were present, and therefore do not feel at liberty to vote myself. If I could vote I would vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. NEW. I have a pair with the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR]. Not knowing how he would vote on this question I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote I would vote "nay."

Mr. UNDERWOOD (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY] and let my vote stand.

Mr. TRAMMELL (after having voted in the negative). My attention has been called to the fact that my pair, the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] is absent. Under those circumstances I withdraw my vote. If permitted to vote I should vote "nay."

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to announce that the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] is paired with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], and that the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] is paired with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN].

The result was announced—yeas 24, nays 35, as follows:

YEAS—24.

Ashurst	Fernald	Myers	Sheppard
Broussard	France	Nicholson	Shortridge
Bursum	Harris	Oddie	Spencer
Cameron	Johnson	Page	Sutherland
Caraway	Jones, Wash.	Poindexter	Watson, Ga.

So Mr. POINDEXTER's amendment to the committee amendment was rejected.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment of the committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will report the amendment to the amendent.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 14, line 3, insert:

Every judge shall reside in the district or circuit or one of the districts or circuits for which he is appointed, and shall devote his time to the duties of his office, and shall not engage in any other employment for which he receives compensation; and for offending against the provisions of this section shall be deemed guilty of a high misdemeanor.

On a division the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I offer the following amendment. On page 18, after line 5, I move to insert the following new section:

SEC. 5. Add to section 101 of the Judicial Code the following:
"Terms of the district court for the western district shall be held at Pawhuska on the first Monday in October: Provided, That suitable rooms and accommodations for holding court at Pawhuska are furnished free of expense to the United States."

There are a very large number of cases which arise in this particular section of the State——

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I demand the regular order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Debate is not in order. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BURSUM. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 10, line 19, after the words "Oklahoma, one," insert the following words: "and for the district of New Mexico, one."

Mr. BURSUM. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before with reference to my pair and its transfer, I vote "nay."

Mr. JONES of Washington (when his name was called). I am paired for the day with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. KELLOGG (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before as to the transfer of my pair, I vote "nay."

Mr. KENDRICK (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before as to the transfer of my pair, I vote "nay."

Mr. NEW (when his name was called). Repeating the announcement made on the previous vote, I withhold my vote because of my pair.

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as to the transfer of my pair as on the former vote, I vote "nay."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before with reference to my pair and its transfer, I vote "nay."

Mr. WALSH of Montana (when his name was called). I make the same announcement as on the preceding vote as to my pair. Not being able to secure a transfer, I refrain from voting.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PEPPER]. Not knowing how he would vote on this question if present, I withhold my vote.

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON], who is unavoidably absent. I do not know how he would vote if present and therefore have no right to vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. UNDERWOOD (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], who is absent. I understand he will be absent for the day. I transfer my pair with him to the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY] and ask that this announcement may stand for the day, in order that I may vote on other roll calls without again making the announcement of my pair.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I have a pair with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT]. Being unable to obtain a transfer upon this question, I must withhold my vote.

The reading clerk having recapitulated the vote, the result was announced—yeas 32, nays 32, as follows:

YEAS—32.

Ashurst	France	McKinley	Poindexter
Broussard	Gooding	McLean	Pomerene
Bursum	Harris	McNary	Rawson
Cameron	Harrison	Myers	Sheppard
Caraway	Johnson	Nicholson	Shortridge
Elkins	Jones, N. Mex.	Norbeck	Spencer

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BURSUM] to the amendment of the committee is rejected.

Mr. BURSUM. I ask for a recapitulation of the vote just taken.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will recapitulate the vote.

The reading clerk recapitulated the vote.

Mr. DIAL. I ask how I am recorded as voting?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Carolina is recorded as voting in the negative.

Mr. DIAL. I desire to record my vote in the affirmative.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

Mr. CUMMINS. I rise to a point of order. The result of the vote having been announced, the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL] can not change his vote.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has so ruled.

Mr. HARRISON. The object of the recapitulation of the vote was to ascertain how the Senator from South Carolina was recorded.

Mr. CUMMINS. But the Senator from South Carolina did not claim that he was wrongly recorded.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator did not claim that he was incorrectly recorded.

Mr. BURSUM. I reserve a vote in the Senate on the amendment.

Mr. DIAL. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL] to the amendment of the committee will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 10, at the end of line 22, it is proposed to strike out the period, to insert a comma, and to insert the following:

For the western district of South Carolina, one.

Mr. DIAL. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment, Mr. President.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as on the last vote, I vote "nay."

Mr. JONES of Washington (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as on the last roll call, I withhold my vote.

Mr. KELLOGG (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] and vote "nay." I ask that the announcement of the transfer of my pair may stand for the day.

Mr. KENDRICK (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as previously in reference to the transfer of my pair with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCCORMICK] to the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN], and asking that this announcement stand for the day, on this question I vote "nay."

Mr. NEW (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR], which I find I am able to transfer to the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. NEWBERRY]. I make that transfer and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as on the last vote, I vote "nay."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before with reference to my pair and its transfer, I vote "nay."

Mr. TRAMMELL (when his name was called). Making the same announcement with regard to my pair as on the last vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. WALSH of Montana (when his name was called). I am advised that the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN], with whom I have a general pair, if present would vote as I am about to vote. I accordingly vote "nay."

Mr. WATSON of Georgia (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PEPPER]. Not knowing how he would vote on this question if present, I withhold my vote.

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). Repeating the statement about my pair made on the last roll call, I announce that if I were at liberty to vote I should vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. OVERMAN. I again announce that my colleague [Mr. SIMMONS] is paired with the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG]. My colleague is unavoidably absent from the city. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

The result was announced—yeas 14, nays 52, as follows:

YEAS—14.

Broussard	Dial	Harris	Sheppard
Bursum	Elkins	Harrison	Underwood
Cameron	Fernald	Jones, N. Mex.

So Mr. DIAL's amendment to the amendment of the committee was rejected.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 13, at the end of line 23, after the word "require," it is proposed to insert a comma and the following:

the necessity for said aid to the district judge having been made manifest by the certificate of the clerk under the seal of the court, as is provided by existing law.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia to the amendment of the committee.

On a division, the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Are amendments to the amendment tendered by the committee—that is, the substitute—now in order?

Mr. CUMMINS. I ask for the regular order.

Mr. KING. I am seeking the regular order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. They are in order.

Mr. KING. I move to strike out, in line 11, page 10, after the word "Massachusetts" and before the word "for," the word "two," and to insert in lieu thereof the word "one," so that it will read:

For the district of Massachusetts, one.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 10, line 11, it is proposed to strike out the word "two" and insert the word "one," so that, if amended, it will read:

For the district of Massachusetts, one.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. KING. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as on previous votes, I vote "nay."

Mr. JONES of Washington (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before, I withhold my vote.

I will allow this announcement to stand on all votes for the remainder of the day.

Mr. NEW (when his name was called). I repeat the announcement of the transfer of my pair with the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] to the Senator from Michigan [Mr. NEWBERRY], and ask that this announcement may stand for the day. I vote "nay."

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as on the former vote, I vote "nay."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before with reference to my pair and its transfer, I vote "nay."

Mr. TRAMMELL (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as to my pair as on the last roll call, I withhold my vote.

Mr. WALSH of Montana (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN], which I transfer to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. WATSON of Georgia (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before, I withhold my vote.

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I have a pair, as previously stated. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce that the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] is paired with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED].

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 16, nays 46, as follows:

YEAS—16.

Ashurst	Fletcher	La Follette	Pittman
Borah	Harris	Myers	Shields
Caraway	Hitchcock	Norris	Stanley

So Mr. KING's amendment to the amendment of the committee was rejected.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, in line 14, page 10, I move to strike out the words "for the western district of Pennsylvania, one," leaving one for Pennsylvania.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk, to be added as a new section to the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. It is proposed to add, at the end of the committee amendment, the following:

SEC. 5. Regular or special terms of the district court of the district of New Mexico may be held in any incorporated municipality in the State of New Mexico. Regular or special terms of said court other than at the capital of said State shall be held at such time or times and at such place or places as the judge of said district court shall by order prescribe, and such order may be changed from time to time as may be deemed necessary in the public interest: Provided, however, That at any place where such regular or special terms of court may be so ordered to be held a suitable building in which to hold such term or terms of court shall be available without expense to the Government of the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New Mexico to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, on line 18, page 10, I move to strike out the following words:

For the eastern district of Missouri, one.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, on page 14, line 9, I move to strike out the brackets and the words "who may designate himself."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 14, line 9, it is proposed to strike out the brackets and the words included therein, "who may designate himself," so that if amended it will read:

(2) Such designation may be made by the senior circuit judge whenever he is satisfied that the occasion therefor exists and that the public interests so require.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I move to strike out, on page 10, lines 20 and 21, the words "for the southern district of California, one," leaving California with one judge under the bill.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SHIELDS. On page 10, line 13, after the words "New York," I move to strike out the word "two" and insert in lieu thereof the word "one," so that it will read "for the southern district of New York, one." On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before, I vote "nay."

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as on the previous vote, I vote "nay."

Mr. TRAMMELL (when his name was called). Making the same announcement that I made on the previous vote with regard to my pair, I withhold my vote.

Mr. WALSH of Montana (when his name was called). In view of the pair I have previously announced, I withhold my vote.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before, I withhold my vote.

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). Making the same announcement with regard to my pair which I made on the previous vote, I withhold my vote. If I were at liberty to vote on this amendment, I would vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Making the same announcement as before, I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 9, nays 49, as follows:

YEAS—9.

Ashurst	King	Overman	Shields
Dial	La Follette	Pittman	Stanley
Hitchcock

NAYS—49.

Ball	Harreld	Nelson	Smoot

du Pont	Ladd	Simmons
Edge	Lodge	Smith

So Mr. SHIELDS's amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I reserve a separate vote in the Senate on the two amendments which I offered.

Mr. SHIELDS. I move to strike out all of section 2 of the bill, found on pages 11 and 12, to line 8, on page 13, except lines 22, 23, 24, and 25, on page 11, and down to the word "year," on line 8, page 12. I ask that the amendment be reported.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 11, after the words "Sec. 2," strike out all of the section down to and including line 21 on that page, and beginning with the words "The senior circuit judge," on line 8, page 12, and the remainder of that section down to and including line 8, on page 13, as follows:

That it shall be the duty of the Chief Justice of the United States, or, in case of his disability, of one of the other justices of the Supreme Court, in order of their seniority, as soon as may be after the passage of this act, and annually thereafter, to summon to a conference on the last Monday in September at Washington, or at such other time and place in the United States as the Chief Justice, or, in case of his disability, any of said justices in order of their seniority, may designate, the senior circuit judge of each circuit. If any of said senior circuit judges is unable to attend, the Chief Justice, or, in case of his disability, any justice of the Supreme Court in the order of seniority, may nominate any other circuit or district judge belonging to the circuit whose senior circuit judge is unable to attend, that each circuit may adequately be represented at said conference.

It shall be the duty of every such senior or other circuit or district judge to attend such conference, and to remain throughout its proceedings, and to advise as to the needs of his circuit and as to any matters in respect of which the administration of justice in the courts of the United States may be improved.

The senior circuit judge, or, in his absence, a judge representing the circuit at the conference, shall present such reports to the conference, with a summary thereof, and his comments thereon.

The Attorney General shall, upon request of the Chief Justice, report to said conference on matters relating to the business of the several courts of the United States, with particular reference to causes or proceedings in which the United States may be a party.

The said conference shall be presided over by the Chief Justice of the United States, or, in case of his disability, by any justice of the Supreme Court in the order of seniority.

Said conference shall make a comprehensive survey of the conditions of business in the courts of the United States and prepare plans and schedules for the assignment and transfer of judges to or from circuits or districts where the state of the docket or the condition of business indicates the need therefor, and shall submit such suggestions to the various courts as may seem in the interest of uniformity and expedition of business.

The Chief Justice and each justice or judge summoned to and attending said conference shall be allowed his actual expenses of travel and his necessary expenses for subsistence, not to exceed $10 per day, which payments shall be made by the marshal of the Supreme Court of the United States upon the written certificate of the Chief Justice.

So that section 2 would read:

SEC. 2. It shall be the duty of the senior district judge of each district court of the United States to make, on or before the 1st day of August of each year, a report to the senior circuit judge as to the condition of the business in his district and a recommendation as to what additional judicial force, if any, is needed to dispose of the business of such district with reasonable dispatch. It shall not be sufficient for him merely to state in his report the cases as shown upon the docket of the court, but, after investigation, he shall express his best judgment as to the condition of business existing or likely to arise in his court during the ensuing year.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. SHIELDS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before, I vote "nay."

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as on the last vote, I vote "nay."

Mr. WALSH of Montana (when his name was called). In view of my pair, heretofore announced, I refrain from voting.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PEPPER] on this question. If he were present, he would vote "nay." If I were free to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I have explained why I am not at liberty to vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I would vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Making the same announcement as before, I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 29, nays 36, as follows:

YEAS—29.

Borah	Harris	McNary	Shields
Broussard	Harrison	Nicholson	Stanley
Capper	Hitchcock	Norris	Underwood

Simmons	Swanson	Watson, Ga.	Willis
Smith	Trammell	Watson, Ind.

So Mr. SHIELDS's amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SHIELDS. I desire to give notice that I shall ask for a separate vote on this amendment when the bill is in the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Amendments not agreed to as in Committee of the Whole do not have to be reserved for a separate vote in the Senate. They can be reoffered when the bill reaches the Senate.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to the committee amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. At the end of line 22, on page 10, insert the following proviso:

Provided, That in making such appointments, and hereafter, before the President shall appoint any district, circuit, or Supreme Court judge he shall make public all indorsements made in behalf of any applicant.

Mr. HARRISON. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before, I vote "nay."

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as on the former vote, I vote "nay."

Mr. WALSH of Montana (when his name was called). Again announcing the absence of my pair, I withhold my vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. WATSON of Georgia (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PEPPER]. If he were present and voting he would vote "nay." If at liberty to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON]. In his absence, not being at liberty to vote, I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Making the same announcement as before with reference to my pair and its transfer, I vote "nay."

Mr. KING. May I inquire whether the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. That Senator has not voted.

Mr. KING. I have a general pair with that Senator. Not being able to obtain a transfer, I can not vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. TRAMMELL. Making the same announcement with regard to my pair, I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 21, nays 41, as follows:

YEAS—21.

Ashurst	France	La Follette	Stanley
Borah	Harris	Myers	Underwood
Broussard	Harrison	Norris	Walsh, Mass.
Caraway	Hitchcock	Pittman

So Mr. HARRISON's amendment to the committee amendment was rejected.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, I offer the following amendment to the committee amendment. On page 17, after line 9, insert the following:

Provided, That no district judge shall be designated or required, without his written consent, to hold court in a district outside the State in which his district is situated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SHIELDS. I now offer the following amendment to the committee amendment. In line 9, after the words "associate justice," I move to insert:

No district judge shall be designated or required, without his consent, to hold court outside the judicial circuit within which he resides.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 17, line 9, after the words "associate justice," insert the following:

No district judge shall be designated or required, without his consent, to hold court outside the judicial circuit in which he resides.

Mr. SHIELDS. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before, I vote "nay."

Mr. KING (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER]. I understand he is absent from the Chamber on official business. As I can not obtain a transfer I am compelled to withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote I should vote "yea."

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before, I vote "nay."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before with reference to my pair and its transfer, I vote "nay."

Mr. TRAMMELL (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before, I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote I would vote "yea."

Mr. WALSH of Montana (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PEPPER], who is absent. If present, he would vote "nay." If free to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). If I were at liberty to vote upon this proposition, I would vote "yea." I am paired, however, with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON], who is absent, and I do not know how he would vote.

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 20, nays 39, as follows:

YEAS—20.

Broussard	France	Ladd	Shields
Bursum	Harris	La Follette	Stanley
Caraway	Hitchcock	Overman	Underwood
Dial	Johnson	Ransdell	Walsh, Mass.

Elkins	Lodge	Robinson	Willis
Frelinghuysen	McCormick	Simmons
Gerry	McCumber	Smith
Glass	McKellar	Stanfield

So Mr. SHIELD'S amendment to the committee amendment was rejected.

Mr. SHIELDS. After the first five lines of the amendment of the committee on page 10, being lines 6, 7, 8, 9, and 10, reading as follows:

That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, the following number of district judges for the United States district courts in the districts specified in addition to those now authorized by law.

I move to strike out the remainder of the bill and to insert in lieu thereof what I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Tennessee to the amendment reported by the committee will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all of the amendment of the committee after line 10, on page 10, and to insert:

For the district of Massachusetts, two; for the southern district of New York, two; for the western district of Pennsylvania, one; for the eastern district of Michigan, one; for the district of Minnesota, one; for the western district of Missouri, one; and for the northern district of California, one.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Tennessee to the committee amendment.

Mr. SHIELDS. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment to the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as on the previous vote as to my pair and its transfer, I vote "nay."

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as on the last vote in reference to my pair and its transfer, I vote "nay."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as previously with reference to my pair and its transfer, I vote "nay."

Mr. WALSH of Montana (when his name was called). I am advised that my pair, the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN], if present, would vote as I shall vote. Accordingly I will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. WATSON of Georgia (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PEPPER]. Not knowing how he would vote on this question, if present, I withhold my vote.

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 13, nays 48, as follows:

YEAS—13.

So the amendment of Mr. SHIELDS to the amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee as amended.

Mr. KING. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state the inquiry.

Mr. KING. An amendment was offered, as I understand, on yesterday by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN]. I inquire whether or not that amendment was accepted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Is it necessary to reserve a separate vote upon that amendment in the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is.

Mr. KING. I desire to reserve a separate vote upon that amendment in the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, is the bill now in the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is in the Senate. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. FLETCHER. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

Mr. CUMMINS. A point of order, Mr. President. The first question is on concurring in the amendments which have been agreed to as in Committee of the Whole, is it not?

Mr. FLETCHER. I submit that can not be done, because it is all one amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. KING. I ask for a vote upon the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey proposing to provide an additional judge for New Jersey.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment of the Senator from New Jersey as agreed to in Committee of the Whole will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 10, line 13, an amendment to the committee amendment was inserted, as in Committee of the Whole, by adding, after the words "New York, two," and the semicolon, the words "for the district of New Jersey, one."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey.

The amendment was not concurred in.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], which will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 10, after line 22, it is proposed to insert:

For the southern district of Florida, one.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida to the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole. [Putting the question.] The amendment to the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. KING. I call for a division, Mr. President.

Mr. CUMMINS. A parliamentary inquiry. Is the question on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER]?

Mr. FLETCHER. The amendment has been agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair did not understand the parliamentary inquiry of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. I ask for the yeas and nays upon the amendment of the Senator from Florida.

Mr. FLETCHER. It is too late.

Mr. DIAL. I have a recollection that a while ago the Senator from Iowa said that I was too late in desiring to change my vote. Now he is in about the same category I then was.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from South Carolina may have been too late in that instance, and still the Senator from Iowa may not be too late this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] asks for a division.

The question being put on a division, the amendment of Mr. FLETCHER to the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was agreed to.

Mr. ERNST. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Kentucky will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 10, at the end of line 21, it is proposed to insert:

For the middle district of Tennessee, one.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kentucky to the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole. [Putting the question.] The amendment is rejected.

Mr. ERNST. I ask for a division.

On a division the amendment was rejected.

Mr. POINDEXTER. At the end of line 22, page 10, I move to insert:

And for the western district of Washington, one.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington to the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 10, at the end of line 21, it is proposed to insert:

For the district of New Mexico, one.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New Mexico to the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BURSUM. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before, I vote "nay."

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before, I vote "nay."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before, I vote "nay."

Mr. TRAMMELL (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as on the last vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PEPPER]. Not knowing how he would vote on this question, I withhold my vote.

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] and announce his unavoidable absence.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Announcing again my pair with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN], in his absence I refrain from voting. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

The result was announced—yeas 33, nays 24, as follows:

YEAS—33.

Ashurst	France	McKinley	Rawson
Ball	Gooding	McNary	Sheppard
Broussard	Harreld	Myers	Shortridge

So Mr. BURSUM's amendment to the amendment of the committee was agreed to.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment providing an additional judge for New Jersey was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kansas moves that the Senate reconsider the vote by which the amendment offered by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] was nonconcurred in. The question is on that motion.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. KING. Is it not too late now, in view of the action of the Senate heretofore and of the status of the bill, to make that motion?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is not.

Mr. KING. The amendment was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and also in the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is not too late to reconsider the vote.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. HARRISON. Is it not necessary for the Senator from Kansas to qualify as having voted on the prevailing side of that proposition before he can make a motion to reconsider?

The VICE PRESIDENT. If it was a yea-and-nay vote, yes; otherwise not.

Mr. HARRISON. If there was no yea-and-nay vote, how can we tell how he voted?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I call for the regular order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Then the question does not arise. The question is on the motion to reconsider.

Mr. HARRISON. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before, I vote "yea."

Mr. McKINLEY (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY], which I transfer to the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CROW], and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as on the previous vote, I vote "nay."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before with reference to my pair and its transfer, I vote "yea."

Mr. TRAMMELL (when his name was called). Making the same announcement with regard to my pair that I made on the last vote, I withhold my vote upon this amendment.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PEPPER]. Not knowing how he would vote on this question, I withhold my vote.

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I repeat the information that I have several times given to the Senate, to the effect that I am paired, and therefore not able to vote.

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 35, nays 26, as follows:

YEAS—35.

Ball	Fletcher	McKinley	Sheppard
Broussard	France	McLean	Shortridge
Bursum	Harreld	Moses	Smoot

So the motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, the question now is on concurring in the amendment; is it not?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The original vote was on the motion of the Senator from Utah to strike out the words "for the district of New Jersey, one." That vote prevailed and the language was stricken out.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state his inquiry.

Mr. KING. I understand an amendment was offered by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] to insert in the bill a provision for an additional judge for New Jersey. I asked for a separate vote upon the adoption of that amendment as in Committee of the Whole. I did not move to strike it out. So I think the Chair states the converse of the motion.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Upon a separate vote the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey was defeated, and then there was a motion to reconsider that vote, which has just been agreed to.

Mr. NORRIS. I would like to have the attention of the Senator from Utah, if he will yeld to me.

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator, if I have the floor.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator must not forget that the motion of the Senator from New Jersey was to amend an amendment. On its adoption it became a part of the amendment, so when the bill got into the Senate there was no such thing as voting again on the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey. The Senator from Utah, in order to get that provision out of the bill, would have to move to strike it out, and if he did not do that it never would go out. If he had moved to strike it out, then the Chair would have stated the situation correctly, as I understand it. The Senator's motion should have been to strike out the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. CUMMINS. No, Mr. President; the Senator from Nebraska is in error. The motion of the Senator from New Jersey in Committee of the Whole was to insert a provision for a judge for the district of New Jersey. That amendment prevailed. We passed into the Senate. There was no motion to strike it out, but I understood the Senator from Utah to reserve the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Jersey for a separate vote.

Mr. NORRIS. He was undertaking an impossibility; it could not be done. I do not know what happened, or what the Senator from Utah said; but, as a matter of fact, he could not reserve a vote when we got into the Senate on an amendment to an amendment which was adopted in the Committee of the Whole, because in the Senate the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey was entirely lost. It became a part of the committee amendment, and that is the amendment we are to vote on concurring in. It would have been a physical impossibility to reserve a vote on an amendment to an amendment.

Mr. CUMMINS. It was a vote on an amendment to an amendment. The motion of the Senator from New Jersey was to amend an amendment, which was entirely in order, and which was carried. When we came into the Senate anyone had a right to reserve a vote on that amendment.

Mr. NORRIS. When that amendment was carried it became a part of the committee amendment to the bill. This is a House bill, it is not a Senate bill, and that amendment to the amendment became a part of the committee amendment; and when we went into the Senate the question was on concurring in the committee amendment made in Committee of the Whole, not an amendment to that amendment.

Mr. KING. If the position of the Senator from Nebraska is correct, then there never could be a separate vote in the Senate on a substitute bill of this character, to which there were numerous amendments adopted at various times in Committee of the Whole, and upon which separate votes were reserved, when the substitute bill as perfected came to the Senate.

Mr. NORRIS. Let me call the attention of the Senator to the fact that when we got into the Senate the proper motion would be to amend. The Chair always announces when a bill has been reported from the Committee of the Whole that the bill is in the Senate and open to amendment. If the Senator wanted to amend it, he should have moved to strike it out, which I supposed he had done. I did not pay attention to the exact course pursued by the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. I will be entirely frank. I would not state to the Senate anything that did not actually occur, even if it were in support of the position I have taken. I did not move to strike out. I considered that I had a right to challenge the action of the Committee of the Whole by the separate vote which I had reserved before we passed out of the Committee of the Whole into the Senate. So I then asked for a separate vote upon the action of the Committee of the Whole by which the amendment offered by the Senator from New Jersey had been adopted in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And it was an amendment to the committee amendment, and therefore in itself a separate proposition.

Mr. LENROOT. May I ask the Senator from Utah if he will not be willing to have the RECORD show that his motion was a motion to strike out?

Mr. SPENCER. And then let us vote on it.

Mr. CURTIS. Then we could vote on the Senator's motion to strike out.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is ready to make a ruling. The Senator from Utah reserved a separate vote. The only way that question could be put in the Senate was, in effect, by a motion to strike out. Now the question recurs on the motion to strike out the words "for the district of New Jersey, one." Those who vote in favor will vote to strike it out, and those who vote in the negative will vote to keep it in.

Mr. KING. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before, I vote "nay."

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before, I vote "yea."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before with reference to my pair and its transfer, I vote "nay."

Mr. TRAMMELL (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as on the last vote as to my pair, I withhold my vote.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before, I withhold my vote.

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK], and vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. McKINLEY. Making the same announcement as before, I vote "nay."

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I transfer my pair with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] and vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 22, nays 39, as follows:

YEAS—22.

Ashurst	Harrison	Norbeck	Townsend

So Mr. KING's motion to strike out was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole as amended in the Senate.

The amendment as amended was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote whereby the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] to the amendment of the committee was rejected.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I make the point of order that the motion comes too late.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion is too late. The amendment made as in Committee of the Whole has been concurred in.

The bill was read the third time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. On the passage of the bill I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before, I vote "yea."

Mr. FERNALD (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES] to the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CROW], and vote "yea."

Mr. NEW (when his name was called). Repeating my previous announcement as to the transfer of my pair, I vote "yea."

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before, I vote "yea."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before, I vote "yea."

Mr. TRAMMELL (when his name was called). Understanding that the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT], with whom I have a general pair, would vote as I propose to vote on the passage of the bill, I am at liberty to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. WALSH of Montana (when his name was called). I am advised that the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN], with whom I have a pair, would vote as I shall vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. WATSON of Georgia (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PEPPER]. If present, that Senator would vote "yea." If free to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] and vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. OVERMAN. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. SIMMONS] is absent on important business. He is paired with the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce that the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] is paired with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] and that the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN].

I also wish to announce that the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CROW], and the Senator from Michigan [Mr. NEWBERRY] are necessarily absent. If present, these Senators would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 44, nays 21, as follows:

So the bill was passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, the following number of district judges for the United States district courts in the districts specified in addition to those now authorized by law:

For the district of Massachusetts, two; for the eastern district of New York, one; for the southern district of New York, two; for the district of New Jersey, one; for the eastern district of Pennsylvania, one; for the western district of Pennsylvania, one; for the northern district of Texas, one; for the eastern district of Michigan, one; for the northern district of Ohio, one; for the northern district of Illinois, one; for the district of Minnesota, one; for the eastern district of Missouri, one; for the western district of Missouri, one; for the eastern district of Oklahoma, one; for the district of Montana, one; for the northern district of California, one; for the southern district of California, one; for the district of Arizona, one; for the northern and southern districts of Georgia, one; for the southern district of Florida, one; and for the district of New Mexico, one.

Whenever a vacancy shall occur in the office of any district judge appointed pursuant to this act the same shall not be filled unless the Congress shall so provide.

SEC. 2. That it shall be the duty of the Chief Justice of the United States, or, in case of his disability, of one of the other justices of the Supreme Court, in order of their seniority, as soon as may be after the passage of this act, and annually thereafter, to summon to a conference on the last Monday in September at Washington, or at such other time and place in the United States as the Chief Justice, or, in case of his disability, any of said justices in order of their seniority, may designate, the senior circuit judge of each circuit. If any of said senior circuit judges is unable to attend, the Chief Justice, or, in case of his disability, any justice of the Supreme Court in the order of seniority, may nominate any other circuit or district judge belonging to the circuit whose senior circuit judge is unable to attend, that each circuit may adequately be represented at said conference.

It shall be the duty of every such senior or other circuit or district judge to attend such conference, and to remain throughout its proceedings, and to advise as to the needs of his circuit and as to any matters in respect of which the administration of justice in the courts of the United States may be improved.

It shall be the duty of the senior district judge of each district court of the United States to make, on or before the 1st day of August of each year, a report to the senior circuit judge as to the condition of the business in his district and a recommendation as to what additional judicial force, if any, is needed to dispose of the business of such district with reasonable dispatch. It shall not be sufficient for him merely to state in his report the cases as shown upon the docket of the court, but, after investigation, he shall express his best judgment as to the condition of business existing or likely to arise in his court during the ensuing year. The senior circuit judge, or, in his absence, a judge representing the circuit at the conference, shall present such reports to the conference, with a summary thereof, and his comments thereon.

The Attorney General shall, upon request of the Chief Justice, report to said conference on matters relating to the business of the several courts of the United States, with particular reference to causes or proceedings in which the United States may be a party.

The said conference shall be presided over by the Chief Justice of the United States, or, in case of his disability, by any justice of the Supreme Court in the order of seniority.

Said conference shall make a comprehensive survey of the conditions of business in the courts of the United States and prepare plans and schedules for the assignment and transfer of judges to or from circuits or districts where the state of the docket or the condition of business indicates the need therefor, and shall submit such suggestions to the various courts as may seem in the interest of uniformity and expedition of business.

The Chief Justice and each justice or judge summoned to and attending said conference shall be allowed his actual expenses of travel and his necessary expenses for subsistence, not to exceed $10 per day, which payments shall be made by the marshal of the Supreme Court of the United States upon the written certificate of the Chief Justice.

SEC. 3. That sections 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, and 18, as amended by the act of October 3 1913 (ch. 18, 38 Stat. p. 203), of the Judicial Code, be amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 13. (1) A district judge for a district may be designated to act in another district of the same circuit including territory attached thereto)—

"(a) In the place of a district judge who is physically or mentally unable for the time being to perform his duties or who is or who is to be necessarily absent from his district;

"(b) In aid of a district judge who on account of the accumulation and urgency of business is unable to perform speedily all the work of his district;

"(c) In aid of a district judge when the public interests so require.

"(2) Such designation shall be made by the senior circuit judge whenever he is satisfied that condition (a), (b), or (c) exists and that the designation can be carried out without such prejudice to the regular work of the designated judge as to make it inadvisable. Every judge shall reside in the district or circuit or one of the districts or circuits for which he is appointed, and shall devote his time to the duties of his office, and shall not engage in any other employment for which he receives compensation, and for offending against the provisions of this section shall be deemed guilty of a high misdemeanor.

"SEC. 14. (1) A circuit judge may be designated to act as district judge in any district of his circuit or of attached territory in any case where a district judge might be so designated.

"(2) Such designation may be made by the senior circuit judge (who may designate himself) whenever he is satisfied that the occasion therefor exists and that the public interests so require.

"(3) This section shall apply to the circuit judges formerly comprising the Commerce Court.

"SEC. 15. (1) A district judge of a district (called herein the home district) may be designated to act in any district of another circuit or its attached territory (called herein the aided district) in place of or in aid of a judge thereof, in case—

"(a) The senior circuit judge of the aided district shall certify to the Chief Justice of the United States that the public interests require the designation of an additional judge or judges in such district and that it is impracticable to supply the need from among the judges of his circuit; and

"(b) The senior circuit judge of the circuit of the home district shall certify to the Chief Justice of the United States that neither the business of that district nor of other districts in that circuit will suffer by the proposed designation.

"(2) Such designation may be made by the Chief Justice if, in his judgment, the public interests so require.

"(3) For the purposes of this section the District of Columbia is to be deemed one of the districts which may be aided and likewise a circuit, the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia is to be deemed a district court to which designations may be made, the justices of the court of appeals as circuit judges, and the chief justice thereof as the senior.

"SEC. 16. (1) The designation provided for by sections 13, 14, and 15 shall be in writing, signed by the judge or justice designating, and shall specify the district aided, the judge designated, and the period of service.

"(2) It shall be filed in the clerk's office and entered in the minutes of the district court of the aided district; and when so filed and entered shall be conclusive evidence of all the facts necessary to support it.

"(3) A certified copy shall at once be furnished by the clerk to the judges designated; also to the judge of the aided district; also (if under section 15) to the senior circuit judge of each of the two circuits.

"SEC. 17. (1) During the period of service named the judge designated under sections 13, 14, or 15 shall have all the duties, powers, and rights of the judge of the aided district (excepting the power of appointment to a statutory position or of permanent designation of newspaper or depository of funds): Provided, however, That in case a trial has been entered upon before such period of service has expired and has not been concluded, the period of service shall be deemed to be extended until the trial has been concluded.

"(2) Any designated judge who has held court in another district than his own shall have power, notwithstanding his absence from such district and the expiration of the time limit in his designation, to decide all matters which have been submitted to him within such district, to decide motions for new trials, settle bills of exceptions, certify or authenticate narratives of testimony, or perform any other act required by law or the rules to be performed in order to prepare any case so tried by him for review in an appellate court; and his action thereon in writing filed with the clerk of the court where the trial or hearing was had shall be as valid as if such action had been taken by him within that district and within the period of his designation.

"(3) Whenever, pursuant to any law, more than one district judge is authorized to hold court in the same district, each may, separately, but at the same time, hold a district court and discharge the judicial duties of the district judge therein, but subject to section 23 hereof.

"SEC. 18. (1) Any power given by sections 13, 14, or 15 to the senior circuit judge may be exercised by the circuit judge who, on account of the illness or absence from the circuit of the senior, is acting as such.

"(2) In case of vacancy in the office of Chief Justice, or his disability from illness or absence, any power given to him by section 15 may be exercised by the senior associate justice."

SEC. 4. That section 118 of the Judicial Code, as amended by the act approved February 25, 1919 (40 Stat. L., p. 1156), be, and the same hereby is, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 118. There shall be in the second, seventh, and eighth circuits, respectively, four circuit judges; in the fourth circuit, three circuit judges; and in each of the other circuits, three circuit judges, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. All circuit judges shall receive a salary of $8,500 a year each, payable monthly. Each circuit judge shall reside within his circuit, and when appointed shall be a resident of the circuit for which he is appointed. The circuit judges in each circuit shall be judges of the circuit court of appeals in that circuit, and it shall be the duty of each circuit judge in each circuit to sit as one of the judges of the circuit court of appeals in that circuit from time to time according to law: Provided, That nothing in this section shall be construed to prevent any circuit judge holding district court or otherwise, as provided for and authorized in other sections of this act."

SEC. 5. Regular or special terms of the district courts of the district of New Mexico may be held in any incorporated municipality in the State of New Mexico. Regular or special terms of said court other than at the capital of said State shall be held at such time or times and at such place or places as the judge of said district court shall by order prescribe, and such order may be changed from time to time as may be deemed necessary in the public interest: Provided, however, That at any place where such regular or special terms of court may be so ordered to be held a suitable building in which to hold such term or terms of court shall be available without expense to the Government of the United States.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the appointment of additional district judges for certain courts of the United States, to provide for annual conferences of certain judges of United States courts, to amend certain sections of the Judicial Code relating to the designation, assignment, and appointment of judges outside their districts, and for the appointment of an additional circuit judge in the fourth circuit."

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Overhue, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 7) to amend section 2 of the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution to authorize the operation of Government-owned radio stations for the use of the general public, and for other purposes," approved June 5, 1920.

The message also announced that the House returned to the Senate, in compliance with its request, the bill (S. 2992) authorizing the Secretary of War to furnish certain information for historical purposes to the adjutants general of the several States and the District of Columbia and making an appropriation therefor.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. NELSON presented memorials of sundry citizens of Fergus Falls, Minn., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation providing for compulsory Sunday observance in the District of Columbia, which were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. CAPPER presented a resolution adopted by Crawford County Farmers' Union, No. 25, at Girard, Kans., March 28, 1922, favoring the enactment of legislation to stabilize prices of the principal farm products, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. LADD presented resolutions of Mill Creek Local, No. 28, and Four Lakes Local, No. 51, both of the Western Progressive Grange, in the State of Washington, favoring the passage of Senate bill 2664, the Ladd honest money bill, which were referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

He also presented a petition of members of Red River Lodge, No. 379, Brotherhood of Railway Clerks, Freight Handlers, Express and Station Employees, of Fargo, N. Dak., praying for acceptance of the offer of Henry Ford relative to the Muscle Shoals project, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented the petitions of John Skubina and 70 others, of Center and vicinity; Mrs. A. O. Stoen and 8 others, of Buffalo Springs; Otto Olson and 11 others, of Oriska; Alex Ferguson and 32 others, of Lankin; C. O. Peterson and 3 others, of Nortonville; L. M. Haugen and 19 others, of Taylor; Mrs. J. Muffle and 37 others, of Straubville and vicinity; Fred Brebmer and 35 others, of Wales and vicinity; Paul and Bertha Roseman, of Upham; and Mrs. Noah Willett and 21 others, of Haynes, all in the State of North Dakota, praying for the enactment of legislation reviving the United States Grain Corporation so as to stabilize prices of certain farm products, which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. FERNALD. Mr. President, I report back from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, without amendment, the bill (H. R. 10864) to authorize an appropriation to enable the Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau to provide for the construction of additional hospital facilities and to provide medical, surgical, and hospital services and supplies for persons who served in the World War, the Spanish-American War, the Philippine Insurrection, and the Boxer rebellion, and are patients of the United States Veterans' Bureau.

I do not intend to call up the bill for consideration to-night, but I wish to give notice that on the next legislative day I shall ask unanimous consent for its consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

Mr. WALSH of Montana, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 2921) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 593) thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. MOSES:

A bill (S. 3412) authorizing the Secretary of War and the Auditor for the War Department to consider and settle the claim of Mrs. John D. Hall, widow of the late Col. John D. Hall, United States Army, retired, for personal property destroyed in the earthquake at San Francisco, Calif. (with an accompanying paper); to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. CALDER:

A bill (S. 3413) for the relief of the city of New York; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. OWEN:

A bill (S. 3414) to amend section 101 of the Judicial Code, as amended; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. HARRELD:

A bill (S. 3415) to render final judgment on any claims of the Eastern Emigrant and Western Cherokee, Creek, and Seminole Indians against the United States in relation to tribal lands, funds, and property; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

AMENDMENT OF AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HARRELD submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 10730, the Agricultural appropriation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed, as follows:

On page 75, strike out the remainder of the paragraph on lines 16, 17, 18, and 19 beginning with "$6,500" on said line 16, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "$12,500, of which the Secretary is hereby authorized to use not exceeding $3,000 for the purpose of building a cottage for the herdsman, and additional sheds, stalls, and pens for the protection and care of said animals."

WORLD WAR FOREIGN DEBT COMMISSION.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that next Monday at 2 o'clock I shall ask the Senate to go into executive session for the purpose of considering the nominations of Senator SMOOT and Representative BURTON as members of the Foreign Debt Commission.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, rule 38 provides, with reference to nominations, that—all information communicated or remarks made by a Senator when acting upon nominations concerning the character or qualifications of the person nominated, also all votes upon any nomination, shall be kept secret.

That, I take it, necessitates, without some action by the Senate, that the proceedings to which the Senator from Iowa has referred shall be in closed executive session.

I think every Member of the body feels that, so far as personal qualifications are concerned, no word can be said in derogation of either of the gentlemen named, Senator SMOOT or Representative BURTON. If I expressed my own personal conviction about the matter, I should say they were both preeminently qualified for the position. The sole question for consideration—and I am very sure the sole question that will be discussed—is the question of the eligibility of these two gentlemen under the Constitution, and likewise the related question as to the policy of making nominations for such position from among the Members of both Houses.

In view of that situation of affairs, I ask unanimous consent that the subject be considered in open executive session.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I shall have to object to that request.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is objection.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 10730, the bill making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate as in Committee of the Whole proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 10730) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, it is the desire to have a short executive session; and I suggest that the bill be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. McNARY. I ask unanimous consent that the bill, which has become the unfinished business, may be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

GOVERNMENT-OWNED RADIO STATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I present a conference report on House joint resolution 7 and I ask for its present consideration.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 7) to amend section 2 of the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution to authorize the operation of Government-owned radio stations for the use of the general public, and for other purposes," approved June 5, 1920, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 2: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of said amendment insert the following: "on June 30, 1925, except that all such rights conferred by this section in the Republic of China shall terminate and cease on January 1, 1924"; and the Senate agree to the same.

C. S. PAGE,
MILES POINDEXTER,
FREDERICK HALE,
CLAUDE A. SWANSON,
KEY PITTMAN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

WILLIAM S. GREENE,
WALLACE H. WHITE, Jr.,
CARL R. CHINDBLOM,
L. LAZARO,
W. B. BANKHEAD,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator from Washington desire to take up the report this evening?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I would be very glad to do so. The House has approved the conference report, and it is a very simple matter. It merely extends for a period of three years the existing law——

Mr. KING. That is, it gives the United States exclusive control over certain radio operations?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Oh, no; that is not the effect of it at all. It authorizes, not the exclusive use, but the use of naval radio facilities on the Pacific—it does not apply to the Atlantic—for press messages for three years and for commercial messages in cases where there are no private facilities available.

Mr. KING. I have no objection to the facilities being used for press messages if they are not used for purely political purposes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Let me ask the Senator, Is there any effort in the bill to regulate the wave length?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Not at all. It does not deal with that subject.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the report of the committee of conference.

The report was agreed to.

ADDRESS BY SENATOR RANSDELL.

Mr. McKINLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD in 8-point type a speech made on April 5, 1922, by the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] before the Massachusetts Chamber of Commerce entitled "Carrying the ocean to the Great Lakes."

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD in 8-point type, as follows:

SPEECH OF UNITED STATES SENATOR JOSEPH E. RANSDELL, OF LOUISIANA, BEFORE THE MASSACHUSETTS CHAMBER OF COMMERCE, AT BOSTON, MASS., APRIL 5, 1922.

CARRYING THE OCEAN TO THE GREAT LAKES.

The proposed deep-water channel connecting the St. Lawrence and the Great Lakes is a project of vast national importance. It contemplates the improvement of the St. Lawrence River to deep water in Lake Ontario, so that ships drawing 25 feet can penetrate to the western end of that lake. From that point connection will be made with Lake Erie through the Welland Canal, now being enlarged by Canada to a similar depth, carrying the ship into Lake Erie.

This project has been under the most careful investigation by the International Joint Commission of the United States and Canada, and the favorable report of that body was presented to the Senate of the United States by President Harding on the 16th of last January. According to this report, it will cost about $252,000,000 to overcome all obstructions in the St. Lawrence, and incidentally these works will develop 1,464,000 continuous horsepower at a point on the eastern end of the international boundary between New York and Canada. One-half of this, equal to 732,000 horsepower, will belong to the United States, the other to Canada. The site of the great dam at Cornwall, N. Y., where this power is to be generated, is about 275 miles from Boston and 300 miles from New York City.

Without attempting to discuss details, I may say that the construction of the contemplated deep canals through the shallows of the St. Lawrence and around Niagara Falls will permit the great fleet of Lake boats, which handle annually about 100,000,000 tons, to carry their cargoes from any point on the Lakes directly to tidewater at Montreal, Quebec, or Halifax, and with very slight strengthening these same Lake vessels, some of which carry 14,000 tons of cargo, can continue their voyage down the coast to Boston, New York, and other points. It will also permit, without any further enlargement of the Lake harbors and connecting channels between them, ocean-going vessels drawing 20 to 21 feet to penetrate to any point on the Lakes. In other words, this project will connect the Great Lakes of our northern border, the largest and finest body of fresh water on earth, covering an area of 95,000 square miles, with all the oceans of the world, and will give to the people who live on their shores and adjacent to them the great benefits of ocean transportation for the innumerable products of their farms, mines, and factories, and for the commodities which they buy in large quantities from other lands.

The wonderful growth of the Great Lakes region in population, wealth, and general development is one of the marvels of the past half century. Cities like Buffalo, Cleveland, Detroit, Chicago, Milwaukee, and Duluth are truly magic cities, and the magician's wand which brought them into being was the cheap transportation of the Lakes on whose shores they are situated.

Nearly 40,000,000 of America's best citizens live in this favored region or will derive very great direct benefits from the project; hence it is truly national in scope, for whatever affects so materially more than one-third the people of the Republic is of great interest to the whole. If the growth of population for the next 50 years keeps pace with that of the last 50, we may expect an increase in these regions to 100,000,000.

All of these people are unanimously in favor of the St. Lawrence project, for they believe it will be of immense benefit to them in carrying their surplus products to the ocean at cheap water rates, about the same relatively as the rates which have caused the marvelous development of their section. They realize that more and more it is necessary for them to have cheaper rates and to guard against congestion in shipments to and from the North Atlantic seaboard, from which they have suffered so severely during the past decade. They realize that the people in far-off Oregon and Washington are closer to Boston and New York via the Panama Canal, so far as freight rates are concerned, than are those of Iowa. They realize that the center of their great wheat-growing section is from 1,000 to 1,200 miles away from deep water, whereas the grain centers of other countries, such as Russia, Australia, and the Argentine, are only about 250 miles from the sea. This is a great handicap to them. They feel that if the ocean can be carried westward into the heart of the continent, 1,400 miles from Montreal, to Chicago and Duluth, thereby giving them ocean ships on the northern boundary, just as the people of the West, the South, and the East enjoy the benefit of ships, it will place the Middle West on terms of parity in transportation with other States of the Union.

This briefly is the project, and this is the way the West feels about it.

Beyond a question the project is a mighty one, worthy of the best thought of all economists and statesmen. When carried to completion, its effects will be marked, not only on the vast commerce now moving between the Atlantic seaboard and the Great Lakes but also between the Great Lakes and the Gulf. It will make a new channel on which a large quantity of freight will move; it will be comparable to Suez and Panama, the construction of which changed trade routes of the world; and just as these two interoceanic canals have proved the utmost benefit to mankind by shortening distances thousands of miles and cheapening freight rates immeasurably, so will the St. Lawrence oceanic canal result, perhaps in a smaller degree, in like benefits to the people of Canada and the United States.

Transportation affects every man, woman, and child in the land and enters into our life in the most intimate manner. It is so commonplace that few of us realize it, and anything which greatly cheapens the cost of transporting from vast centers of population, living thousands of miles apart and exchanging immense volumes of commerce of every kind and sort that enters into modern civilization, is of vital import to national welfare.

The only point to be considered is, Will such a canal as that proposed on the St. Lawrence really cheapen in a material degree freight rates from the center of the country to the Atlantic and vice versa? Will this cheapening in the aggregate amount to anything like as much annually as the total cost of the project, which its enthusiastic friends claim for it? If so, there can be but one answer, and that is we must construct the project as quickly as possible regardless of expense.

It is no argument to say that nature has placed serious obstructions in the way, which can only be overcome at heavy cost. Greater obstructions were overcome by the Suez Canal, connecting the Mediterranean with the Red Sea, and infinitely greater by the Panama Canal, which links together the Atlantic and the Pacific. The wise people of England built the Manchester Canal, at a cost of one hundred millions, to carry the sea to the wharves of that city alone. Liverpool objected more seriously to this project than any city in America is now objecting to the St. Lawrence Canal, and yet the greatest beneficiary of the Manchester Canal after its completion was the city of Liverpool, the revenues on whose commerce increased five times as much during the 13 years following the opening of that canal as they had for the same number of years before. The Kiel Canal, from the North Sea to the Baltic, was made to save about 400 miles of water distance, not to overcome a physical obstruction like that at Panama, for there has always been connection between the North Sea and the Baltic, and the Kiel Canal was merely for the purpose of saving that distance. It proved a great success financially and otherwise. The State of New York, by construction of the Erie Canal from the Great Lakes to the ocean, completed about a century ago, demonstrated in the most forceful manner the vast benefit of water transportation. The Erie Canal made New York the principal city on the continent and caused it to forge rapidly ahead of Boston and Philadelphia.

The people of America are entitled to the best possible transportation of every available kind, by highway, waterway, railway, and the air. Nothing is too good for the citizens of the freest, most enlightened, progressive, and wealthy country on earth. We lead the world in railways, both as to mileage and equipment, with every possible convenience and appliance for comfort and good service. We are well advanced in highways, though not equal in this particular to some European nations. Highway development, however, is going forward by leaps and bounds with every prospect that in our more wealthy and populous States the roads will soon be as good as any on earth. We taught the world how to fly, and great progress is being made in air navigation. We have improved many of our harbors and a few of our rivers just as effectively as any other countries, and the earth profits largely by our Panama Canal. We have received marvelous benefit from modest expenditures in deepening the harbors on the Great Lakes and the connecting channels between them.

For the country at large the average cost of transportation by rail is approximately 12$\frac{1}{10}$ mills per ton per mile. If coal is excluded, this average rises to 15 mills. The average of freight rates on the Great Lakes is 1 mill, and on the ocean it varies, according to the class of freight, from 1 to 3 mills. It would be safe to say that 2 mills per ton-mile is a fair water rate in comparison with an average rail rate of 15 mills. Let us apply these rates, by way of comparison, on shipments from Boston to Chicago and Duluth. The rail distance from Chicago to Boston is 1,034 miles and the distance by water 2,682 miles. To Duluth the relative distances are 1,513 miles by rail and 2,775 by water. The rail rate, therefore, from Boston to Chicago for a ton of freight at the present average would be $15.51 as against an estimated water rate of $5.36. The rate from Boston to Duluth would be $22.70, as compared with the water cost of $5.55. It is impossible to be exact in estimates of this kind, but these figures are substantially correct, and they certainly indicate that water rates between Boston and Lake ports are infinitely cheaper than by rail.

Present rates on a bushel of wheat carried from Chicago or Duluth to Buffalo by water amount to 2 cents or less, and on the same mileage basis, with proper allowance for delays in canals and locks, 3 to 3½ cents would be a fair rate from either of these cities to tidewater at Montreal. The lowest rates at which grain can now be carried from the West is 2 cents per bushel for 1,000 miles of transit to Buffalo and 12 cents for an average of 450 miles of railroad from Buffalo to ship side at New York or Boston, a total of 14 cents. This indicates a saving to tidewater of at least 10 cents per bushel via the St. Lawrence route; and as New York and Montreal are about equally distant from Liverpool, it would mean a saving of that amount on the through rate to that world center. The great fleet of ships on the Lakes are undoubtedly the cheapest carriers of freight on earth between ports on the Lakes; and this same cheap rate, substantially, to tidewater at Montreal or Halifax can be enjoyed by all the products of the Lake regions when the St. Lawrence route is completed. What is true of the rates on grain is also true of rates on many other products of the Great Lakes region. There is no doubt also that the St. Lawrence route will very favorably affect transportation costs between the Lakes and Atlantic coast ports, which consume a large percentage of the grain and other products of that great section. In turn, there will be a similar saving in freight in the products of the Atlantic coast shipped to the West.

It is a generally admitted principle of political economy that the price of any commodity of universal use, such as corn or wheat, is determined by the price at which the surplus of the product is sold. Liverpool is the point at which the surplus of grain of the world is disposed of. To this great city grain is shipped from the United States, Canada, Argentina, Russia, and Australia, and there, in competition with the world, the price of grain is fixed. This price, to a very great extent, governs not only as to the grain sold in the Liverpool market but in the producing countries as well. The price, therefore, to the farmers in the grain sections of our great West is the world price in the Liverpool market less the cost of transportation between the farm and England.

The American farmer receives for his entire crop of grain the Liverpool price less the freight from his farm to Liverpool. It therefore follows that if the construction of the ocean waterway from Montreal to Lake Erie reduces the freight on our grain exports to Europe 10 cents per bushel, the farmers of this country will receive for their grain, which aggregates about three and one-half billion bushels a year, an addition of 10 cents per bushel over the price of grain sold under existing freight conditions. This will mean upward of three hundred and fifty millions per year saved to American farmers on grain alone. If we estimate one-half of this amount, or 5 cents per bushel only, to be conservative, the annual freight saving on grain will be equal to one hundred and seventy-five millions. There would be a very great saving also in freights on exports of every kind, amounting in the aggregate to many millions annually, though not as much in proportion as on the grain. The West is a very large producer of manufactured commodities, such as packing-house products, autos, rails, farm machinery, and so forth, and is also extremely rich in minerals, such as iron and copper, much of which is shipped abroad. The West also consumes a large quantity of imported goods, and on these importations there would likewise be a considerable saving in freight rates.

It is my candid opinion, after careful study, that if the proposed oceanic canal is completed, so that boats having a draft of 20 to 21 feet can go to and fro between the ocean and the Great Lakes laden with the commerce of the world, the annual saving to American citizens in cheaper freights than the railroads can possibly afford to charge them would, at a very conservative figure, amount every year to more than one-half the entire cost of the proposed improvement, including the Welland Canal.

Those who fear damage to railways through the cheaper water transportation to be afforded by this project should bear in mind that rail traffic is increasing at such a rate as to cause grave fear of another railroad crisis the next time there is a revival of business. The following quotations from a recent address of Mr. Elisha Lee, vice president of the Pennsylvania Railroad, are interesting in this connection:

> Traffic on our American railroads, measured in ton-miles, doubles once in a decade. This rate of increase has been maintained for at least two generations with surprising regularity, despite the varying cycles of booms, panics, and depressions through which the country has passed meanwhile.
> The next time our country has a real revival of business we shall in all probability be confronted with the most severe congestion of railroad traffic and the greatest inadequacy of railroad facilities ever experienced in our history. When that happens rates will be lost sight of. Everyone will be clamoring for service. Nothing could more quickly check a wave of prosperity than the inability of our railroad facilities to handle traffic which good times will create.
> I am firmly convinced that we face such a condition with almost absolute certainty in the not remote future.

This statement is corroborated by a very prominent man in railroad circles, in whose judgment I have confidence; and the following figures recently reported by the Interstate Commerce Commission, showing our railroad traffic since 1890, substantiate their statements:

	Net ton-miles.
1890	76,207,047,298
1900	141,599,157,270
1910	255,016,910,451
1920	447,278,126,869

Our experience during the 1918 railroad crisis is too recent and its effects too keenly felt to allow us to be unmindful of the dreadful calamity of such a congestion of traffic as Mr. Lee predicts and the statistics from the Interstate Commerce Commission indicate.

The mass of traffic to be handled 10 years from now will be so great that every facility of transportation will be required—highways, railways, waterways, and the air. The shifting of some of the bulk products of the Lakes to the St. Lawrence route will be of immense benefit to the railroads in relieving them of expenditures and leave their present tracks available for local and high-grade freight.

I am not one of those who believe that the farmers have been badly treated, and that other classes of our citizens have received greater favors at the hands of the Government, but in the ordinary course of affairs it seems that agriculturists have not been so fortunate as some of the others. Agriculture is the source, the basis, and the foundation of most of our national wealth.

Everything we eat and wear comes originally from the soil or the waters of the sea. The only original sources of wealth are the products of the farm, forest, mine, and sea, and the persons engaged in producing these things are the best customers of our merchants and manufacturers; hence there is the strongest community of interest between them, and there should be close cooperation. Wise statesmanship and a spirit of fairness toward all our citizens demands that everything possible be done for these people upon whom we all depend. It is undoubtedly proper to assist these large classes of our citizenship by giving cheap transportation to their principal products, thereby enhancing the price thereof, while at the same time aiding substantially the merchants, manufacturers, and all others in the Great Lakes section of 40,000,000 people.

I have spoken in general terms, and shall now specialize somewhat. The New England States, with the exception of Maine, which has a fair supply of timber, have practically no raw materials of any kind, but they are very rich in brains and energy. No section of the Union is inhabited by more industrious, frugal, hard-working, sensible men than New England. If dependent upon the resources of their own section, however, they would soon starve. They draw raw material from every part of the Union, and from every country on earth, and convert it in their innumerable factories into every imaginable article for the use and comfort of mankind. Most of these factories are operated by steam-electric power created by coal from Pennsylvania and West Virginia, the cost of which is increasing rapidly. At this moment the greatest coal strike ever known grips our country, and no one can foretell its effect upon the price and supply of this essential article. Moreover, scientists tell us that the supply of coal in the Pennsylvania and West Virginia fields, the only mines in the Union near the Atlantic seaboard, is rapidly being consumed, with the prospect that the seams which can be mined cheaply will be exhausted within two or three generations.

Cheap motive power is becoming more and more important to New England. As an illustration, cotton factories, which for a long time constituted a great percentage of their business, are rapidly being moved to the South, where raw cotton is grown in close proximity to the mills, and abundance of water power is available at much lower cost than the New Englander pays for his power generated by coal.

What happened to cotton may be expected by New England in other things unless she can find cheap motive power. The future is bound to bring greater competition in production and distribution of manufactured products. Sections which have abundant supplies of water power or coal will be able to manufacture so much cheaper than communities where motive power is very high that inevitably factories will be compelled to move where there is cheap power. As inventive genius marches onward, always requiring more work from machinery and less from man, the proportion of motive power to man power increases, and the relative importance of the cost of fuel becomes greater.

New England has been obliged to pay very high rates for coal during the past three years, and has suffered much anxiety from strikes, traffic congestion, and other untoward conditions. Surely none but the most confirmed optimist can look forward to a cheapening of coal, especially when we consider that our large population and our big exports of this commodity are rapidly diminishing the supply along the Atlantic seaboard. It is, therefore, imperative for New England to look out for other and cheaper motive power.

Water-power plants, once constructed of solid concrete, will last forever with very slight change in the supply or the price of the motive agent. Coal mines become exhausted after a few generations; the price of coal fluctuates greatly, with a constant rising tendency, and the coal miners frequently strike, with a resultant increase of price and diminution of supply.

Experts differ in opinion as to the relative costs of hydroelectric as compared with steam power, but all admit that hydroelectric is much cheaper. I visited last week a big steam electric power plant at Gorgas, in north Alabama, which is located at a coal mine, where coal delivered into the furnaces costs only $2 per ton. The managers told me that the cost of this steam electric power was much greater than that of the hydroelectric power generated by the same company, even though there was no transportation charge whatsoever on the coal. I was told by the vice president of the Alabama Power Co. that in 1907, when the hydroelectric plants of his company were first developed, the cost of horsepower to the consumer in Alabama was $72 per annum, and in 1917 only $21 per annum. In the State of Mississippi, which has no hydroelectric plants, the cost of horsepower was $96 per annum in 1907, and $93 per annum in 1917.

Professional Paper 123, "A superpower system for the region between Boston and Washington," recently published by the Geological Survey, states that the power from the St. Lawrence can be delivered at Northampton, Mass., for 4.6 mills per kilowatt hour. When this figure is compared with the production cost of power by steam electric utility plants in New England, 27.5 mills per kilowatt hour, given in the same report, it would appear that the chief question of interest to New England in regard to the St. Lawrence project should be: What is the earliest possible date on which power from the St. Lawrence can be placed on the market in New England?

Without attempting to give the relative prices to the New England consumer of hydroelectric power generated on the St. Lawrence, as compared with steam electric power, it is safe to say that the hydroelectric power would be very much cheaper.

I do not presume to say at what price this power from the St. Lawrence should be sold, nor whether or not the price should be such an amount as would pay the interest on the cost of the entire waterway improvements and amortize the debt within a period of 30 to 40 years, as has been suggested. Those are details which can be worked out to the best interests of all, and with full justice to the consumers of the power. Our Government should raise the money for its portion of the expense of the project by an issue of bonds, so that the expense will fall upon the Nation. Whatever revenue arises from the sale of the electric horsepower can be credited on the cost of the enterprise, but I would not favor fixing the price of the power high enough to pay the interest and amortization of the debt, unless that price happens to be a fair and proper one.

I am decidedly opposed to charging tolls on this waterway, and sincerely hope that when constructed it will be open and free to all the world. The people of Canada do not charge tolls on the Welland Canal nor do those of the Empire State charge tolls on their great canal system. Our Government has never charged tolls for passage through the Sault Ste. Marie locks, the Detroit River, nor the locks of the Ohio, nor for the vast improvements made on the Mississippi, nor for the use of your own magnificent Boston Harbor, nor for the harbors at New York and other great cities. Why, then, should we charge tolls on the St. Lawrence?

It is necessary in acting upon questions of this character to take into consideration the greater good of the greater number, rather than look to selfish interests of the smaller number. I can not conceive how any part of the United States would be seriously injured by the proposed waterway. The State of New York with its great industrial canal system, on which it has expended out of its own funds about $175,000,000, seems to be more opposed to the project than any other section, but I feel that New York would get as much, if not more, benefit from it than any other State, though a portion of the grain which now seeks an outlet through New York City would find direct passage to the ocean through the St. Lawrence, and to some extent there would be a reduction of New York's grain movement. New York is now, and always will be, the metropolis of America, the center of population and of wealth, and whatever benefits in such a big, broad way the vast interior of the Nation adjacent to the Great Lakes, thereby adding enormously to the national wealth, is bound to benefit the leading city of the Nation.

Another very important consideration in connection with New York is that the 1,460,000 horsepower developed at Cornwall will be in closer proximity to the heart of the Empire State, and especially to such cities as Albany, Schenectady, Syracuse, and Rochester, than to any other big centers of population. These cities lie on the banks of the Erie Canal and are served by two great railroad systems with six parallel lines. There is no better transportation system anywhere in America than along the Erie Canal with its six railroads. This region is ideally situated to become the greatest manufacturing center in America, because of its cheap and efficient transportation for all raw materials brought to its factories and for distribution of their finished products. When to these advantages is added the cheap electricity generated by the great plant at Cornwall, the interior section of New York would have wonderful superiority over any other section. Moreover, this cheap electricity can be carried not alone to these cities but also to Buffalo and to New York City itself. Buffalo is about 250 miles distant from the plant and New York City about 300 miles, which is within feasible transmission distance.

The lower Mississippi Valley need have no fear that this canal will injure it. The same general arguments apply to that section, and surely if there be a vast increase of population, manufacture, wealth, and all that goes to make a great nation in the regions adjacent to the Great Lakes, the lower Mississippi is bound to derive great benefits therefrom.

The Mississippi River and its 16,000 miles of navigable streams will soon be connected by a 9-foot canal with the Great Lakes at Chicago. This wonderful system, when improved, as it should and must be in the near future, will permit the carriage of freight by 2,000-ton barges from the Mississippi, Ohio, and Missouri River sections to the Great Lakes, thence through the Erie Canal, and the improved St. Lawrence to the Atlantic, and vice versa, to the Gulf, thereby giving the valley an outlet to the sea at both ends.

The people of the Mississippi Valley should, and I believe will, join hands with those of our northern border in giving to that section a perfect system of improved and connected waterways, and the statesmen of that region will assist in pushing to rapid completion the projects for improving the great rivers of the valley, which have already been too long delayed.

In the immediate future the United States will derive a great deal more benefit from this project than the Dominion of Canada, but the great statesmen of that wonderful Commonwealth, foreseeing its rapid growth, seem to be willing to pay one-half of the enterprise. This indicates statesmanship of the highest order, and should be a lesson to all. The people of Canada and the United States have lived together as brethren for more than a hundred years with not a single fortress or soldier along the whole 4,000 miles of their boundary from the Atlantic to the Pacific. Canada has heavy investments in this country, and we should reciprocate by like investments in her borders. The proposed project would increase, if that be possible, the present friendship and cordiality between the two nations, and bind them in ties of mutual interest, with their people working side by side for the common good of all. Our relations should become more intimate with Canada for many business reasons. This waterway will be a strong additional link in the long chain of friendship which now unites the two nations, and which I hope and believe will last until the end of time.

In conclusion, I believe in the St. Lawrence project. It is needed as an adjunct to our transportation system. The benefits to transportation are incomparably greater than the cost of the project. The power to be developed is much cheaper than coal, and is necessary for the factories, both present and prospective, of the adjacent sections of the United States. The benefits to be derived in a general way will be very great. It is my earnest hope that negotiations may be speedily entered upon between our country and Canada for the construction of this waterway and carried to an early and successful conclusion.

ADDRESS BY SENATOR REED.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] delivered in St. Louis recently an address, a copy of which I have just read from the St. Louis Post-Dispatch under date March 19, 1922. The speech deals with a subject of vital importance to the American people, namely, the fundamental principles of our Government and the steps needed to safeguard and protect the liberties of the people. In this day of false isms and false political philosophy, and when opportunism and transitory policies are urged with so much thoughtless and foolish vehemence, it is fortunate that attention is challenged to the principles which underlie this Republic and appeals are made for their maintenance in order that the work of the fathers of the Republic may not be destroyed.

I ask unanimous consent that the address of the Senator from Missouri may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD in 8-point type as follows:

LAW AND ORDER.

When Washington raised the standard of revolt there was not in all the world a single free nation of size and importance.

Mankind suffered beneath the double yoke of intellectual and political despotism.

Ruling families, ceaselessly carrying on against each other wars of revenge, religion, territory, and trade, made common cause in the oppression of the masses of men.

Resistance to authority was denounced as defiance of God.

The impious doctrine that kings ruled by divine right was universally taught, universally accepted, and universally enforced.

It was asserted that the common man enjoyed the right to hold property and to labor with his hands as a privilege granted by the divinely appointed monarch.

The seizure of the persons, property, and effects of the subject could be accomplished without other authority than the will of the sovereign.

The citizen could be cast into prison without charge and without trial, his home invaded without warrant, his papers and effects rifled and confiscated by royal soldiery and constabulary; the women of his household were abused under sanction of law.

BARBARITIES OF EARLY DAYS.

These odious prerogatives were enforced with barbarous cruelty in various countries of the world. At one period over 120 acts were in Great Britain punishable by death. The ghastly array embraced alike armed rebellion and the killing of a rabbit on the hunting preserve of a noble, and from the practice of religion according to the tenets of the Catholic Church and to the teaching of the alphabet to a Catholic child. Even the imaginary crime of "imagining the death of the King" brought the ax of the executioner.

The ruling monarchs devised punishments of diabolic ferocity. Men and women were broken on the wheel, tortured upon the rack, hanged from gibbets, drawn and quartered, and burned alive at the stake.

Revolution alone mitigated these horrors. In England certain fundamental rights had been wrested from the King. But in England, as elsewhere, no right had ever been granted save at the point of a sword.

The American Revolution was the first complete and successful challenge to autocracy.

Because America made herself free, all the world is becoming free.

But if the fathers had only broken British thralldom the people would not have attained liberty. The Republic born of strife and blood would have ended in blood and anarchy.

The tyranny of kingly government would have been succeeded by the tyranny of the mob; the despotism of hereditary rulers by the despotism of powerful individuals.

ENFORCEMENT OF LAW.

There can be no liberty save under the rule of law. There can be no liberty under the law unless the laws are sacredly observed and faithfully enforced.

The remedy for bad laws is never to be found in their breach. There is but one way to get rid of an odious law and that is by its repeal in the manner and form provided in the Constitution. There is but one way to alter the Constitution and that is by the method in that instrument prescribed.

If this fundamental principle is abandoned in one case, it can be disregarded in all cases. In such an event the end of the rule of law has come and for it is substituted the caprice of the mob or the dictation of the powerful.

The obligation I am discussing rests alike upon the officeholder and the ordinary citizen. Indeed, violation of a law by a public official is more dangerous and culpable than violation by the ordinary citizen.

These truths were known to the framers of the Republic. They especially appreciated the tendency of those clothed with office to usurp to themselves powers not granted. They fully understood that usurpation is, in fact, despotism, whether it be exercised by a parliament or a congress, a kaiser or a gendarme, a president or a policeman.

To forefend against these age-old tendencies the Constitution was ordained. By it the powers of the Federal Government were strictly defined and expressly limited to prevent usurpation and centralization. They divided the powers of government into three separate and coordinate branches, each absolutely independent of the other, and each possessing specific powers which it was authorized and directed to exercise without interference by the other branches of the Government. The system was one of checks and balances. The fundamental and controlling thought being that the powers of government should never be concentrated in the hands of any one man, or any group of men, and that no act of government could take place save under the restraint of the other branches of the Government. Accordingly, while they provided for a President, and conferred upon him certain powers, these powers can, in fact, only be exercised with the consent of a Congress. For while the President is made Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy, there can be neither army nor navy established or maintained except by act of Congress. While the President can execute laws that are already passed his arm can be paralyzed by the refusal of Congress to appropriate money.

SAFEGUARDS ESTABLISHED.

Upon the other hand, were Congress to undertake to usurp to itself powers not granted by the Constitution, the Executive could balk its designs by refusing to execute unconstitutional laws, and the judiciary, by the processes of the courts, could likewise protest against unconstitutional statutes. Besides these safeguards the powers of the legislative body were divided between two houses elected by different constituencies, the members being removable by the people at short intervals.

From what I have said it follows that usurpation by one branch of the Government of the constitutional powers of another branch is a direct defiance of the spirit of the Constitution. Likewise the supine surrender by one branch of the Government to the dictation of another branch is equally destructive and even more vicious because its accomplishment involves the basest of betrayals by those in whom has been reposed a sacred trust. If the Supreme Court were to permit either the President or the Congress to dictate the decisions of the court they would thereby betray the people and destroy the court. If the Congress or the Supreme Court were to attempt to coerce the President as to matters within the just limits of his powers they would be guilty of usurpation. Likewise, if the President were to tamely surrender to Congress the powers conferred on him by the Constitution he would have betrayed his office and violated his trust. By parity of reasoning, as well as by direct deduction, if the President were to coerce Congress he would be a usurper, and if Congress were to abandon its independent judgment and make itself subservient to the presidential will, the Congress would have abandoned the purpose of its creation, betrayed the people, and nullified the Constitution.

Whenever the American Congress ceases to independently and fairly perform the duties imposed upon it, when it becomes the subservient tool of an Executive, the liberties of the American people will be dead and the Republic will have become a despotism regardless of its name and regardless of its form.

"WOULD BECOME DESPOTISM."

Lying, therefore, at the very foundation of our liberties is the great principle of law that each agency of the Government must separately, independently, and fearlessly exercise its function reposed in it under the Constitution. When Congress ceases to perform its duties with courage and intelligence, when it subordinates its will to that of the Executive, America will have become a despotism ruled by a single mind.

The principle of representative government will have been destroyed. Congress will have become a mere board of registers to record the sovereign will. We shall have reached the condition of Germany, where the Reichstag recorded the will of the Kaiser.

The second proposition I venture to advance is that the Constitution and all parts of the Constitution are equally sacred.

No one of its provisions can be subordinated to another provision. All are entitled to respect. The doctrine that in order to enforce one provision of the Constitution other provisions are to be trampled under foot is odius and gravely dangerous. The claim that necessity warrants the violation of any part of the Constitution, if indulged, would reduce that sacred instrument to a scrap of paper. I assert there is no principle of the Constitution which can not be enforced and every other part of the Constitution preserved intact.

The claim that certain of the provisions of the Constitution may be disregarded upon the plea of necessity is the assertion that those qualified with power may nullify the provisions of the instrument whenever in their judgment such action is desirable. This is only one way of asserting that the will of the officeholder is superior to the fundamental law of the land.

EFFECT OF DISREGARDING LAW.

The doctrine I am discussing could be employed at any moment to strike down every right granted by the Constitution. The right of trial by jury could be abrogated whenever those in authority saw fit to pretend that juries would not enforce the law. Religious freedom could be destroyed whenever fanaticism controlled the minds of those in office. Liberty of speech and of the press could be stricken down if those armed with authority saw fit to assert that freedom of speech and of the press were inimical to the State. The right of peaceable assembly could be denied upon the pretext that gatherings of the people were dangerous to the State. The sanctity of the home and of the guaranties against unreasonable searches and seizures for which the Revolutionary fathers fought could be violated at will by every officer decorated with a star and armed with a gun. In brief, we would be speedily brought to a state as bad as Russia under the Czars, France under the Bourbons, Spain under Philip II.

There is but one temple in which liberty can find security. Its pillars are the Constitution, its walls the laws enacted by the sovereign people, its guardians ministers of justice who guard the portals alike against the anarchy of the mob and the sophistry of false doctrinaires. Thus far happily we have in the main kept the faith. Occasional violations have uniformly aroused a just resentment, which has forced abandonment.

By the pursuit of these policies we have made our Nation great and have established a civilization which has commanded the admiration of the world.

GREAT POLICIES OF STATE.

Along with a respect for law, our Nation has from the first adhered to certain great policies of state. Among these has been the principle that America shall not embark in schemes of empires; that she shall pursue her own high course, without infringement upon the rights of other peoples.

It has been laid up among the very fundamentals that we shall not entangle ourselves in the broils, controversies, and intrigues of the Old World. The pursuit of this course has gained for us the good will, the respect, and even the affection of all mankind. Washington, Jefferson, and all the fathers knew that we could not interfere with the affairs of other nations without subjecting ourselves to danger of interference by other nations with our affairs.

Under these policies America has prospered beyond any other nation whose story is recorded in history. Within less than a century and a half of time we have developed from one of the weakest to the most powerful Nation on earth, from the poorest to the richest. We have amalgamated the many bloods of many races of men and are producing a typical American, and developing a marvelous civilization. In the political firmament we have been the pillar of cloud by day and the pillar of fire by night, guiding and encouraging by our example all the nations of the earth. Because of America's example, fetters have been broken from the arms of millions of serfs and slaves, liberty has become a sacred word upon the lips of all the living; dynasties have fallen, tyrants have been hurled from their thrones, and prison gates have been opened. The great white light of American liberty has illuminated the night of ignorance and fear through which, for centuries, the innumerable masses of men groped in hopeless despair. Let us keep the faith. Let us steer by the stars which have hitherto guided us over safe seas.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 5 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate adjourn until Monday at 12 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, April 10, 1922, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate April 7 (legislative day of April 5), 1922.

POSTMASTERS.

ALABAMA.

Herbert C. Collins to be postmaster at Geneva, Ala., in place of W. K. Kenan. Incumbent's commission expired January 24, 1922.

ARKANSAS.

Rosse G. Roberts to be postmaster at Fulton, Ark. Office became presidential July 1, 1920.

Carl G. Nielsen to be postmaster at Dermott, Ark., in place of J. E. Leeper, deceased.

FLORIDA.

George W. Gleason to be postmaster at Eau Gallie, Fla., in place of W. R. Roesch. Incumbent's commission expired January 31, 1922.

Hattie M. Flagg to be postmaster at Lake Wales, Fla., in place of L. B. Riles, removed.

GEORGIA.

Daniel F. Davenport to be postmaster at Americus, Ga., in place of D. F. Davenport. Incumbent's commission expired February 5, 1922.

IOWA.

John L. Gallagher to be postmaster at Eddyville, Iowa, in place of Frank Kussant. Incumbent's commission expired January 24, 1922.

Frederick W. Steele to be postmaster at Walker, Iowa, in place of L. L. Hamblin. Incumbent's commission expired January 24, 1922.

KANSAS.

Charles N. Shafer to be postmaster at Fredonia, Kans., in place of E. F. Hudson. Incumbent's commission expired February 4, 1922.

KENTUCKY.

James H. Thompson to be postmaster at Ewing, Ky. Office became presidential October 1, 1920.

Edgar P. Catron to be postmaster at Junction City, Ky. Office became presidential July 1, 1920.

MAINE.

Osmond S. Waite to be postmaster at North Jay, Me. Office became presidential October 1, 1921.

MICHIGAN.

Earl E. Parker to be postmaster at Cement City, Mich. Office became presidential April 1, 1921.

Elfreda L. Mulligan to be postmaster at Grand Marais, Mich., Office became presidential January 1, 1922.

MONTANA.

Lizzie Gorsuch to be postmaster at Winnett, Mont., in place of Lizzie Gorsuch. Incumbent's commission expired February 5, 1922.

NEVADA.

Anna S. Michal to be postmaster at Round Mountain, Nev., in place of George Foley. Incumbent's commission expired February 4, 1922.

Emanuel Bollschweiler to be postmaster at Wells, Nev., in place of P. S. Triplett, deceased.

NEW JERSEY.

Walter Frederick to be postmaster at Delawanna, N. J. Office became presidential January 1, 1920.

NEW YORK.

Lloyd E. Jones to be postmaster at Richville, N. Y. Office became presidential April 1, 1921.

C. Homer Hook to be postmaster at Greenville, N. Y., in place of N. W. Avery. Incumbent's commission expired January 24, 1922.

NORTH CAROLINA.

William B. White to be postmaster at Norlina, N. C. Office became presidential October 1, 1920.

James S. Rogers to be postmaster at Oxford, N. C., in place of B. K. Lassiter. Incumbent's commission expired March 16, 1921.

OKLAHOMA.

Albert E. Hawkins to be postmaster at Canute, Okla. Office became presidential July 1, 1921.

Ethel Senft to be postmaster at Quay, Okla. Office became presidential July 1, 1918.

Gavin D. Duncan to be postmaster at Boswell, Okla., in place of J. N. Hopkins. Incumbent's commission expired February 4, 1922.

Orlo H. Wills to be postmaster at Delaware, Okla., in place of Blanche Holcomb. Incumbent's commission expired February 4, 1922.

Ida White to be postmaster at Konawa, Okla., in place of J. P. Ford. Incumbent's commission expired March 21, 1922.

Grace M. Johnson to be postmaster at Mulhall, Okla., in place of J. S. Thompson. Incumbent's commission expired February 4, 1922.

Merrill M. Barbee to be postmaster at Spiro, Okla., in place of J. D. Ward, declined.

Eve A. Loyd to be postmaster at Stigler, Okla., in place of J. T. Holley. Incumbent's commission expired March 27, 1922.

Albert Ross to be postmaster at Thomas, Okla., in place of W. E. Hunt. Incumbent's commission expired February 4. 1922.

Harvey G. Brandenburg to be postmaster at Yale, Okla., in place of B. I. Schiefelbusch. Incumbent's commission expired August 26, 1920.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Albert S. Leiby to be postmaster at Bath, Pa., in place of F. P. Laub. Incumbent's commission expired March 21, 1922.

James W. Hatch to be postmaster at North Girard, Pa., in place of J. W. Hatch. Incumbent's commission expired February 5, 1922.

Ruth Roberts to be postmaster at Vintondale, Pa., in place of J. H. Krumbine. Incumbent's commission expired February 5, 1922.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

John E. Folger to be postmaster at Easley, S. C., in place of A. G. King. Incumbent's commission expired October 3, 1921.

TEXAS.

James R. Corbin to be postmaster at Blooming Grove, Tex., in place of S. A. Roberts. Incumbent's commission expired July 21, 1921

Robert S. Brennand to be postmaster at Colorado, Tex., in place of J. W. Person, resigned.

Minnie S. Parish to be postmaster at Huntsville, Tex., in place of W. E. McKay. Incumbent's commission expired January 24, 1922.

WISCONSIN.

Andrew Bock to be postmaster at Stockholm, Wis. Office became presidential January 1, 1921.

Eugene F. Stoddard to be postmaster at Downing, Wis., in place of J. E. Dennis. Incumbent's commission expired March 16, 1921.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate April 7 (legislative day of April 5), 1922.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEY.

George Springmeyer to be United States attorney, district of Nevada.

UNITED STATES MARSHAL.

Albert C. Sittel to be United States marshal, southern district of California.

SURVEYOR GENERAL OF NEW MEXICO.

Manual A. Sanchez to be surveyor general of New Mexico.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, April 7, 1922.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon, and was called to order by the Speaker.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, for the birth of every day we bless Thee; for every hope that makes us happy we give Thee thanks. Truly in Thee we find our rest and our full security. Thy providence is a daily miracle, so sure, so rich, so inexhaustible. O may it never be overlooked or undervalued. Fill our lives with vast and mighty meaning, and give them the vision of the unattained and a pulsing passion to realize it. May the law of truth be native to the very depths of our being. Keep in our minds this day the counsels of the Lord. Let the sweetness of Thy love, the sense of Thy providence, and the joy of Thy presence be in all our homes. In the name of Jesus. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

RETURN OF A BILL (S. 2992).

The SPEAKER. The Chair presents the following message from the Senate.

The Clerk read as follows:

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

* * * * * * *

Resolved, That the House of Representatives be requested to return to the Senate the bill (S. 2992) authorizing the Secretary of War to furnish certain information for historical purposes to the adjutants general of the several States and the District of Columbia, and making an appropriation therefor.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Committee on Military Affairs will be discharged and the bill be returned to the Senate.

There was no objection.

NO QUORUM—CALL OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is no quorum present.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming moves a call of the House. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

A call of the House was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Ackerman	Focht	Langley	Robsion
Anderson	Fuller	Lee, N. Y.	Rosenbloom

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and three Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves to dispense with further proceedings under the call. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will open the doors.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE OF CAMPBELL V. DOUGHTON.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, I present a privileged report from the Committee on Elections No. 2.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts presents a privileged report from the Committee on Elections No. 2, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. LUCE, from the Committee on Elections No. 2, submits the following report on the contested-election case of James I. Campbell v. Robert L. Doughton, from the eighth congressional district of the State of North Carolina.

The SPEAKER. Referred to the House Calendar.

DEPARTMENTS OF STATE AND JUSTICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 11065.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill making appropriations for the State and Justice Departments. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOWELL] will resume the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 11065) making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes, with Mr. DOWELL in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 11065, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 11065) making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for permission to return to the first paragraph at the top of page 12 for the purpose of permitting the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MOORES] to offer an amendment to the paragraph in which the Committee on Foreign Affairs is interested.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to return to the first paragraph at the top of page 12 for the reason stated. Is there objection?

Mr. LINTHICUM. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland objects. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For printing and binding for the Pan American Union, $20,000.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. HUSTED. At the end of line 4 insert the following:

The Public Printer is authorized to print an edition of the monthly bulletin not to exceed 6,000 copies per month for distribution by the union during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HUSTED: On page 17, line 4, insert after the word "Union" "and that the Public Printer is authorized to print an edition of the monthly bulletin not to exceed 6,000 copies per month for distribution by the union during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that this amendment is legislation unauthorized on an appropriation bill; and I call to the attention of the Chair that lines 4 and 5 went out on a point of order yesterday, and were not placed back, and were not included in the amendment that was finally adopted by the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is in error. Lines 4 and 5 did not go out on a point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. I made a point of order against them yesterday.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman made the point of order against the preceding paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. That is correct.

Mr. HUSTED. It is obvious that the gentleman could not make a point of order against two paragraphs at once.

Mr. BLANTON. Lines 4 and 5 were not read since the Chair ruled.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed by the Clerk that they were read.

Mr. BLANTON. I make the point of order anyway that the proviso in the amendment is, as I said, legislation and subject to a point of order.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, lines 4 and 5, for printing and binding for the Pan American Union, $20,000, might have been subject to a point of order, but no point of order was made against them and the paragraph remains in the bill. As that paragraph remains in the bill it is subject to germane amendments, and the amendment which I offer is certainly germane to this paragraph. It simply provides that out of this sum of $20,000 a certain number of copies of a certain bulletin may be printed for the use of the union.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, yesterday afternoon I was making some remarks relative to the whole item, and I was laboring under the impression that a point of order had been made against the entire paragraph, and then that it had been withdrawn, but that in some way the point of order had been renewed. I was about to go further into the discussion of the point of order, and I understood clearly, as I supposed, that the gentleman from New York [Mr. HUSTED] assured me that the point of order had been conceded relative to everything except the $100,000 appropriation; that in addition to that the item had been passed by, and it can not now be returned to except by unanimous consent.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, a point of order was made against the preceding paragraph. That paragraph contained the proviso which I have now offered as an amendment to the succeeding paragraph. I did frankly admit that the point of order was good against that proviso, and the whole paragraph was stricken out. I then offered as an amendment the entire paragraph minus that proviso, and I stated to the gentleman that my amendment did not contain the proviso authorizing the printing of 6,000 copies of the bulletin. That is absolutely correct, but after that the next succeeding paragraph was passed and no point of order was made against it. I am now offering the proviso formerly carried in the preceding paragraph, offering it as an amendment to this paragraph which has been passed without objection——

Mr. BLANTON. Will the Chair hear me just a moment?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. I want the Chair to note that this paragraph under discussion has not been read by the Clerk at all. If the Chair will look at the RECORD on page 5135 the Chair will note that the paragraph which was under discussion was the preceding paragraph and not the one sought to be amended at all, and the Chair will note that on page 5137 the Chair overruled my point of order to the preceding paragraph and then permitted the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HUSTED] to be passed upon by the committee. This last paragraph was never read in the committee. It was never passed upon at all. The RECORD shows that after the Chair ruled on the point of order as to the preceding paragraph the gentleman from New York [Mr. HUSTED] immediately moved that the committee rise. That is the record here on page 5137.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the Chair hear me as to the legislative situation?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] will admit that he was not present yesterday when the point of order was raised by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LINTHICUM].

Mr. BLANTON. But I was here when I raised the point of order to the gentleman's amendment, which was just before the gentleman from Maryland made the point of no quorum.

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes, the gentleman was here; and then he left the Chamber. I think there will be no dispute about that. Now, what are the facts? When the point of order was overruled, then the reading clerk, Mr. Chaffee, proceeded to read lines 4 and 5, when the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LINTHICUM] made the point of order that there was no quorum present, and then the gentleman having charge of the bill [Mr. HUSTED] moved that the committee rise. Lines 4 and 5 were read yesterday by the reading clerk.

Mr. BLANTON. If the Chair will permit me, I will call the attention of the Chair to what happened.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Rule!

Mr. BLANTON. I am sure the Chair wants to rule correctly. I call the attention of the Chair to page 5137 of the RECORD, second column, to show what happened after the Chair overruled my point of order against the preceding paragraph:

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. Under the act of July 14, 1890, the Congress organized and established, under the direction of the Secretary of State, the International Union of American Republics. It is true that that legislation was on an appropriation bill, but no objection was made and it became and was permanent law. There has been no change or modification, so far as the Chair is able to learn, of this organization and the establishment of this union except as to the name. The agreement referred to by the gentleman from Texas between the members of the union is as follows:

"Any of the Republics may cease to belong to the Union of American Republics upon notice to the governing board two years in advance. The Pan American Union shall continue for successive terms of 10 years, unless 12 months before the expiration of such term a majority of the members of the union shall express the wish to the Secretary of State of the United States of America to withdraw therefrom on the expiration of the term."

The Chair thinks that this agreement has not expired and that the notice was not served which would in any manner terminate our relations with the Pan American Union. The Chair therefore overrules the point of order. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland makes the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

And if what the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] says is correct, the RECORD should be corrected.

Mr. STAFFORD. The RECORD never contains every paragraph that is read by the reading clerk.

Mr. MANN. The RECORD never shows what portions of a bill are read unless a point of order is made against a paragraph or an amendment is offered to it. The RECORD never shows what the Clerk reads when the Chair says, "The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill." The gentleman from Texas has not observed that, although he has observed nearly everything else in the House. The RECORD would not show it, and it would not be proper that it should show everything read by the Clerk.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the point of order raised by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON]. Lines 4 and 5 were read on yesterday, and the point of order was not made to the two lines of this paragraph. The amendment submitted by the gentleman from New York, the Chair thinks, is germane to the paragraph, and the point of order is overruled. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. In justice to myself, I trust the House will bear with me a few moments. I understand it is being stated in the House and also in the Senate that the Florida delegation is opposed to an extra judge. The facts in the case do not bear this out. I succeeded in having a special bill, my colleagues from Florida materially assisting, reported out of the Judiciary Committee, this bill having passed the Senate. But we could not reach it because, as you know, the bill was on the Unanimous Consent Calendar, and the objection of any one Member to the present consideration of that bill would prevent it. The Senate has twice passed the bill giving the southern district of Florida a special judge, but neither of them were considered in the House, as neither of them were reached on the calendar. Yesterday by a tie vote the Senate refused to incorporate into the bill the judgeship for Florida, although the House had overwhelmingly provided for a judge for the southern district. I trust when the Senate finally votes on the bill it will provide for an extra judge for the southern district of Florida. I simply desire at this time, to show the committee my attitude and that the report is not correct, to read to you from the hearings on H. R. 8875, serial 19, November 7, 1921, and I trust the Members of the House will read all of the hearings. I read a part of same, as follows:

I said before the subcommittee and I want to say before this committee that when this bill comes up, after I have studied it, as I try to study all bills, if I believe that Massachusetts is entitled to one judge and Missouri is entitled to two and Illinois is entitled to one—or whatever the number is—and Minnesota is entitled to one, and Oklahoma and the Lone Star State, the great State of Texas, is entitled to what she has asked for, I shall support the bill. I have urged before this whole committee—and my colleague and other members of the committee who were on the committee at that time will bear me out in the assertion—that Florida was entitled to an additional judge and that that was the only way to give us relief. I said that during the Democratic administration; I stated that when the Republicans were in control of the House and Senate two years ago, but when we had a Democratic President. And I say to this committee to-day, as I said to the subcommittee—though some may disagree with me—that, partisan Democrat that I am, differing with the majority of this committee upon great fundamental questions of policy, when the rights and liberties of my people are at stake, small, indeed, would be the man who would oppose a meritorious bill because a Republican President was now in office and would appoint a Republican judge.

Those were my sentiments. I advocated the bill when a Democratic President would have appointed a Democratic judge if the bill had become a law, and I advocate the passage of the bill now that a Republican is in, because I believe that if he appoints a judge he will be an intellectual judge and above party politics. The southern district of Florida is growing by leaps and bounds and is not only entitled to an extra judge, but must have one. When I became a Member of Congress in the Sixty-fourth session——

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman is out of order in not speaking to the bill.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, I have never spoken out of order when any Member of the House objected, and if the gentleman insists I will stop.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Chairman, may we have the amendment again reported?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be again reported.

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HUSTED: Page 17, line 4, after the word "union," insert: "and that the Public Printer is authorized to print an edition of the monthly bulletin, not to exceed 6,000 copies per month, for distribution by the union during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was considered and agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

INTERNATIONAL BUREAU OF THE PERMANENT COURT OF ARBITRATION.

To meet the share of the United States in the expenses for the calendar year 1923 of the International Bureau of the Permanent Court of Arbitration, created under article 22 of the convention concluded at The Hague, July 28, 1899, for the pacific settlement of international disputes, $2,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend in line 9 by striking out the figures "1923" and inserting "1921."

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. MANN: In line 9, strike out the figures "1923" and insert the figures "1921."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, it would naturally be supposed that this being an appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1923 it appropriates for the amount due for the year 1923, but from the beginning the appropriation act of one year for the next fiscal year has, as to this item, appropriated for the past fiscal year. That has been the case all the time.

Mr. HUSTED. As usual, the gentleman from Illinois is correct.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York were these sums expended under a similar appropriation for the last year?

Mr. HUSTED. Yes. This is for the maintenance of the international bureau.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I understand what the object is. I would like to have the attention of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON]. I would like to ask the gentleman from Ohio just how the activities of this international bureau or permanent court of arbitration are now conducted?

Mr. BURTON. I am frank to say that in recent years I have not been at all familiar with the activities of this bureau.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I would like to ask whether the gentleman is advised how they have been modified or neutralized by the activities of the permanent international court recently organized under the auspices of the League of Nations, of which John Bassett Moore is a judge. Is it not a fact that those activities have been superseded by the international court?

Mr. HUSTED. Not so far as the United States is concerned.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Not so far as the appropriation is concerned.

Mr. HUSTED. Not so far as the United States is concerned. We have a very important case that is about to be submitted to The Hague tribunal. It has not been submitted to the court, but it has been submitted to the bureau and will shortly be submitted to the court. Those are the claims of Norway against us for seizing Norwegian vessels during the war.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I was wondering whether the bureau was functioning at this time.

Mr. HUSTED. Oh, yes; we have a case pending in the bureau which will soon be in the court.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word merely for the purpose of calling the attention of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], who seems to be under the impression that when the Chair rules on a proposition or says that the Clerk will read the RECORD does not show it, to the fact that the following occurred yesterday, and that the Chairman said "the Clerk will read." I read now from page 5135 of the RECORD of yesterday:

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.
The Clerk read as follows:
For printing and binding for the Pan American Union, $20,000.
Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the whole paragraph—

And so forth.

Mr. MANN. Certainly. When a point of order is made the RECORD shows the reading, but when no point of order is made and when no amendment is offered the RECORD does not show what the Clerk reads.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, take the preceding paragraph—

International Prison Commission.

In respect to that paragraph the following occurred:

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.
The Clerk read as follows:

Then follows the paragraph from the bill relating to the International Prison Commission. No point of order was made against that.

Mr. MANN. But there was a discussion in respect to it, and the RECORD shows it. I made a motion to strike out the last word. I am correct about the matter. The gentleman will learn it after awhile.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF INTERPARLIAMENTARY UNION FOR PROMOTION OF INTERNATIONAL ARBITRATION.

For the contribution of the United States toward the maintenance of the Bureau of the Interparliamentary Union for the promotion of international arbitration at Brussels, Belgium, $2,000.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, in line 2, on page 18, by striking out the figures "$2,000" and inserting in lieu thereof the figures "$4,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Amendment offered by Mr. BURTON: Page 18, line 2, strike out the figures "$2,000" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$4,000."

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, I would state first in support of this amendment that the Committee on Foreign Affairs gave exhaustive consideration to the amounts to be appropriated for these respective international bureaus, and have reported a bill, H. R. 10213, under which this amount is made $4,000. The Interparliamentary Union is of increasing importance. There is a reliance on the United States for leadership in it, and it enables us to maintain a close touch with foreign countries. Some 25 Governments are members of this union. It includes representatives from various legislative bodies all over the world, and is of especial importance in the promotion of good will.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, so far as I am concerned, I have no objection to the amendment, but I would like to know why it is necessary to increase the amount from $2,000 to $4,000.

Mr. BURTON. In a general way the increase is because of the larger cost of all services and facilities, also because of some proposed extentions of the activities of the bureau, such as the appointment of an assistant, and, again, the location has been changed and the rent is somewhat higher. Still further, some of the nations that have contributed and contributed regularly we must frankly say are unable to do so. The States of Norway, of Denmark, and of Sweden, also Holland, have made annual contributions of approximately $2,000 each, much more than their share. That contribution can hardly be relied upon as permanent. The union has had a system for levying assessments which, as they say, is empirical, and they have reached a decision that it is best to make an assessment according to well-established principles, observing, first, population. Some consideration is given to rates of exchange in countries in which currencies are at a discount. The Scandinavian States and Holland and Belgium, which have always shown an unusual interest in this organization, have subscribed rather more than their share, and it would seem that on the basis of population alone $4,000 is not an unduly large amount for the United States.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURTON. Yes.

Mr. EVANS. Is the amount suggested, $4,000, fixed on population solely?

Mr. BURTON. Not solely, but I may say for the most part it is.

Mr. EVANS. Are the other nations contributing by an increase of 100 per cent?

Mr. BURTON. Not all, but those who are able are doing so, or at least are expected to do so.

Mr. EVANS. Will the gentleman please give to the committee the names of those countries that are able to do so?

Mr. BURTON. There are some 25 members. The contribution of Great Britain is £450. In addition to that there is a subscription by the members of the union who are members of the English Parliament of £200. Germany is let off rather lightly, and it is proposed that she pay a comparatively small amount because of the great depreciation in her currency. Canada is expected to pay $600, which is quite large for them as compared with the $4,000 here. Australia is asked to pay £80; Belgium, 4,500 francs, which would be somewhat in excess of her quota; Denmark, 2,000 crowns, or about $400, about one-tenth of what we pay; and Spain, 6,000 pesetas. I think it hardly necessary to give the whole list, but may say that the assessment of Japan is a little less than $2,000. Barring the fact that some of the countries are depressed financially and are not able to pay, our quota is not in excess of what would be our share according to population or any other test.

Mr. EVANS. Will the gentleman from Ohio also inform the committee as to the particular money in which the quota is originally levied? That is, is it levied in terms of francs, dollars, pounds, or what?

Mr. BURTON. Swiss francs, which have a gold value of 18¾ cents and command, I believe, a slight premium in New York.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURTON. Yes.

Mr. HUSTED. Has the figure the gentleman proposes, $4,000, been fixed as our quota by the governing board of the union?

Mr. BURTON. It has.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURTON. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Not being very much of a "jiner," I have never joined the interparliamentary group of the House of Representatives. I know a number of very distinguished gentlemen who are members of it, but what does this thing do except collect money?

Mr. BURTON. They hold annual meetings. The last meeting was held last August in Stockholm.

Mr. MANN. That is an occasion for a very pleasant pleasure trip, not of course at public expense.

Mr. BURTON. Oh, no.

Mr. MANN. For those who are willing to go. They are well entertained while over there, pleasantly received, but do they do anything?

Mr. BURTON. They do, decidedly.

Mr. MANN. What do they do? Tell us about it.

Mr. BURTON. To begin at the beginning, in the year 1904 the union met in the United States.

An appropriation of $50,000 was made for the union by Congress that year. The union passed a resolution requesting President Roosevelt to invite the other nations to convene for the second time The Hague conference. The members called in a body on the President at the White House. The second Hague conference, which met at The Hague in 1907, was due to that meeting.

One great general benefit is the meeting together for a common purpose and for a discussion of international questions by members of legislative bodies from the whole world. They all go home with new ideas. I have met in the gatherings of this union members from Japan, members from Russia, and even from Turkey. On a very dramatic occasion in London, members of the Russian Douma, after meeting with the organization, marched out because the Czar had issued an ukase dissolving the Douma. The members of the union have labored very constantly and with success for the codification of the principles of international law. They have proposed new principles of international law. They have considered numerous questions which pertain to international relations.

I call the gentleman's attention to another interesting occasion in Geneva in 1912, where the subject of the use of aircraft in warfare was under discussion. It is very interesting in view of what has occurred.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman from Ohio have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Ohio may proceed for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BURTON. In this conference the French advocated the unlimited use of aircraft; the English opposed it; the Germans remained quiet, awaiting developments. No conclusion was reached. That question was referred to a later conference. The general sentiment, however, was very strongly against the use of aircraft for other than scouting purposes.

In regard to labor, that is one of the subjects now under consideration—part of the agenda for the next meeting. I think I may say safely to my colleagues that the deliberations of the union on that subject can not be otherwise than helpful to the United States, because our standards for the workingmen are so much higher than those of other countries, and a comparison of views, a recommendation of regulations of labor as to hours and other conditions, will tend to diminish the very wide gap between labor conditions in the United States and in other countries.

And again, the passport regulations are a subject also under consideration. But I may state that the great benefit is the bringing together of men who are members of different legislative bodies in different parts of the world, rubbing off the rough edges, realizing we all have a common interest, recognizing that cooperation is what is necessary for progress in international affairs. The discussions have been very illuminating, and I can most confidently say that they have not been merely deliberations, but, as in the case of the calling of the second Hague conference, they have been very helpful.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURTON. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Did the union at its last meeting pass some resolutions recommending the entrance of the United States into the League of Nations?

Mr. BURTON. No; they did not. There was a large, perhaps a predominant opinion, among the members of the union outside of the United States, that a recommendation of the league should be passed. I do not know that any proposed resolution contemplated our entrance into the league, but that organization was commended most highly by some of the members, and there were intimations that we should join. But the union absolutely followed the delegates from the United States in their action—Senator MCKINLEY, of Illinois; Senator WALSH, of Montana; Senator ROBINSON, of Arkansas; and from this House, Messrs. BROOKS of Illinois, BRITTEN, BARKLEY, and Governor MONTAGUE, and I think, perhaps, one or two other Members of the House. The notable feature of the last gathering at Stockholm was that they consulted the delegation from the United States, although ours was not one of the largest, and accepted their judgment and leadership in practically everything.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, far be it from me to say anything against the Interparliamentary Union. The American group is now headed, I believe, by Mr. MCKINLEY, now a Member of the Senate, and one of my best friends for many years. I am perfectly willing for a few gentlemen from the House to trot off to Europe on a pleasure trip and consult with people, whose language they can not talk, on various subjects, and I am glad the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] has made the statement he has. This is the first time I ever have heard, I think, a single reference on the floor of this House, during all the years the Interparliamentary Union has been in existence, to anything that they have done. I think there has never been a proposition presented in the House for action by the House in conformity with any suggestion made by the Interparliamentary Union, which originally was organized to do two things—one to maintain peace in the world, and the other to reduce armies and navies. Armies and navies grew by leaps and bounds, and, in spite of the Interparliamentary Union, the greatest war we ever had followed along, with the members just as bitter against each other as anybody else was. But I am perfectly willing; while I do not think it will accomplish any great thing, and while I can not see yet what they do between times, somebody is drawing a little money; probably they need it——

Mr. BURTON. If the gentleman will yield, he must not blame us for our modesty in not having exploited before the House what we have done.

Mr. MANN. If you had done anything, I think it would have been exploited. [Laughter.]

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I am frank to say that the glowing tribute paid to the purposes of the Interparliamentary Union by the eloquent gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] has kindled within my own mind an admiration for its purposes that I had not heretofore suspected. In reading the paragraph I got the idea that it was very much a duplication of the purposes of The Hague tribunal. I find that I had misapprehended its purposes. But it may hardly seem polite—and I would not wish to be guilty of any temerity or impropriety—to state even a difference of opinion from that of the distinguished gentleman from Ohio, but it seems to me there is at least a little incongruity in the statement that it might result in narrowing the gap between the standard of labor existing and maintained in this country as compared with the standard existing in Europe, for the reason, in the promotion of the public welfare of this great country, to which we are all so enthusiastically and loyally devoted, we have been passing tariff laws and building a high tariff wall, often referred to as a Chinese wall, in order to maintain that gap at the very widest possible standard at which we are able to maintain it, and I have thought, gentlemen, if you will pardon me, that that gap and those standards are established and maintained by economic conditions that are fundamental, as between this country and the countries of western continental Europe.

I still think that it can have no effect, that it can have no influence in that particular, and still think, knowing the existence of The Hague tribunal so well and so thoroughly understanding its beneficent purposes, that it will not accomplish a great deal in seeking to promote international arbitration for the settlement of international differences. I see no excuse or good reason for this amendment. They can get along with the money set down in the bill reported by the committee. I feel sure that that would be enough, and I hope the amendment will not prevail.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

ITALY.

For the payment of the quota of the United States for the support of the International Institute of Agriculture for the calendar year 1923, $19,577.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. WALSH. How long has this international organization of agrarian experts been in existence? How do they arrive at a quota involving $19,577?

Mr. HUSTED. The international institute was created by the treaty of 1905, which was signed by representatives of 41 powers, including the United States. The promoter of this organization was Mr. David Lubin, an American, since deceased, who was for many years our representative at Rome.

The institute is said to do very valuable work for the farmers of America in collecting information as to crops and as to crop conditions, and that information is transmitted here by cable, so that our farmers will get it promptly.

Mr. WALSH. Has it been in operation in the last year or two?

Mr. HUSTED. It has not been, I understand, in very active operation during the period of the war.

Mr. WALSH. What have they been doing with the money appropriated during the war?

Mr. HUSTED. As a matter of fact, I do not think the money has been expended. I do not think our appropriations have been expended during the war.

Mr. WALSH. Do they consider the questions of helping drought-stricken areas, and furnishing free seed to countries that have become devastated by storm and flood and war and other calamities?

Mr. HUSTED. I do not think they pursue any of those activities. They are simply devoted to the collection of accurate information as to crops and crop conditions abroad, so that the American farmer and the American dealer in agricultural products will have at their disposal the latest information to guide them in determining upon the best course to pursue in the conduct of their business——

Mr. WALSH. So that the farmer would know whether to plant wheat or sunflowers next season?

Mr. HUSTED. Well, I think that they obtain from this source very useful information. At any rate, the Department of Agriculture is convinced of it.

Mr. WALSH. It is pretty easy to convince the Department of Agriculture of anything if it involves the expenditure of money. If you mention that first, you do not have to say very much thereafter.

Mr. HUSTED. Well, I may add to that that the agricultural societies of the country are very much impressed with its usefulness, and it must be as obvious to the gentleman from Massachusetts as it is to me that it is useful to the American farmer to secure accurate data as to crop conditions and crops abroad.

Mr. WALSH. Yes. I assume that possibly it may be useful to secure accurate data as to the crops abroad. Just how often these data are supplied and how they are procured I do not know, but we get a lot of other information from abroad that is equally useful, and I venture to say a great deal more accurate, without entering into an international institute.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman from New York what reason was given for the very large increase in this appropriation? It is much larger than we have ever appropriated before.

Mr. HUSTED. The reason is the increased expense, the very greatly increased expense.

Mr. MANN. Increased expense how? Of course, there is always a reason why people want more money. They want to spend more.

Mr. HUSTED. I have not the very fullest information, but I will give the gentleman what I have. One reason is that heretofore the King of Italy has made a large contribution toward the maintenance of the institute which has recently been withdrawn. Italy is unable to bear the large share of the expense any longer, or, or at any rate, at the present time.

Mr. MANN. Well, I will say to the gentleman that our first appropriation for this institute, which I think was $5,000 or a less sum, was made because it was claimed, "Here is an institute that may possibly do some good; the Italian Government pays most of the expenses; all we are asked to do is to contribute a little toward paying the salary of somebody there representing us and paying the expenses of printing." On that ground they got this institute located in Italy. Do I understand that having secured the location there they now want to renege and want us to pay all the expenses?

Mr. HUSTED. I know this—that the King of Italy furnished this institute with quarters. I believe it was a former palace. He turned it over to the institute for its use rent free, and the King of Italy also made a very substantial contribution toward the maintenance of the institute; but we all realize that Italy suffered greatly during the war, and the Italians are not now financially in a position to do what they formerly were able to do, and I suppose it is on account of their financial straits that they do not contribute in money what they formerly did.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HUSTED. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH. This institute building was not in Fiume, was it?

Mr. HUSTED. I do not know the exact location, but I understand it was in Rome.

Mr. WALSH. I did not know but that might account for withdrawing the free rental.

Mr. ROGERS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUSTED. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. ROGERS. At the time this item was under discussion last year the Committee on Appropriations was told that the quota of the United States, which for many years had been 40,000 lire, was to be increased to 100,000 lire; that is, the increase was to be 150 per cent. Has that larger quota been increased since this matter was before the Congress a year ago?

Mr. HUSTED. I think not; and I will say to the gentleman that for the current year we appropriated $18,000 in the Diplomatic and Consular bill. That was the entire amount—$8,000 for the quota, $5,000 for the salary of the member, and $5,000 as our quota for printing; but we have since allowed a deficiency appropriation of $11,577, so that the appropriations for this current year are exactly the same as the amount carried in this bill for the fiscal year.

Mr. ROGERS. My difficulty is here: Our quota under the new arrangement has jumped from 40,000 lire to 100,000 lire. One hundred thousand lire at normal exchange would be something like the figure carried in this bill, and perhaps this figure in fact represents the American equivalent of 100,000 gold lire. But the paper lire is only one-third or one-fourth of the normal value.

Mr. HUSTED. I think you will find that they are gold lire.

Mr. ROGERS. That is what I am getting at. Does the United States get the benefit of the fluctuating exchange?

Mr. HUSTED. I think not. I think the quota is in gold lire.

Mr. ROGERS. Is that a treaty requirement?

Mr. HUSTED. I do not know whether it is or not.

Mr. MANN. There is no treaty about it.

Mr. ROGERS. Oh, yes; this obligation was made in a treaty.

Mr. MANN. When?

Mr. ROGERS. In 1905.

Mr. HUSTED. Oh, yes; it is a treaty obligation, absolutely.

Mr. MANN. The treaty has been entered into, then, long since the bureau was established?

Mr. HUSTED. Yes.

Mr. MANN. That may be.

Mr. KING. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUSTED. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. KING. Does the gentleman know whether the International Harvester Co. contribute anything to this work?

Mr. HUSTED. I do not know anything about that.

Mr. KING. They are the recipients of a large part of the information, are they not, which enables them to sell their agricultural machinery abroad?

Mr. HUSTED. I have no idea whether they are or not. As I understand it, the information is transmitted directly to the Department of Agriculture here at Washington.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I move to strike out the last word. I have no particular information as to the work that is being done by the institute; but a few months ago I listened to a very interesting address by our former ambassador to Italy, Dr. Thomas Nelson Page, who is my valued friend, in which he paid a tribute to the memory of David Lubin, and also praised the activities of the institute. Inasmuch as the work of the institute is designed to support the agricultural activities of the world and the prosperity of agriculture, I shall object to seeing this item stricken out.

But I rose to say that I have been very much interested in the observations of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] and of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] upon the suggested uselessness of some of the bureaus that we maintain for the purpose of engaging in international conference. For example, the bureau that was talked about a moment ago, the Interparliamentary Union, has been in existence a long time. I happened to be on the other side a great many years ago when it held a meeting which was addressed by some of the most eloquent men in Europe and at least one of the most eloquent of Americans. As the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has stated, the purpose of the creation of that union was to insure, as far as possible, the maintenance of peace, and to decrease governmental expenditures for military and naval purposes. Since then, I believe, some of the men who participated in the meeting have died on the battle field; war is almost as much in prospect now as it was then, and the burdens of armament have been very slightly decreased. I doubt very much whether we are going to accomplish anything by maintaining that bureau. The truth is that we are willing to go into all sorts of conferences with Europeans that will not accomplish anything, and at the same time are unwilling to enter into those conferences that give some promise of achievement. We decline to enter the League of Nations, which is the greatest of all international conferences. A good many of us think, in view of the interest of the United States in the general question of reparations, that we ought to be represented on the Reparations Commission, but we again decline. While we take time debating the relation of the Government of the United States to the matter of reparations, our Government refuses to appoint a representative on the commission that is dealing with the subject. A very important conference is about to occur in Italy, the Genoa conference, and we have declined to enter that. There is, by the way, a significant statement in the first issue of a magazine that is now appearing called Our World, conducted by very responsible and well-known people, as to why the United States remains away from Genoa. So the truth is, we spend money without much hesitation to provide opportunities for certain people to make very attractive trips to Europe, who assist in doing ornamental and rhetorical things, and we neglect the opportunities that are afforded us to participate in great conferences that may amount to something.

This attitude recalls to my mind a remark made by a very eminent New Englander, doubtless an agriculturalist, like my friend the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH]. I refer to old Jacob Collamer, a United States Senator of the long ago. He said that we are so constituted that sometimes we can see the fly on the barn door and can not see the barn door itself. We are anxious, or at least willing, to mix up in comparatively inconsequential conferences but turn our backs on the conferences that may have some favorable effect upon the fortunes of the world and some results that might be of infinite advantage to the United States. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the amount of "$19,577" and insert in lieu thereof "$8,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Page 18, line 7, strike out the figures "$19,577" and insert in lieu thereof "$8,000."

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, I think after listening to the remarks of practically every man that has said anything on this proposition, we are all agreed that the one thing accomplished in this proposition is that the United States is the banker. We have been contributing $8,000 to this conference, and I dare say there is not anybody in this country can lay his hand on a concrete thing that has been accomplished by the conference since its initiation that has been of any benefit to the agricultural interests of the United States.

Mr. HUSTED. This is not a conference.

Mr. BEGG. I know; it is a bureau established over there.

Mr. HUSTED. It is a bureau for the collection of data that is regularly transmitted to the United States for the benefit of the American farmer. It would be most unfortunate if this amendment should be agreed to, because the bureau would be sadly handicapped in its work. And see how inconsistent it would be. These are treaty obligations; our obligation is fixed, and to repudiate our treaty obligations would be most unfortunate.

Mr. BEGG. Is our treaty obligation fixed at $19,577?

Mr. HUSTED. It is.

Mr. BEGG. By whom?

Mr. HUSTED. The governing board.

Mr. BEGG. If the governing board fixed the amount for the next year at $50,000 would we be obligated to pay it?

Mr. HUSTED. We would not be legally obligated, of course.

Mr. BEGG. No; the facts are we are not obligated to pay more than $8,000, according to the treaty obligations. Is not that a fact? Has not the governing board exceeded their authority?

Mr. HUSTED. The gentleman knows perfectly well that they can not do with $8,000 what they could do before the war.

Mr. BEGG. Why not? The rate of exchange would give them about $12,000.

Mr. HUSTED. I thought I had explained why they could not do it. In the first place, heretofore the King of Italy made a large cash contribution; he has borne the larger portion of the expense of maintaining the institute. He is no longer in a position to do it, and now the members have to divide up the expense if the institute is to be maintained in the future as in the past. We have to bear our share of the expense.

Mr. BEGG. I will say that my people are farmers. I lived on a farm for 25 years. I have yet to hear one definite piece of information that ever emanated from this institute at Rome that was of any value to the farmers in Ohio or anywhere else in the country. Now, I think the facts are that this institution has not functioned so far as agriculture is concerned in the United States. The gentleman rightly says, no doubt, that Italy has fallen down in the maintenance of her end of the financial support of this institute, and in order to keep it going, to keep some fellows in jobs, we are willing to raise our ante two and one-half times and give it to them for a useless purpose. So far as I am concerned, I would as leave strike it all out.

Mr. HUSTED. This is not for the purpose of keeping people in jobs.

Mr. BEGG. What is it for then?

Mr. HUSTED. Let me read a statement by an American representative of the Farm Bureau which was incorporated in last year's hearings.

Mr. BEGG. Who is it?

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Gray Silver. He says:

Mr. SILVER. The Farm Bureau, which is the large farm organization, is greatly interested in this particular problem you have under discussion, for agriculture is the basis of all industry and commerce; it is the largest business of the Nation and is international in character. Our crops, not only as to acreage, but as to the commodities produced, are directly affected by the world markets. Consequently we are greatly interested in having the information from both the angles of production and stocks on hand, which can only be secured through such an organization as we have at Rome.

Now, just one more thought, not wishing to differ in thought from the chairman: I am not a subscriber to the belief that we would get better service by less price. I think the salary of our permanent representative at Rome should be made such as to attract the high type of man who should represent this great Nation and this great business.

Mr. BEGG. Is Italy the agricultural center of Europe, and was that the reason for the location of this institute in the heart of agriculture?

Mr. HUSTED. No; I do not think so; but it has to be located somewhere in Europe and they located it at Rome. As a matter of fact, an American was the promoter of this institute. It emanated from America. America has always taken a particular interest in it. There is no doubt that this institute has performed the work of collecting and disseminating agricultural data of very great value to the American farmer, and to deprive the farmer of it in the future would be a real loss.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUSTED. I will.

Mr. MANN. I understand this international bureau collects information, which it distributes through governmental sources, of crop conditions, crop products, of the amount of grain and other agricultural products on hand. Some people, I think, in this country, perhaps rely upon the figures given out by this institute, but the live people engaged in business get the information as soon as the institute does, long before it is disseminated by the Government.

Mr. BEGG. I was about to ask the gentleman if he ever saw a report gotten out by a Government agency, even in this country, let alone getting it out in Italy, which reached the farmer before his crop was all marketed?

Mr. MANN. Oh, yes; our crop conditions, issued once a month by the Agricultural Department, published simultaneously all over the world, are very valuable.

Mr. BEGG. Has the gentleman ever seen any from this institute?

Mr. MANN. I have.

Mr. BEGG. I have never seen one thing from this institute of value.

Mr. MANN. I took a very active part some years ago in knocking this institution out, and followed it up for a while, but I concluded I would quit.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I do not think any serious harm would be done if we should adopt the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG]. We will be conforming to the requirements of the treaty. Of course, you can not wonder at the officials of foreign nations raising the amount which it is expected the United States shall contribute, when they sit over there and view our generosity in spending money, $20,000,000 worth of grain for Russia, $5,000,000 or $10,000,000 for Austria, and hundreds of thousands of dollars for other countries which seem to be able to make out a case of hardship. It was natural for those people to say that if we can do that for these other countries, we can afford to pay the rent for this building in Rome. It is interesting to see how internationally attractive we have become. We have an interparliamentary union, an international commission on annual tables of constants, and so forth, an international bureau, an international institute, an international congress, an international office of public health, an international convention of radio telegraph, and then a United States section of the Inter-American High Commission; and so it goes.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Has the gentleman ever known any one of these agencies being abolished, except possibly the International Alcoholic Conference?

Mr. WALSH. I have never heard of any being abolished, particularly if they carry appropriations. The distinguished gentleman from Virginia in his remarks adverted to our activity along this line, and I somewhat agree with what he has to say, although I can not agree that the only international association that has accomplished anything is that which the United States refused to enter. We had lately an international gathering here in the Capital of the United States which has accomplished more for the peace and security of the world than the late lamented League of Nations has yet accomplished or, in my judgment, ever will accomplish for years to come.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I wish to say to the gentleman, that while he and I may disagree as to the magnitude of the accomplishments of the Washington conference, personally I am very much gratified that such substantial results were reached, and I think we are to be congratulated that at the head of the State Department there is such an extremely able and energetic statesman as the present Secretary, who conducted the work of the conference.

Mr. WALSH. I agree with the gentleman in his congratulations, except that I would add we ought also to congratulate ourselves that we are not now entangled and allied with the League of Nations, because if we had been I doubt if we would have been able to have the gathering and accomplish what has been accomplished in that way. Indeed, I doubt whether the League of Nations would have been able to bring that program to such a successful completion.

However, Mr. Chairman, referring to the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio, it seems to me that the reduction in this appropriation will not deny the International Institute of Agriculture at Rome, Italy, sufficient funds, even though the distinguished ruler of that country should decide that he is no longer able to provide us with quarters, rent free. There are one or two countries now in Europe, I think, particularly since the map has been changed, where the United States does not have a representative at one of these international affairs, but I think that they would be willing to invite us there, with the offer of rent-free quarters, just for the sake of having a citizen of this country there representing the interests of the farmer at this international institute, and they might go across the border line or into one of these new nations that have been set up and get quarters.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. HUSTED. I think the gentleman labors under the misapprehension that the United States is probably the only Government called upon to pay this large amount of money. That is not the case. This quota is not based on population, but the nations are grouped as to their size and importance, and all of the nations in the first group pay the same quota that we do, viz, $20,000. At a meeting of the general assembly of the institute which was held in November, 1920, the assembly examined into the finances of the institute and decided to recommend that the quotas of the adhering Governments be increased 150 per cent, which puts the quotas of all of the nations in the first group or class at approximately $20,000.

Mr. WALSH. What nations are there in that first class?

Mr. HUSTED. All of the great nations practically are in that class.

Mr. WALSH. Is Italy in it?

Mr. HUSTED. I think so. I am quite sure of it.

Mr. WALSH. Have any of them paid the $20,000?

Mr. HUSTED. I do not know as to whether they have or not, but they are all very much interested in the institute and have paid heretofore.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. ROGERS. The countries in the first class, if the gentleman desires them, are Germany, Argentina, Austria, Hungary, Brazil, Italy, China, Turkey, Spain, the United States, France, Great Britain, Japan, Rumania, and Russia. I doubt if more than a third of those countries are paying anything like the 100,000 lire which the treaty requires.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Has not the time for debate upon this amendment been exhausted?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. TILSON). The present occupant of the chair has not been in the chair for the full 10 minutes.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman from Maryland is correct.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, I do not object to the two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will my colleague enumerate a few of the second-class nations, as far as this quota is concerned?

Mr. ROGERS. Egypt, Canada, British India, and Mexico are the only four countries in the second class. Their quota has recently increased to amount to 50,000 lire, about $10,000.

Mr. WALSH. I thank the gentleman. I am glad to notice that the first class has Russia and that the second class has Mexico; but I do not believe it is worth the extra expense to the United States to be included in the first class, so far as quota goes, and I hope that as a gradual intimation that the United States is likely some day to withdraw from some of these international, highfaluting convocations and congresses and other associations abroad we start by reducing expenditures.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky, Mr. LINEBERGER, and Mr. EVANS rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I believe that among the many useless commissions and institutions for which the United States is furnishing the money this is one of the most useless. It will be noticed that the next paragraph after the present one provides for a salary of $5,000 a year.

The United States was very proud of David Lubin, who, perhaps, was the most scientific man in the evolution of plant life the world has ever known, and who was sent over there as a member of that institute. Much of the consideration that heretofore was given to the proposition was out of tribute to David Lubin; but when he went to Rome he carried with him the knowledge, or imparted it to those who were there, as to how they could raise potatoes and wheat and corn and everything that went into the support of human life. But now we are left with nothing that they can give us and but little that we by this provision can convey to them. A sinecure of $5,000 a year is established for somebody—I do not know whom—that he may go to Italy and take with him no information that will serve the world. In my judgment not only the amendment that has been offered by the gentleman from Ohio should be adopted but the next paragraph should be eliminated from the bill, thereby doing away with the sinecure of $5,000 a year for a man to go over to Italy to serve no purpose.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio.

I do not think that there is any Member in this House more interested in the data which proceeds from the International Institute of Agriculture at Rome than myself, because of the fact that I represent in part a county—Los Angeles County—producing annually some $500,000,000 worth of the same agricultural products produced in southern Europe. I refer to walnuts, almonds, oranges, grapes, and horticultural products of the character produced in southern California. The farm bureaus of southern California are probably as thoroughly organized as the farm bureaus in any section of the United States. Horticulture and agriculture in that section of the Union have reached a very high state of perfection, and those who are engaged in it bring to bear in their avocation information from all parts of the world. And I can assure you that I of my personal knowledge know that the data which is procured by the International Institute of Agriculture at Rome is of vital benefit to the gentlemen who are engaged in those industries in my section of the country.

Some time ago I happened to be in Rome and visited the International Institute of Agriculture, and I was surprised at the thoroughgoing manner in which they carried on the work there. I know nothing of the reduced circumstances of the King of Italy, which have brought him to the point where he has to now collect rent for the premises which were formerly given rent free, but I do know that the chairman of the subcommittee has gone into this matter very thoroughly. And while this is not a legal obligation until the item has been passed upon by both Houses of Congress, I do believe there is a moral obligation that we should pay our quota. We are one of the richest and greatest nations on earth, and while I quite agree with the gentleman from Massachusetts that we shall decide whether or not we shall participate in these international meetings and conferences, this is a constructive work, and I think that the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio reduces the amount to a sum that is entirely too low and not commensurate with the work that is being carried on there. And I trust the amendment will not prevail. [Applause.]

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Chairman, I am sure that there is no individual upon the floor who has more criticism for these organizations international in their character, and from which no material benefits flow, than myself. I am a member of the subcommittee which produced this bill, and I was interested intensely in this particular item. And I wish to call the attention of those who have been criticizing this organization because no benefits flow from it to the following facts: It is true that the information collected by the bureau prior to the present has not been presented to the farmer as promptly as it should have been. It was brought to this country by mail usually and then dispensed through our Crop Reporter, or the various agencies used by the Agricultural Department for dispensing information.

The Members here who say they have never seen the information coming from that source are mistaken in this, that if they have seen the information so given out by the department, and the credit was not given, they got the information without knowledge of its source. But there are other benefits which have flowed from the work of this institution and to which I wish to call your attention.

On page 251 of the hearings you will find a number of those benefits enumerated. It gathers together information in reference to plant diseases, animal diseases, and methods of fighting them and controlling them, and quarantining against them.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EVANS. Certainly.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Is not every piece of information that the gentleman has just enumerated gathered by the Department of Agriculture and scattered all over the country to all of our people? Is not this, therefore, but a duplication of it?

Mr. EVANS. The source of the information gathered by the Department of Agriculture from foreign countries is very largely, not entirely, but very largely, obtained through this agency. And if that item alone were all this organization did, it would pay to agriculture all that it is costing. But that is not all that it does. It gathers up, and has gathered up, from different sources much valuable information. A very great deal of information with reference to farm credits, farm insurance, cooperative buying and selling, and cooperative insurance has come through this bureau, and that of itself, disregarding the other matters of information, would warrant this expenditure. But that is not all. Foreign laws relating to agriculture in different countries, and their effects, have been brought through this organization to this country.

It is a fact that through attachés connected with our Diplomatic Service we get information, but we have got here an agency which has produced it; and I may say, for the benefit of those who have criticized lack of promptness, that now it is the purpose to transmit the information with reference to crops, their character, prices, and so on, by telegraph, so that it will be immediately available.

As to the matter of the King of Italy and his contributions, I think the chairman of the committee is perhaps mistaken. The King of Italy, as I understand it, gave, not rent free for a time but for all time, one of his palaces in which the activities of this bureau are conducted. He not only did that, but prior to the war he gave out of his own private purse a very large part of the money necessary to continue the activities of this bureau, and it is that contribution that he has ceased, since the war, to make to this organization.

If you adopt the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG] you find yourselves in this position: You will have paid your money and you will be unable to get any results if other nations do likewise, pay the reduced quota. If you get results you are parasitic in that you are taking from them something to the cost of which you yourselves have not contributed your share.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska has expired.

Mr. EVANS. May I have one minute more?

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

There was no objection.

Mr. EVANS. There is one of two things to do: Pay the amount they ask, which is our fair share and which is assessed against every other nation of like character, or else do not give anything.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming moves to strike out the last two words.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I do not pretend to be very well informed as to the workings of the International Institute of Agriculture. I know something of it. I know it has been long established, and in the past it has been very useful. But I know this, that in these days of unrest in the world, of more or less international suspicion and criticism, of depression in business and agriculture, we ought certainly to maintain all of the relationships that we have with other nations [applause]—relationships that lead to friendly and kindly, considerate and helpful intercourse and association. This is no time to question whether or no we get to the last picayune all that we ought to out of a small contribution of this kind. Why, the very fact of our contribution, the very fact of our association, although we could point to no definite, tangible benefit—the very fact of it is worth much more than this small appropriation. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 8, noes 28.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

INTERNATIONAL SANITARY BUREAU.

For the annual share of the United States for the maintenance of the International Sanitary Bureau for the year 1923, $11,323.16.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, there is no law authorizing this legislation on an appropriation bill. I make the point of order against it.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, the International Sanitary Bureau has been recognized in a treaty which has been ratified by the United States Senate, and I think that is sufficient authorization to support the appropriation. This is the treaty known as the International Sanitary Convention, concluded October 14, 1905, ratification advised by the Senate February 22, 1906, ratified by the President May 29, 1906, and proclaimed March 1, 1909. Article 10 of that treaty is as follows:

The Government of each country is obliged to immediately publish the measures which it believes necessary to take against departures either from a country or from an infected territorial area.

The said Government is to communicate at once this publication to the diplomatic or consular agent of the infected country residing in its capital as well as to the International Sanitary Bureau.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUSTED. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman contend that that authorizes the United States to be represented in any sanitary bureau of an international character if we make the appropriation therefor?

Mr. HUSTED. This appropriation is not for representation. It is to pay the annual share of the United States toward the maintenance of the bureau, which is recognized in the treaty.

Mr. WALSH. But even though it is recognized in the treaty, does the treaty authorize the expenditure of any money for the payment of the quota or share of the United States in the expenses of that bureau?

Mr. HUSTED. It seems to me to be a fair assumption that the treaty contemplated the financial support of a bureau which it specifically recognized and of which our Government was at the time an adhering member.

Mr. WALSH. Well, we recognize lots of countries in treaties, but there is no obligation on the part of the United States to support the countries thus recognized.

Mr. HUSTED. This bureau was created pursuant to a resolution passed on January 29, 1902, by the delegates of the American Republics represented at the Second International Conference of American States, at which we were represented. This conference met in the City of Mexico. The International Sanitary Bureau was created with permanent headquarters at Washington, D. C. We were represented there, and in the treaty to which I have referred the bureau is recognized as being in existence as a bureau with which we are concerned, with which we do business, and in whose deliberations we participated, and it seems to me to be a fair assumption that the treaty contemplated financial support to the maintenance of such an institution.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, may I make this suggestion? If the gentleman's contention is correct, that the mere recognition in a treaty of the fact that the bureau exists authorizes this appropriation of $11,323.16, then it would be a basis for an appropriation of $100,000,000 as against a point of order.

Mr. HUSTED. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. In just a moment. There is nothing in this treaty that authorizes an appropriation—absolutely nothing. There is absolutely nothing in this treaty which authorizes any expenditure on the part of the United States Government. Certainly it can not be contended that an appropriation is authorized until some treaty-making power makes a provision authorizing the appropriation of money out of the United States Treasury.

Mr. HUSTED. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. HUSTED. I am sure the gentleman will not contend that it is necessary that the treaty limit the amount of the contribution. It might be for any amount, but Congress is not required to appropriate.

Mr. BLANTON. This treaty merely recognizes the fact that an international sanitary bureau exists.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, there would be no other way in which we could manifest our cooperation in this work except as has been done by the treaty. Of course, as the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] seems to infer, we could not in a treaty provide that we would make contributions from our Treasury in support of this bureau; but we joined in this treaty on becoming a party to it. We take the benefits from it. There is no way in which we can do this unless we join in support of it.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. TOWNER. Certainly.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Is not the case exactly parallel to a statute which might create an agency, and would not the statute afford the basis for the appropriation?

Mr. TOWNER. Certainly, and this would have a very much greater effect, because of the fact that it is a cooperation of nations. They joined with us in this treaty. If we joined in this treaty it is a necessary consequence—and not a mere inference but a necessary result of our joining in it—that we shall share in its support. Certainly it seems to me that the clause of the treaty which has been cited by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HUSTED] is ample justification and authority for our making our proper contribution in its support.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TOWNER. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Suppose, as in this case, the executive department of the Government goes ahead and makes provision, without authority of law, for the maintenance of an international sanitary bureau, not by treaty, so that it is not ratified. I take it that no one would contend that the Executive has power to do that without a treaty being entered into which would bind Congress to appropriate for it.

Mr. TOWNER. Yes; I think the gentleman is right in that.

Mr. MANN. Now, the bureau existing without authority, if Congress makes a reference to it and directs somebody—as it has the legal right to do—to report to that body, does the gentleman think that is an authorization for appropriations for a body which is not authorized?

Mr. TOWNER. I think the authorization for this appropriation exists by the very terms of the treaty.

Mr. MANN. There is no treaty.

Mr. TOWNER. I do not quite understand what the gentleman means.

Mr. MANN. There is no treaty providing for this organization.

Mr. TOWNER. There is a treaty providing for the creation of this bureau.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no; not at all. There is no pretense that there is any treaty providing for its creation. The only claim is that the treaty provides that somebody shall report to this bureau which has been created by the Executive without a treaty.

Mr. TOWNER. Oh, well, the recognition of it amounts to the same thing.

Mr. MANN. That is what I ask.

Mr. TOWNER. I think so. The treaty, Mr. Chairman, is the supreme law. It is even stronger, especially with regard to international affairs, than the ordinary act of Congress, because it implies an obligation on our part to cooperate in the work. It amounts to the creation of this obligation, which is a necessary incident to the creation and operation of this particular international bureau.

The CHAIRMAN. In the opinion of the Chair this provision is for the purpose of carrying out this treaty, and therefore the Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. Does the Chair rule that this is a treaty?

The CHAIRMAN. It is in effect.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Unless it is a treaty, there is no foundation for the ruling of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair views it as a treaty.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Will the Chair be good enough to give the reasons whereby he arrives at the conclusion that it is a treaty when it certainly is not?

Mr. MANN. The Chair stated that it was for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of the treaty.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has so ruled.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. RICKETTS] be permitted to address the House for 10 minutes out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. RICKETTS] be permitted to address the committee for 10 minutes out of order. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICKETTS. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, I am prompted by a sense of duty to my constituency and to the country to address you at this time upon a subject of the most vital concern to the citizens of this the richest and greatest country in the world.

I am certainly under obligations to the committee for yielding this time to me when you are engaged in the consideration of a bill as highly important to the country as this one is.

I think the question of the coal strike is uppermost in the minds of the people at this time. I come from a district in which there are 126 coal mines, and in which there are about 6,000 coal miners.

There is an erroneous idea prevalent in the country now that 600,000 coal miners walked away from work and went out on a strike. Nothing could be further from the truth than that. Of the 6,000 miners in my district, during the past year less than one-half have been engaged in their usual occupation. There seems to be an idea prevalent over the country that the reason for this strike is the fact that the miners are demanding a wage that is unreasonable and not commensurate with the service performed. I want to say to you gentlemen of the House that that is absolutely erroneous. In my district the pick miners get $1.116 per ton for producing coal. The machine miners get 14 cents per ton in the entry, and 17.4 cents per ton in the room. Now if the miners were given all the work that they could do, of course they could make good wages even at that price, but during the last 12 months the 6,000 miners in the district that I have the honor to represent have worked less than 100 days, and their average wage per day has been $7.50.

You can easily see that their income for the past 12 months has been less than $750. Right now in the Hocking Valley many women and children and miners are starving. They are being supplied by the people of my town and county with the necessities of life. I have a letter in my pocket from one of the best men in my county, now a common pleas judge of our court, who has served in that position for about eight years. He is one of the most conservative men I have ever known. By your permission I will read this letter to you:

COURT OF COMMON PLEAS, HOCKING COUNTY, OHIO,
Logan, Ohio, March 25, 1922.

Hon. EDWIN D. RICKETTS,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: I received your generous check for the miners, and very much appreciate same.

Distress among coal miners in Hocking County is alarming, and I am informed that similar conditions exist in Perry and Athens Counties. In Hocking County the coal-producing area, as you know, is somewhat limited; yet a careful survey made by the committee on relief for this county, of which I am the chairman, shows that there are in our county alone 127 families, comprising in all 725 persons, who are in absolute need of food.

So far we have provided food and clothing obtained through donations from our citizens generally. But we have now neither food nor clothing, and the money donated is almost exhausted, as we have only about $100 left. That, with what food we sent to points of distribution on Tuesday of this week, will last but a few days more. We have exhausted our local resources and expect to make an appeal to the State through Governor Davis within the next few days.

It seems now certain that there will be a strike commencing April 1, and then there will be no work at all at the mines. For the last 16 months or more there has been but little work for these people, and until recently they lived upon their savings, what little they were able to earn, and the union allowances. The picture is dark enough without going further.

If the State could be induced to construct the contemplated pike from Nelsonville, by way of Murray City, to New Straitsville work could be given those in need, and they would be glad to get it, as they prefer to earn a living to getting it at the hands of charity. I have no doubt that many of them have suffered because they were too proud to make known their condition. The work, under present circumstances or conditions, for which we may possibly hope in the near future, will not give employment to all for any considerable portion of the year.

Of course, relief must be found for these miners somehow, somewhere. As civilized Christian people, we can not sit by and see them starve.

Yours, sincerely,

ELMER O. PETTIT.

On the 31st of March, 1922, at midnight, the agreement between the coal operators and the miners of the country expired. Wage agreements between the miners and operators began as early as 1896, and have continued ever since, covering certain definite periods of time. The first general agreement between operators and miners dates from the appointment of an anthracite commission by President Roosevelt in March, 1903. The awards of this commission not only settled the strike, but established a basis of negotiations between miners and operators from which all subsequent modifications of wages and working conditions have been developed.

During the war an agreement made, in conjunction with the Fuel Administration, granted increases of wages. When this agreement expired on April 1, 1920, a controversy arose, and in June, 1920, a coal commission was appointed consisting of three members, one representing the operators, one representing the miners, and one representing the general public. The result of this commission's deliberations was the contract which has expired, and by which an increase in wages was granted averaging 17 per cent.

That the pending strike could have been averted is my firm belief. No just reason can be assigned for it. Both capital and labor are vitally essential to our industries and institutions. It is to be deeply regretted that operators in certain States flatly and bluntly refused to meet the miners for the purpose of determining and agreeing upon what is known as a wage-scale contract.

I deem it advisable to give to the House a brief historic sketch of the amount of coal in the United States, with some figures that, in my judgment, will enable all of us to more clearly understand the value and extent of this great industry in our own country.

COAL.

It is estimated that the United States coal fields comprise about 311,000 square miles, exclusive of Alaska. Geologists feel assured that the coal deposits of the Territory of Alaska extend over thousands of square miles. Coal is also mined to some extent in the Philippine Islands. So, it is perfectly obvious that the coal industry is one of the greatest, if not the greatest industry in this country.

As far back as 1750 soft coal was occasionally used in blacksmiths' forges here, and attempts were made to utilize it in smelting iron. The exceedingly rapid increase in the production of coal since the first two decades of the last century is shown in the following table:

Bituminous coal production in the United States.

	Tons.
1807–1820	3,000
1830	104,860
1850	2,880,017
1870	17,371,305
1890	111,302,322
1910	417,111,142
1919	458,063,000

Coal production by States (net tons).

State.	Year.
	1910	1918
Alabama	16,111,462	21,280,000
Arkansas	1,905,958	2,228,000
Colorado	11,973,736	12,485,000
Illinois	45,900,246	91,263,000
Indiana	18,389,815	27,325,000
Iowa	7,928,120	8,240,000
Kansas	4,921,451	7,292,000
Kentucky	14,623,319	29,690,000
Maryland	5,217,125	4,759,000
Michigan	1,534,967	1,385,000
Missouri	2,982,433	5,605,000
Montana	2,920,970	4,276,000
New Mexico	3,508,321	4,241,000
North Dakota	399,041	813,000
Ohio	34,209,638	46,464,000
Oklahoma	2,646,226	4,785,000
Pennsylvania	150,521,526	183,712,000
Texas	1,892,176	2,260,000
Tennessee	7,121,380	6,916,000
Utah	2,517,800	5,535,000
Virginia	6,507,997	10,100,000
Wyoming	7,533,088	9,600,000
West Virginia	61,671,019	91,350,000

A careful study of the above data will show that Ohio produced 34,209,668 tons of coal in the year 1910, and 46,464,000 in the year 1918. Of course, everybody knows that 1918 was the peak of coal production in this country.

The coal industry is a part-time industry, the number of idle days out of a possible 308 working days being 63 days in the year 1918 and 115 days in the year 1919. On the average for the past 30 years the number of possible working days when the mines were not in operation was 123, as nearly as can be estimated. So it is plain to be seen that the miners averaged 123 idle days per year for the last 30 years.

While coal production increases in accord with normal development on an average of approximately 10 per cent per year, yet coal production in normal times varies from year to year with general industrial conditions. At the present time the United States requires for consumption about 500,000,000 tons of bituminous coal per year, while the capacity of the mines if kept in operation would be in the neighborhood of 700,000,000 tons per year.

It is estimated that the United States exports about 25,000,000 tons of coal per year.

RAILROADS.

The railroads of the country consume about 30 per cent of the total coal production. The carriers of the country own nearly a million open-top cars, and depend upon coal transportation for about 30 per cent of the total railroad traffic.

STORAGE OF COAL.

There is about 63,000,000 tons of coal in storage in the United States at the present time, that will be available for consumption, and will last for a period of about 55 days.

The control of the production of coal is responsible for the high price of coal to the people of the country. Of course, as this strike progresses the price of coal will go up, and the general public will be made to suffer the increase.

I am not one of those who believe that the price paid the miners of the country for producing the coal is the cause of the high price of coal to the consumers. Freight rates have had a great deal to do with this. I am fully convinced that the high freight rates of the railroads have had more to do with crippling the industries of this country and consequent unemployment of labor than any other factor. I am also convinced that unless the freight rates are reduced materially the railroads of this country will be driven into bankruptcy through their loss of business. [Applause.]

In this strike three parties will be affected: The operators, the miners, and the public. The operators will suffer a temporary financial loss. The public will suffer great temporary inconvenience. The loss to the miners and their families is inestimable. This strike means that 600,000 union and about 200,000 nonunion men will be out of employment. The approximate distribution of the union miners by States is as follows:

Pennsylvania	154,825
Illinois	98,000
Ohio	49,000
West Virginia	48,400
Indiana	31,000
Kentucky	14,900
Arkansas, Oklahoma, and Texas	14,800
Iowa	13,100
Alabama	12,200
Tennessee	11,500
Kansas	9,700
Missouri	8,350
Wyoming	7,650
Maryland	5,250
Colorado	4,675
Montana	4,625
Washington	4,620
Michigan	2,125
Canada	20,600

OHIO.

Seven hundred and fifty-five mines in Ohio will be involved in this strike, covering 27 counties. Ohio is a solidly unionized mine State. There are only a few wagon mines that are not unionized. These 755 mines will be closed up tight so far as coal mining is concerned.

Belmont County, with 94 mines, heads the list.

Athens County is second with 90 mines.

Perry County is third, having 89 mines.

The other counties and the number of mines are:

Carroll	13
Columbiana	23
Coshocton	18
Gallia	4
Guernsey	36
Harrison	33
Hocking	37
Holmes	1
Jackson	48
Jefferson	76
Lawrence	16
Mahoning	3
Medina	3
Tuscarawas	65
Washington	1

More miners own their own homes in my district than in practically any other district in the United States, it being one of the oldest mining districts in the United States now in operation. There is a less percentage of foreign-speaking people employed in my district than in any other mining district in the country. The miners in this district insist that when a foreigner starts to work in the mine he must have made application for citizenship when eligible, or he will not be permitted to work with them. These foreigners are given ample time and proper instructions as to how to proceed to become a citizen of the United States. These miners believe that America is for Americans first, and that anyone coming from foreign countries who desires to engage in the mining industry should signify his intention of becoming a citizen of the United States.

Now, gentlemen of the House, I never undertake to defend a radical or an I. W. W. or a Bolshevist. I was a coal miner myself, and I know the miners of my district to be loyal American citizens. I know the workings of the mine inside and out, and I know that the propaganda going over the country right now to the effect that the high price of coal in different parts of the country is due to the fact that the miner is demanding an unreasonable wage is as false as it possibly can be.

Mr. BEGG. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICKETTS. I will yield to my colleague.

Mr. BEGG. Can the gentleman tell us why it is that the coal miners have had so little work in the past?

Mr. RICKETTS. That is due, in my judgment, to restricted production. I am not one of those who want the men who have capital invested in this industry to lose money on their investment. I want the operators of the country to have a fair return for the money they have invested, but I do not believe it to be right for operators in some parts of the country to unite for the sole purpose of restricting production of coal, whereby the price of coal is increased to the consumers of this country. [Applause.]

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICKETTS. I will.

Mr. DENISON. Does not the gentleman think that by reason of the high price of coal during the war and the great profits it led to overdevelopment of coal mines, the opening up of new mines, and the reopening up of old mines?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired?

Mr. LINEBERGER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Ohio have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Ohio may have five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICKETTS. Mr. Chairman, in answer to the question of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON] I want to say that it is true that during the war there were a great many wagon mines opened up and nearly every available mine of the country was put into operation, and a very large production was had during that period.

WORK.

The operators, under the previous existing contract with the miners, did not guarantee steady work to the miners. The amount of work furnished is left entirely to the operator. The miner has no knowledge to-day whether or not he will work to-morrow. He must wait the blowing of the whistle at the mine in the evening as a signal for "work" or "no work." There have been numerous occasions during car-shortage periods when the whistle blew "work" in the evening and again blew "work" in the morning; that, when the miner had gotten up at 4 o'clock in the morning and prepared himself and his bucket for work, and walked a distance of from 1 to 6 miles to the mine, discovered that the railroad company had failed to furnish empty cars, hence he was required to return home. This is not an unusual occurrence. It happens frequently, to the discomfiture and dissatisfaction of the miners. This has been known to occur as often as four and five times per week, and month after month each year, when the mine was presumed to be working.

The average time worked by the miners in my district during the last year was less than 100 days, while thousands of miners at different mines, of course, worked less than 50 days during the year.

The maximum inside day wage scale is a fair average of the earnings of the men who load and mine coal. Their daily earnings will give you an idea of their annual earnings for the past year on a per diem of $7.50 the maximum, and having worked less than 100 days means less than $750 income per year. Thousands of miners earned very much less than that sum, depending, of course, upon their location and the operations of the mines at which they worked.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICKETTS. I will yield to my colleague.

Mr. FESS. Is there any basis for the statement that the wages of coal miners are so inviting that farmers' sons leave the farms and go into the coal mines and therefore increase the number of surplus miners and decrease the number of agricultural people?

Mr. RICKETTS. I want to say to my colleague from Ohio [Mr. FESS] that I am glad to answer his question. That is absolutely not the case. That is not true. You can not take a man from the farm to-day and put him into a mine and make a coal miner of him at once. You have to teach him. It is a highly important business and very hazardous. A man has to know something of the conditions of mining and of the mine; he has to know something of electricity; he has to know something of the air and coal formation. He must be able to judge whether the air is pure or otherwise. He has to be able to lay the tracks; he must be able to timber the roof of the mine. All of these, and many other things, he can not learn in a day. It takes a man years to learn to be an efficient miner.

WAGES.

I am going to insert here a detailed mining scale for the Hocking Valley, which follows:

Detailed mining scale for Hocking Valley.

(Which is a basis for the State of Ohio. The tonnage rate applying to this district is practically the same as the balance of the State except the day wage scale for the in and out side day laborer, which is higher in the Hocking district than in the balance of the State.)

PICK MINING.

Run of mine	per ton	$1.1164
Entries, dry	per yard	3.6217
Breakthroughs, in entries	do	3.6217
Breakthrough, in rooms	do	2.5110
Room turning	per room	5.4896

This is the high-price mining, being hand mining. He is required to pay almost a cent a ton to the coal company for keeping his tools sharpened. He is required to purchase his tools, light, blasting powder, and caps from the coal company. The cost of blasting will vary from 2 to 12 cents per tons. He is required to keep his place properly timbered, lay his road, and properly prepare and clean his coal.

Before the war less than 10 per cent of the coal in Ohio was hand mined. During the war it was increased to from 15 to 16 per cent.

MACHINE CUTTING.

By Jeffrey machine, in room	per ton	$0.14
By Jeffrey machine, in entry	do	.1790
By punching machines, in room	do	.1744
By punching machines, in entry	do	.1905

LOADING.

In rooms, with hand drilling	per ton	$0.80
In entry, with hand drilling	do	.9290
Breakthrough, in entries (entry price)	do	.9290
Breakthrough, in rooms (per ton)		Entry price.

This machine mining represents approximately 85 per cent of the total tonnage of Ohio. The high-price machine mining quoted above represents about 28 per cent of the total machine mining. Machine miner, light-hand miner has to furnish his tools, blasting powder, etc. He is not, however, required to pay anything for tool sharpening. He must properly prepare his coal, and failure to do so means that he will be docked so many cents for so much dirt. He is also required to properly timber his place, lay his track, and in many cases push his empty car from a distance of 250 feet. The pay of which is included in the 80 cents a ton received by the miner for loading machine-mined coal.

INSIDE DAY LABOR.

	Per day.
Tracklayers	$7.50
Tracklayers' helpers	7.25
Trappers	4.00
Trappers (where old men are employed)	5.41
Bottom cagers, drivers, trip, riders	7.50
Water haulers, machine haulers	7.50
Snappers on gathering locomotives	7.50
Timbermen	7.50
Pipemen for compressed-air plants	7.42
Wiremen	7.50
Motormen	7.50
Motormen (minimum)	7.50
Other inside day labor	7.25
Spike team drivers, extra	.25
Drivers	7.50

Drivers are required to take their mule or horse to and from the barn or stable to their working place. Some places requiring almost an hour's work in the morning and in the evening.

OUTSIDE DAY-WAGE SCALE.

	Per day.
First blacksmith	$7.77
Second blacksmith	7.45
Blacksmith helpers	7.25
Mine carpenters	7.45
Dumpers	7.25
Trimmers	7.25
Greasers and couplers	5.06

When engineers and firemen are employed by the day, the minimum rate shall be $7.25 for eight hours' work. This shall not apply to men employed at a monthly rate. This rule shall also apply to coal washers.

I am also going to insert a detailed mining scale for the Crooksville district, as follows:

INSIDE LABOR.

	Per day.
Tracklayers, drivers, rope riders, bottom cagers, water haulers, machine haulers, timbermen, wiremen, motormen	$7.50
Pipemen for compressed-air plants	7.40
Tracklayers' helpers	7.25
Where old practical miners are employed as trappers	5.77
Trappers	4.00
All other inside day labor	7.25

OUTSIDE LABOR.

The following shall be the minimum base for outside labor:

	Per day.
Blacksmith	$7.50
Blacksmith's helper	6.79
Trimmers, carpenters	7.12

When engineers and firemen are employed by the day the rate shall be $7.25 for eight hours. This shall not apply to men employed at monthly rates.

MACHINE.

Cutting with chain machines, wide work, per ton	$0.1835
Cutting with chain machines, narrow work, per ton	.2218
Loading, shooting, and drilling in rooms	.80
Loading, shooting, and drilling in entries, break-throughs between entries, break-throughs between rooms and room turning, per ton	.9159
Double-shift entries and break-throughs between entries, extra, per yard	.483

PICK.

Per ton of mine run coal	1.146
Taking care of bone coal over roadway in rooms, extra, per ton	.065
For delivery of coal by miner to entry, per ton	.065
Driving entry taking top or bottom, 5 feet high from rail, where top is slated or bone coal, per yard	3.3796
Driving entry, under top, per yard	2.5102
Driving entry and taking down bone coal, per yard	2.8649
Break-throughs between entries for coal, per yard	2.5102
Room break-throughs, single entry system, for first break-through, per yard	2.5102
Room break-throughs, single-entry system, after first break-through, per yard	1.4490
Room break-throughs, double-entry system, per yard	1.4490
Room turning, per yard of neck	1.2678
Rock-shot in room neck, 2 yards	2.1734
Four yard wide places, per yard	1.5264
Double-shift entries and break-throughs between entries, extra, per yard	.483

The coal in the Crooksville district is what is known as "Thin No. 6 coal" and ranges in thickness from 30 inches to 4½ feet.

Men working in this district never have an opportunity to straighten themselves or straighten their backs during the day until they go out of the mine in the evening unless they choose to lie flat on the floor or bottom of the mine. They enter the mine in the morning and sometimes have to walk miles in a stooped position to their work. They are frequently compelled to go through mud and water in order to reach their work.

In the Hocking Valley district the pick miners receive $1.116 per ton. The machine miners get 14 cents per ton in the room, or 17.9 cents per ton in the entry.

In the Crooksville district the pick miner receives $1.146 per ton, and the machine miner receives 18.3 cents per ton.

The highest wages paid men working either inside or outside the mine in these districts is $7.50 per day. The lowest wage is $4 per day.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICKETTS. Yes.

Mr. LINTHICUM. What is the average pay of a coal miner?

Mr. RICKETTS. That depends altogether upon the number of cars that are put in the switch to be filled.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I was not talking about the particular days. I am trying to get at the general average, allowing for all the loss of time.

Mr. RICKETTS. An ordinary miner, if he has good high coal—5½, 6, 7, or 8 feet high—would probably get out six tons per day, while an expert miner might mine 10 tons, but there are very few men who can mine 10 tons a day, and the conditions must be right or they can not do it under any consideration. For the last 30 years the miners have averaged 123 days per year when they had no work.

Mr. LINTHICUM. That is what I am getting at. What is the earning capacity in an average.

PROPAGANDA.

Mr. RICKETTS. I have been flooded with propaganda, and I take it that every other Member of this House has likewise been the recipient of a great quantity of literature stating that the coal miners of the country are responsible for the high price of coal. Nothing could be farther from the truth. These men for years have lived on starvation wages, because of a lack of work. They could have made a fair living for themselves and families if they could have had reasonably steady work.

The press of the country in publishing the propaganda has made a great hullabaloo out of the fact that the miners were demanding six hours per day and five days per week. If they were to get that many hours per day and days per week regularly it would more than double the average employment per year, and would also double the production, and would make cheaper coal to the people of the country. The miners do not work by the day, but by the ton. This proposition does not mean a demand for fewer hours and days per week, but in reality it means an increase to them in hours and days per week, and a more equal distribution of employment to miners throughout the country.

Down in the Hocking Valley, in my district, right at this very minute men, women, and children are suffering because of the fact that the miners have not had reasonable work during the past year. If during the past year they had had six hours per day and five days per week regularly they would not be in this pitiable condition.

Coal is selling to-day in my State at from $5.50 to $7.50 per ton. Why is this? It is certainly not due to the fact that the miners are being overpaid. [Applause.]

Very few men in public life understand miners, mine work, and mine conditions in this country. Fortunately for me I have had actual experience in the mine, and I know personally mining conditions in my district, and in a general way conditions throughout the country.

I have no quarrel with the press, or with any Member of this House who offers a just criticism, but, as one coming from a mining district, and who as a boy was engaged in the mining industry, I would be doing violence to my constituency and to my conscience, if I do not raise my voice in solemn protest against any unjust criticism that may affect the reputation, thought, purpose, and ideals of the conservative miners of this country. I point with pride to the splendid citizenship, noble character, thrift, and high ideals of the miners whom I have the honor to represent.

The nations of the Old World have enslaved their labor. That shall not happen in America, so far as I am able to prevent it. I am not satisfied with giving to an American laboring man a mere living wage. I believe that every laboring man should have a wage commensurate with his service.

I believe that the men with the horny hands of toil are the very foundation and backbone of this great Republic, and that they should have the protection of the law, as well as that guaranteed to them by the Constitution, that of "equal rights to all and special privileges to none."

There is too much of a tendency in this country to protect the man who secures the dividends, to the prejudice of the man who produces the dividends. One is just as important to this Republic as the other, and both are interdependent.

Abraham Lincoln once aptly said, "Capital is the product of labor." What could be more true?

The miners are not the only class of individuals in the United States who are organized or unionized. In fact, every line of business throughout this country is organized or unionized, and the first of these to organize was capital.

What is the difference between the laboring man who demands an increase of wage in order that he may have a greater return on his labor, which is his stock in trade, and the man who raises the sale price of his commodities in order that he may have a greater return upon his investment, or the employer who reduces the compensation to his employee in order that his profits may be greater?

Gentlemen of the House, there is an erroneous opinion prevalent throughout this country with reference to the right to strike. That greatest of great Americans, the late lamented President Theodore Roosevelt, in his message to Congress on March 25, 1908, among other things, said:

> It is important that we should encourage trade agreements between employer and employee where they are just and fair. A strike is a clumsy weapon for righting wrongs done to labor, and we should extend, so far as possible, the process of conciliation and arbitration as a substitute for strikes. Moreover, violence, disorder, and coercion, when committed in connection with strikes, should be as promptly and as sternly repressed as when committed in any other connection. But strikes themselves should be recognized to be entirely legal. Combinations of workingmen have a peculiar reason for their existence. The very wealthy individual employer, and still more the very wealthy corporation, stand at an enormous advantage when compared to the individual workingman; and while there are many cases where it may not be necessary for laborers to form a union, in many other cases it is indispensable, for otherwise the thousands of small units, the thousands of individual workingmen, will be left helpless in their dealings with the one big unit, the big individual or corporate employer.
> Twenty-two years ago, by the act of June 29, 1886, trade-unions were recognized by law, and the right of laboring people to combine for all lawful purposes was formally recognized, this right, including combination for mutual protection and benefits, the regulation of wages, hours, and conditions of labor, and the protection of the individual rights of the workmen in the prosecution of their trade or trades; and in the act of June 1, 1898, strikes were recognized as legal.

President Roosevelt always showed a sympathetic interest in the welfare of the wage earner. Does any man here dare deny that he was one of the greatest, if not the greatest American that has yet lived? He believed in justice to all mankind. Justice and fair dealing to the laboring men of this country would go far toward eliminating forever any such thing as a strike. [Applause.]

Why is it that John D. Rockefeller, jr., who employs hundreds of men constantly, never has any trouble in adjusting wages with his men? Why is it that the late Senator Hanna, during his lifetime, never had a strike among the hundreds of men that he employed? Why is it that Henry Ford has never had a strike among the thousands of men that he employs?

HAZARD.

I am convinced that the employment of the miners is one of the most dangerous and hazardous occupations known to man. He is surrounded with danger upon every hand. Not only is this true, but his work is tremendously hard. He comes out of the mine with his clothes wet and his body black with grease, dirt, and grime. Colds, pneumonia, and consumption are prevalent among the miners by reason of exposure in and out of the mine.

I have seen them on their way home from the mine when their clothes were frozen on their bodies. Many of them work in water half knee-deep, in foul and noxious air, and many times they are compelled to work in low coal, where they are required to double up like jackknives.

They are always exposed to the danger of gas and dust explosions, to the falling of slate and coal, to drowning, to electrocution, to mine damp, to fire, and to being mangled by dangerous machinery. The man who mines takes his life in his hands the minute he enters the shaft or the mouth of the mine. His toil, labor, and service is an industrial necessity. Without it, the whole industrial network of the country would be greatly imperiled.

The public gives too little heed to the fact that the coal miner lives what might well be termed an isolated life. He loves his work. He strives to do his best. He saves his money in anticipation of providing amply for his wife and children, and that his children may be educated and cultured and have the privileges and opportunities accorded to other children whose parents are engaged in different occupations.

He spends his working hours in inky darkness. He braves the dangers of the earth's caverns, with no assurance that he will return to his loved ones at home. In performing his duty as an industrial factor he is shut off from God's sunlight, from the sweet song of the birds, and from nature's refreshing air. His lot is indeed a hard one, and his annual income is meager, but he is one of the most important factors in the industrial world.

I believe in fair play to capital and to labor and to the people, and I am one Member of this House who will stand steadfastly and firmly at all times for a just, fair, and commensurate wage to the American miner and the American laboring man.

My heart bleeds with sympathy for the miners and their families, many of whom are actually in need of the necessities of life, and who have been living for the past year on limited rations because they have not had nor could they secure employment. [Applause.]

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to speak for five minutes out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from West Virginia asks unanimous consent to address the committee for five minutes out of order. Is there objection?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I shall have to object.

The Clerk read as follows:

ARBITRATION OF OUTSTANDING PECUNIARY CLAIMS BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND GREAT BRITAIN.

For the expenses of the arbitration of outstanding pecuniary claims between the United States and Great Britain, in accordance with the special agreement concluded for that purpose August 18, 1910, and the schedules of claims thereunder, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of State, as follows:

Salaries and expenses of the tribunal: For the payment by the United States of one-half of the following expenses: For three arbitrators for three months, at $1,200 each per month, $10,800; stenographers for arbitrators for three months, at $120 per month, $360; traveling expenses of arbitrators, $4,000; reporting proceedings, $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary; and for printing, stationery, and supplies, $500; in all, $10,330.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against this whole paragraph, beginning in line 5 and ending on line 20, the same being legislation unauthorized on an appropriation bill.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, this particular paragraph merely carries out the treaty which was entered into between the United States and Great Britain. The treaty was signed at Washington in August, 1910, and ratification of it was advised by the Senate in July, 1911, and it was confirmed by exchange of notes in April, 1912.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is overruled.

The Clerk read as follows:

WATERWAYS TREATY, UNITED STATES AND GREAT BRITAIN: INTERNATIONAL JOINT COMMISSION, UNITED STATES AND GREAT BRITAIN.

For salaries and expenses, including salaries of commissioners and salaries of clerks and other employees appointed by the commissioners on the part of the United States, with the approval solely of the Secretary of State, expense of printing, cost of law books, books of reference, and periodicals, and necessary traveling expenses, and for one-half of all reasonable and necessary joint expenses of the International Joint Commission incurred under the terms of the treaty between the United States and Great Britain concerning the use of boundary waters between the United States and Canada, and for other purposes, signed January 11, 1909, $38,000, to be disbursed under the direction of the Secretary of State: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for subsistence of the commission or secretary, except for actual and necessary expenses, not in excess of $8 per day each, when absent from Washington and from his regular place of residence on official business: Provided further, That a part of this appropriation may be expended for rent of offices for the commission in the District of Columbia in the event that the Public Buildings Commission is unable to supply suitable office space.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order as to the proviso beginning in line 10, page 21, and ending in line 15, as it provides subsistence in the sum of $8 per day, when the present law provides a maximum of only $5 per day.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, this is a mere limitation. It is on all fours with the provision which the Chair held in order which was offered to the bill yesterday.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks this is a limitation and overrules the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

INTERNATIONAL HYDROGRAPHIC BUREAU.

For the second annual contribution of the United States toward the maintenance of the International Hydrographic Bureau, $3,860.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the paragraph as legislation unauthorized by law.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, this is the paragraph relating to the International Hydrographic Bureau. I admit that it is subject to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

INTERNATIONAL TRADE-MARK REGISTRATION BUREAU QUOTA OF UNITED STATES.

For the annual share of the United States for the expenses of the maintenance of the International Trade-Mark Registration Bureau at Habana, including salaries of the director and counselor, assistant director and counselor, clerks, translators, secretary to the director, stenographers and typewriters, messenger, watchmen, and laborers, rent of quarters, stationery and supplies, including the purchase of books, postage, traveling expenses, and the cost of printing the bulletin, $9,600.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against this entire paragraph, beginning on line 19, page 23, and ending with line 5, page 24, for the reason that it contains legislation unauthorized on an appropriation bill.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, this is really one of the most useful and valuable of all the international bureaus of our Pan American bureaus with which we are connected. I admit that it is subject to a point of order, but I hope that the gentleman will withdraw his point of order. This bureau is of great convenience and utility to all men doing business with South America. They provide for the uniform registration of trade-marks and copyrights and work of that kind. It is something in which every business man in the country who is concerned with trade-marks, patents, or copyrights is interested.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I stand with the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] in his position that we have entirely too many of these international bureaus.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

The judge of the said court and the district attorney shall, when the sessions of the court are held at other cities than Shanghai, receive in addition to their salaries their necessary actual expenses during such sessions, not to exceed $8 per day each, and so much as may be necessary for said purposes during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, is appropriated.

Total, $30,400.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ROGERS: Page 24, after line 24, insert: "The appropriation of $275,000 for the transportation of diplomatic and consular officers carried elsewhere in this act shall be available for the transportation of the officers of the United States Court for China to the same extent as for the transportation of such diplomatic and consular officers."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that it is legislation which is unauthorized and not germane to the paragraph preceding.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, the organic act creating the United States Court for China will be found, perhaps most conveniently, in Barnes's Federal Code, section 7040. This court is established by legislation as a permanent judicial agency of the United States Government. It is, of course, a court specifically located in China, and it is required in the statute that the officers of that court shall be American citizens.

For years the Congress has been appropriating for the salaries of the officers, and it is a matter of common knowledge that those officers have been going back and forth between the United States and China. At the time that this same appropriation bill was before the House last year a point of order was made—my recollection is that it was made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON]—against various items incident to the carrying on of a foreign service. I remember particularly that a point of order was raised against the item carrying an appropriation of $1,800 for a steam launch to be used in connection with the United States Embassy in Constantinople. It was admitted at that time that there was no statutory authority specifically permitting a steam launch in Turkey or anywhere else. If my recollection is not at fault, and the gentleman is here to correct me if I am mistaken, the occupant of the chair at that time temporarily was the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The Chairman overruled the point of order on the ground that a steam launch of that character was a natural and proper incident to the carrying on of a foreign service.

Here we have a court 6,000 or 8,000 miles away. We have officers of that court who are necessarily American citizens. That court is the appellate court from the consular courts of China. Those consuls have been provided for in the matter of travel. It seems clear, under a very broad line of decisions made by the Chair in connection with this same bill a year ago, that transportation for the officers of the United States Court for China is a necessary, proper, and appropriate incident of the court itself. It is admitted that that court is created by law. Therefore, it seems to me it would follow as an inevitable corollary that the transportation of the officers of that court is a proper item in this bill as proposed by my amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. If the Chair will hear me a moment, under the ruling as made by the distinguished gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON], which was based upon decisions of Chairmen of this House for the last 50 years, he held that while the committee could properly place such an amendment in this particular paragraph which the gentleman seeks now to make apply to this paragraph under discussion, and that paragraph we have already passed, yet when the committee itself did not see fit to so place it in that paragraph and the paragraph had been passed and we were on another paragraph, it was improper for any Member, either a member of the committee or any other Member, to offer such an amendment from the floor. And that decision is such an important one, based upon such a long line of decisions, that I hope the Chair will consider it in passing upon this question, so that we may have a uniformity of opinions upon which we may rely.

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, the officers of this court are consular officers. The court is charged with reviewing the decisions of the consuls, and it is primarily a consular court of appeal. There is a law requiring its officers to be American citizens, and there is a provision that nothing shall be paid them unless they are American citizens. Being consular officers, they are entitled to travel under the same terms and conditions ordinarily as are other consular officers for whom there is an appropriation available for transportation. This amendment simply includes them where they belong, within the appropriation for consular purposes, for travel for consular officers. Mr. Chairman, the statute has not been read, but it is perfectly clear. It is very lengthly. It covers two or three pages, but it is perfectly apparent from the reading of it that the judge, who is paid $8,000 a year, that the marshal, who is paid $3,000 a year, and another officer, the district attorney, whose pay is $3,000 a year, are consular officers and chargeable with consular duties. The provision here is that the court shall sit in Canton, Tientsin, Hankow, and in Shanghai. A provision is made by statute for a subsistence allowance during travel. The tenure of the judge is 10 years, unless sooner removed by the President for cause. It certainly could not have been contemplated by the act of Congress creating this court that a marshal, required by the act to be an American citizen, and paid a salary of $3,000 a year, should have to travel from this country and take up his duties in China, and should have to return, without any travel allowance of any sort. The clear purpose of the act is that the court officers are to be treated from the beginning to the end as the other consular officers. They are changed from time to time. If the Chairman would like to see the statute, I will send it to the desk.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. I do.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. As I understand the gentleman, he said that the statute specifically authorizes the sitting of this court at points other than Shanghai?

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. And does not that provision that they shall sit at other places imply an authority to pay their transportation?

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. I think, unquestionably, it does.

Mr. ROGERS. Since I addressed the Chair on the subject a moment ago I have procured the statute on this bill last year, which appears in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at page 2667, of January 29, 1921. When the item read was reached in the bill, which we have already reached, granting transportation for diplomatic and consular officers, Mr. BLANTON, addressing the Chair, said:

Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the paragraph because of the inclusion of the following matter, which constitutes new legislation upon an appropriation bill without any authority of law therefor.

And then he went on to elaborate that point. I admitted that there was no specific statutory authority for this transportation item, but contended that it was a natural, and, indeed, an inevitable, incident to maintaining a foreign service, and the Chairman, Mr. MANN of Illinois, overruled the point of order.

It seems to me that the decision of the Chair at that time is precisely in point, and should govern the present occupant of the chair when this point of order is being decided.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROGERS. I have not the floor.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, this is the only paragraph in the bill referring to the United States Court for China, and therefore it is apparent that it is the proper place to offer such an amendment if the amendment is otherwise in order. The question of transportation is incidental to the appointment of these officers.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the statute contemplates necessary transportation incidental to the appointment of this court, and overrules the point of order.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUSTED. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Does the gentleman know whether or not one of the treaties just completed with China with reference to her internal affairs abrogates these United States courts in China?

Mr. HUSTED. No. It does not abrogate them, but it makes provision for their abrogation some time in the future.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I did not mean automatically, but it does provide, does it not, that they shall in time be abolished?

Mr. HUSTED. Yes; when certain conditions shall have been complied with.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Of course, these treaties are not the law of the land yet, because they have not been ratified.

Mr. DENISON. I think the treaty referred to by the gentleman from Texas provides for a joint commission, and the joint commission is to make a report later and provide for the abolition of these courts.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS].

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

BRINGING HOME CRIMINALS.

For actual expenses incurred in bringing home from foreign countries persons charged with crime, $2,000.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LINEBERGER: On page 25, line 17, after the word "crime," strike out "$2,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$5,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Mr. Chairman, I notice on page 143 of the hearings, when this matter was up before the committee, the following colloquy took place between Mr. HUSTED, chairman of the subcommittee, and Mr. Carr, representative of the State Department. In reply to a query on the part of Mr. HUSTED as to his reasons for asking for an additional appropriation to the $2,000 which the committee proposed to allow, I find this explanatory statement on the part of Mr. Carr:

The duty of bringing home criminals is a statutory duty required under section 5275 of the Revised Statutes, and I think it would be wise to leave that amount as it stands. I wish we had estimated for the full $5,000, but certainly there is no question but that the $2,000 ought to be left, and I think it ought to be increased to $5,000. We did not estimate for more than $2,000 because as early as last September we could not foresee the demands that would be made upon this fund. Whether you can do anything with an oral recommendation for an increase to $5,000 I do not know, but based upon our current year's experience and the legal obligation involved——

Mr. HUSTED (interposing). I think we could, but we would be very reluctant to increase an estimate which you have made and which has been approved by the Budget officer.

Mr. CARR. I understand that perfectly, but the situation is as I have outlined it, and it is not at all improbable that if you should appropriate $2,000 we will be obliged to come back to you for a deficiency, if we have to bring home as many men as we have had to bring home during the current fiscal year.

Now, that colloquy between the chairman of the subcommittee and Mr. Carr, of the State Department, clearly indicates that unless that amount is increased to $5,000 there will be a strong likelihood of having to bring in a deficiency appropriation. He further indicates that there is great likelihood that the full $5,000 will be needed within the year. The $2,000 carried here is an insignificant amount. Gentlemen of the House, if the Government should have to face any emergency whatsoever in the matter——

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LINEBERGER. I would prefer to complete this statement.

If the Government should have an emergency in the way of bringing home criminals from foreign countries, more than this $2,000 provided here would be needed. I apprehend that in the ensuing year slacker Grover Cleveland Bergdoll will be apprehended and brought home to justice. There are a lot of ex-doughboys in the United States who are going to stay on Bergdoll's trail until he is finally caught, and we know these men will never quit until justice is satisfied. The authorities are making active efforts to apprehend this slacker, and it is not at all unlikely that this may take place within the coming year. Therefore, with this in view and the statement of Mr. Carr, I think this appropriation should at least be increased to $5,000. [Applause.]

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, the amount carried in the appropriation bill for the current year is $2,000. The estimate of the State Department for the next year is $2,000, and that is the amount we have recommended.

The reason why we have done so is as follows: They have used only $1,200 this year out of their $2,000 appropriation, and the fiscal year is three-fourths completed. For the past two years they have used but a few hundred dollars, less than $1,000, and the reason why they have used $1,200 this year is because, as Mr. Carr stated, they had some very exceptional demands made upon them. I am sure $2,000 will answer all necessary purposes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUSTED. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Has the subcommittee in this bill exceeded in any case the recommendations of the Budget?

Mr. HUSTED. Not in any instance.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUSTED. Yes.

Mr. BARBOUR. Will the gentleman state whether any real honest effort has been made to apprehend Bergdoll?

Mr. HUSTED. I have no information as to that.

Mr. BARBOUR. I should think that if such efforts are being made this sum would be needed for that purpose.

Mr. HUSTED. I do not think this sum would be used in that way in any event. There would be plenty of money in this fund to transport him if they caught him; but they could not use any of this money to catch him.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the amendment of the gentleman from California [Mr. LINEBERGER].

The question being taken, on a division, demanded by Mr. LINEBERGER, there were—ayes 5, noes 18.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

TITLE II.—DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE.

OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL.

Salaries: Attorney General, $12,000; Solicitor General, $10,000; assistant to the Attorney General, $9,000; six Assistant Attorneys General, at $7,500 each; Solicitor for the Department of the Interior, $5,000; Solicitor for the Post Office Department, $5,000; Solicitor of Internal Revenue, $5,000; Solicitor for the Department of State, $5,000; four attorneys at $5,000 each, one of whom shall have charge of all condemnation proceedings in the District of Columbia and supervise the examination of titles and matters arising from such condemnation proceedings in which the United States shall be a party or have an interest, and no special attorney or counsel, or services of persons other than of those provided for herein, shall be employed for such purposes; attorneys—1 $4,500, 1 $3,750, 4 at $3,500 each, 1 $3,250, 14 at $3,000 each, 2 at $2,500 each; assistant attorneys—1 $3,500, 2 at $3,000 each, 2 at $2,750 each, 4 at $2,500 each, 1 $2,400, 2 at $2,000 each; assistant examiner of titles, $2,000; chief clerk and administrative assistant and ex officio superintendent of buildings, $3,500; superintendent of buildings, $500; assistant chief clerk, $3,000; private secretary and assistant to the Attorney General, $3,600; clerk to the Attorney General, $1,800; stenographer to the Solicitor General, $1,600; law clerks—3 at $2,000 each, 2 at $1,800 each; clerk in the office of Solicitor of Internal Revenue, $1,800; attorney in charge of pardons, $3,600; superintendent of prisons, $4,000; disbursing clerk, $2,750; appointment clerk $2,000; librarian, $1,800; clerks—8 of class 4, 12 of class 3, 12 of class 2, 27 of class 1, 16 at $1,000 each, 11 at $900 each; chief messenger, $1,000; packer, $900; messenger, $960; 6 messengers at $840 each; 13 assistant messengers at $720 each; 7 laborers at $660 each; 7 watchmen at $720 each; engineer, $1,200; 2 assistant engineers at $900 each; 2 telephone switchboard operators at $720 each; 4 firemen at $720 each; four elevator conductors at $720 each; head charwoman, $480; 24 charwomen at $240 each. Division of Accounts: Chief, $3,000; administrative accountant, $3,000; chief bookkeeper and record clerk, $2,200; examiners—2 at $2,500 each, 4 at $2,250 each, 2 at $2,000 each, three at $1,800 each; clerks—3 of class 4, 6 of class 3, 7 of class 2, 5 of class 1; in all, $475,910.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HUSTED: Page 26 line 14, strike out the word "four" and insert in lieu thereof the word "five."

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, when this estimate was presented to the subcommittee there were a number of eliminations suggested by the Department of Justice and a number of substitutions asked for. We granted all the eliminations but we did not approve any of the substitutions, and we went a little bit too far. We reduced the number of these attorneys from five to four, and this amendment is simply to restore the number originally contained in the estimate.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUSTED. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman provide for any attorneys at $35,000 a year?

Mr. HUSTED. We do not.

Mr. WALSH. Were you asked by the Attorney General to do so?

Mr. HUSTED. We were not asked to do so. The highest-paid attorney in that department is $4,500, with the exception, of course, of the Attorney General and the departmental solicitors.

Mr. TILSON. The Shipping Board is the only governmental activity that has attorneys at $35,000 a year.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HUSTED].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DENISON: Page 27, line 15, insert the following paragraph:

"No part of the amounts appropriated in this paragraph shall be expended for the payment of any salary or compensation for legal services in connection with any suit or other proceeding brought in any court to enjoin any officers or members of a labor organization or labor union from suspending or quitting their employment."

Mr. HUSTED. I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, I think this is a plain limitation on the appropriation, which is entirely proper, as far as the point of order goes. Salaries may be provided by law, but we have the right to control the appropriations for them.

I assume that most of the Members will remember the serious labor difficulties of 1919, when the coal miners went out on strike in that year, and the Attorney General filed injunction proceedings which resulted in enjoining the officers of the United Mine Workers from calling the strike and from paying out any of their funds to support the members of the organization during the strike. It resulted ultimately in compelling the officers of the organization to call the strike off, and finally resulted in the men going back to work.

If any of you lived in industrial districts during that time, you, of course, had an opportunity to witness the bitterness of feeling that was caused among all of the industrial workers of the country by reason of this injunctive order. I had an opportunity to be among the coal miners, railroad men, and other laboring men at that time and since then, and I have never known a more bitter feeling and attitude toward the courts of the country than that which was caused by this injunction issued by Judge Anderson at Indianapolis. I think in many respects it was a very unfortunate proceeding. It resulted in an attitude on the part of a large part of our people toward the courts, the Federal courts particularly, that is very unhappy and unfortunate and ought to be avoided. We now are in the midst of a serious labor dispute——

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH. Why confine this simply to injunctions against labor organizations?

Mr. DENISON. Because I am more particularly interested in labor organizations at this time than I am in others, and because of the critical condition which exists at this time in the coal industry and the fear that prevails among the coal miners of the country that this power of injunction will be invoked again against them. They feel very intensely upon this subject. I assume that my friend from Massachusetts does not live in a coal-mining locality, and, therefore, has never been brought into contact with men in that line of industry and has no conception of the feeling that an injunction issued by a Federal court against their alleged right to quit work arouses among them. It is a very bitter and intense feeling, and I think it ought to be resorted to very rarely, if at all, because of the bad feeling that it does cause, a feeling almost of rebellion against the courts that it engenders among that great class of our people.

I started to refer briefly to the condition that now exists. For the first time in this country since the coal miners have been organized practically all of the anthracite and bituminous miners have ceased work.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DENISON. I will yield to my friend from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. The purpose of the gentleman, of course, is to make it impossible for the Attorney General to bring any suit of the kind described in his amendment? Does the gentleman fear that the present Attorney General, unless restrained by some provision of law like this amendment, will bring these suits?

Mr. DENISON. I will say to my friend from Texas that I am afraid the officials of the present administration might unfortunately follow the precedent set by the officials of the preceding Democratic administration and follow the same course taken by Attorney General Palmer.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. They have in many instances followed the last administration, and if that is to be the policy they will have to do so again.

Mr. DENISON. Well, I hope the instances may be exceedingly rare.

Mr. LONDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. LONDON. Is not the language of the amendment the identical language carried in previous appropriation bills?

Mr. DENISON. I am unable to say as to that. I do not remember.

Mr. LONDON. The gentleman did not copy the language of previous bills?

Mr. DENISON. No; I claim originality for this amendment. I prepared it without having consulted anybody or referred to any preceding law.

Mr. LONDON. I understood that there was in previous appropriation bills a provision which accomplished the same purpose.

Mr. DENISON. There may have been, but if there was I have no knowledge of it. This amendment I am offering refers to injunctions, and not to prosecutions for violations of the antitrust laws.

Mr. EVANS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. I will.

Mr. EVANS. As I understand, at the present time all the union miners are on a strike and out.

Mr. DENISON. I think that is true.

Mr. EVANS. To what section does this amendment the gentleman has offered apply?

Mr. DENISON. I said all union miners have stopped work. I think there may be a few in some parts of the country who had a separate contract and whose contract has not yet expired, and they are continuing to work under their contract. I may be mistaken about that, but I think it is true of the miners of Nova Scotia and it may be true of some miners in this country.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order which I reserved against the amendment, and I would like to be heard on it.

Mr. DENISON. It is reported that about 450,000 bituminous coal miners and about 150,000 anthracite coal miners, or 600,000 coal miners all together, have stopped work, and about 6,200 of the 7,500 coal mines in the United States are idle.

The loss in the production of coal in the bituminous fields by reason of the cessation of work amounts to about 1,200,000 tons daily and in the anthracite field to about 300,000 tons daily. It is difficult for most of us to comprehend what this great industrial crisis means to the men who support themselves and families by their labor in the coal mines. It is said that the daily loss of wages in the bituminous coal field alone is amounting to about $2,000,000 a day, and in the anthracite coal field to about $800,000 a day, or almost $3,000,000 each day is lost to the coal miners so long as the strike lasts. In the State of Illinois there are about 1,050 coal mines; every one of them is operated by union labor and is closed.

If the estimate of 600,000 men as the number of coal miners out of employment is substantially correct and if each man represents a family of five individuals, including himself, then it follows that about 3,000,000 men, women, and children are being deprived of their daily earnings and support by reason of the unfortunate conditions which have resulted in the closing of the mines.

Nor is this all by any manner of means, for the million and a half tons of coal that are usually mined daily are transported by the railroads for distribution throughout the country. With the closing of the mines the railroads have had to call in their coal trains and lay off their crews, so that many thousands of railroad men alone, to say nothing of men engaged in other dependent industries, are thrown out of employment.

Coal is a product that is absolutely necessary to a large part of the industries of the Nation, and while there is a sufficient supply on hand to last for some weeks to come, the reserve supply will gradually disappear, and unless the production of coal is soon resumed the industries of the country will gradually begin to close down, thereby throwing many more thousands of American workmen out of employment.

I do not think it is any exaggeration to assert that if work in the mines is not resumed within six weeks or two months there will be at least a million American workmen thrown out of employment as a result of it, and at least 5,000,000 men, women, and children will be deprived of their daily earnings and support.

This presents a serious situation and ought to receive the serious consideration of each one of us.

It is estimated by those connected with the Geological Survey that there are about 63,000,000 tons of coal now stored and available for use in the United States. It is reasonably certain that with this reserve supply available and the strike coming at this time of the year there will in all probability be very little physical suffering because of the shortage of fuel. Therefore the interest of the public in this unfortunate labor controversy need not yet seriously concern us. What should concern us most is the distress and the suffering that is bound to come to the families of the men who are out of employment.

While the coal miners are, as a rule, receiving very good pay when their wages are considered by the day alone, yet when it is further realized that coal miners on an average do not work over three or four days a week, and that there are very few miners in the country who work as much as 200 days a year, it becomes easy to understand that the miners are not overpaid, if, indeed, it can not be said that they are in fact underpaid for their labor.

And when we further consider that the wages of the average coal miner, when considered by the month or the year, is barely sufficient to support his family from day to day and month to month, we can more readily see the distress and the suffering that is bound to follow when so many miners are out of employment for any considerable time.

Mr. Chairman, it happens that I represent one of the largest bituminous coal districts in the country. There are between forty-five and fifty thousand men employed in the mines in my district. I have lived among them all my life. I think I understand something of the mining business and of the problems which confront those who earn their living by digging coal. I do not know of any coal miners in Illinois who are overpaid. I know of many who are, by reason of conditions under which they work, very seriously underpaid. I know of many who, by reason of the conditions under which they work, can not from their wages support and educate their families as the families of American workmen ought to be supported and educated. And therefore, Mr. Speaker, my sympathies are with the men who are thus thrown out of employment.

It would serve no useful purpose for me to attempt to discuss the causes that have led to the closing of the mines or to engage in any controversial discourse as to who is responsible for it. It is a labor dispute, involving one of the greatest industries of the country, and only those who are engaged in the industry as employers or employees and who know the purposes and the plans and the aspirations of those on both sides of the controversy can fully comprehend the problem in all its various angles.

This seems to be an admitted fact, however: That a controversy over wages between the operators and the miners arose during the year 1919, and as a result of their failure to agree the miners were called out on a strike, to be effective on November 1 of that year. Under certain war laws which were still at that time effective, the Government secured an injunction against the officials of the miners' organization, tied up their funds, and compelled the president of the miners' organization to issue an order canceling the strike. Finally, through the intermediation of President Wilson, the miners were prevailed upon to accept a compromise proposal of the Fuel Administrator, Mr. Garfield, and return to work pending the report of a Bituminous Coal Commission which the President had appointed for the purpose of adjusting the controversy between the miners and the operators. This commission made a report granting a substantial increase in wages to the miners and was accepted both by the operators and the miners and became effective March 31, 1920, to continue in effect until March 31, 1922. A joint conference was held in the city of New York between the coal operators and the representatives of the miners' organization on the 31st of March, 1920, and a two-year agreement was signed governing wages and working conditions in the mining industry, and in accordance with the finding of the Bituminous Coal Commission appointed by the President. In connection with this two-year agreement or contract, signed by the representatives of both parties, there was adopted this resolution:

Resolved, That an interstate joint conference be held prior to April 1, 1922; the time and place of holding such meeting is referred to a committee of two operators and two miners from each State herein represented, together with the international officers of the United Mine Workers' organization.

It would seem to me that if any part of that contract, solemnly executed by the representatives of the coal operators and the coal miners, was morally binding upon the parties thereto, this resolution with reference to the holding of an interstate joint conference prior to the expiration of the contract was equally binding upon them. And therefore it seems to me that the coal operators have to that extent been unmindful of their solemn obligation by refusing to meet the representatives of the coal miners in an interstate joint conference. The contract of 1920 did not bind or obligate either the operators or the miners with reference to any principle or policy that might be discussed or agreed to in the proposed conference. It left each of the parties free to act in accordance with their own judgment, but it did bind them to meet in conference, and therefore it seems to me the operators have not been justified in the course they have followed in refusing to meet the representatives of the coal miners in this joint conference.

Mr. Chairman, I believe that all industrial disputes grow out of lack of understanding. If employers and employees will but come together and meet each other face to face around the table, they will settle their disputes nine times out of ten if they are actuated at all by good intentions. Therefore it is not at all impossible or improbable that if the operators and the officials of the miners had with good intentions met in joint conference before the expiration of the contract and in accordance with the provision of the contract, some understanding might have been reached which would have averted this unfortunate closing of the coal mines.

In this connection I wish to say that, in my judgment, there is nothing that Congress can do that will relieve the situation. There is a constitutional limitation on the powers of Congress to interfere in the management of private industries. While the country is at war and we are as a Nation engaged in a struggle for existence, there is practically no limit to what Congress may do in the regulation of essential industries under the war powers of the Congress; but we are no longer at war.

Congress can now exercise no war power. We can only do that which we are expressly authorized to do by the grant of powers in the Constitution. Therefore I do not know of anything that Congress can do unless a national emergency bordering on a state of war should arise. Members may get busy with their typewriters and draw up long resolutions, and drop them in the basket, calling for all kinds of investigations, but these can serve very little useful purpose except to afford an opportunity for representatives of both sides of the controversy to give publicity to their respective contentions. The situation, it seems to me, is far too serious to justify anyone who is connected with the dispute or who is assuming to offer suggestions for its settlement in approaching the subject from a purely political point of view.

The coal-mining industry is one of the Nation's greatest and most essential industries. Without coal the wheels of industry would not turn; without it the people of the country would suffer. The coal supply of the country has hardly been touched, and the industry is destined to go on hereafter with increasing magnitude from generation to generation as the vast deposits of coal in the country are opened up and made available for use. The industry must be developed and operated either by private capital or by the Government itself. Whatever the necessities of the future may bring about, the Government can not at this time either own or operate the coal mines. The people are unwilling to embark upon that policy. The condition of the Treasury would not allow it. The Government could not efficiently undertake it. Our fatal experiment with the railroads, which cost us over $2,000,000,000, and our fatal experiment with ships, which cost us many more billions, ought to warn us that the Government is incapable of operating efficiently the coal mines or any other of the great industries of the country. Therefore they must still be operated by private capital. And the Members of Congress, it seems to me, can best perform a public service at this time by using such influence as we may have in attempting to induce those who have their capital invested in the industry and those whose labor is necessary to maintain it to get together as soon as possible and in a proper spirit of concession or compromise adjust their differences and allow these hundreds of thousands of our very best and most essential laboring men to return to work under such conditions that they may properly support and educate their families.

I believe that if my amendment is approved by the House it would result in a better feeling among the miners, and might help promote an early settlement of this serious situation.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. Mr. Chairman, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois has a bearing on the coal strike now existing throughout the country. I have here a letter under date of April 4, 1922, from Mr. Everett Drennen, president of the West Virginia Coal & Coke Co., at Elkins, W. Va., inclosing a statement of the Northern West Virginia Coal Operators' Association on the attitude of the association in respect to the proposition of meeting the miners in fulfillment of the contract that had been entered into a year or two ago in respect to meeting again in regard to a new contract. I do not wish to take up the time of the House, but I ask unanimous consent that this letter and statement be printed in 8-point type in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from West Virginia asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD as indicated in 8-point type. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. I will add to that statement this further observation; I am not familiar with the facts repeated in this letter and statement, but have consulted with an official of the United Mine Workers of America, who has assured me that it was a fact that the officials of the coal operators' association just named had always stood willing and anxious to meet the United Mine Workers of America in conference with a view of negotiating a new contract for the one that expired on April 1.

Moreover, the officials of the Northern West Virginia Coal Operators' Association are of the highest integrity, and I therefore feel quite sure that the "statement" is in harmony with the facts.

West Virginia is not in the so-called central competitive field. The statements of the Attorney General and the Commissioner of Labor charging a breach of the preexisting contract relating to conference and negotiation therefore do not apply to any of our West Virginia operators, West Virginia being regarded as an "outlying district." It is the policy of the mine workers first to contract with the central competitive field operators—Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, and western Pennsylvania—and then later with the operators in the outlying districts, such as northern and central West Virginia.

Mr. Chairman, the chief factors contributing to the great coal strike that is now upon us and Nation wide is the highly oppressive freight rate. Our foreign trade has been captured by the British. American cargo coal for South and Central America and the West Indies has ceased to exist. There is even but little demand for bunker coal, since foreign vessels undertake to bring enough coal to last them for the round trip.

Carrying charges on coal from southern West Virginia to the port of Norfolk and thence by boat to New England are from $7 to $8 per ton.

The consequence is that our miners have been working on short time and the plants have been losing money as a result of the fact that coal at the mines has been selling at from $1.25 to $2 per ton, run of mine, and the output necessarily limited. At the same time the price to the consumer has been very high due to transportation and distributing charges.

When will the Interstate Commerce Commission render its decision and grant the people relief?

The letter and statement are self-explanatory and are as follows:

WEST VIRGINIA COAL & COKE CO.,
OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT,
Elkins, W. Va., April 4, 1922.

Hon. WELLS GOODYKOONTZ,
House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. GOODYKOONTZ: The inclosed statement will, I think, be of interest to you in view of the present coal strike situation. It is the only official statement of our association, and not only tells the truth, but the whole truth.

Very truly yours,

EVERETT DRENNEN.

THE NORTHERN WEST VIRGINIA
COAL OPERATORS' ASSOCIATION, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Fairmont, W. Va.

OFFICIAL STATEMENT OF THE NORTHERN WEST VIRGINIA COAL OPERATORS' ASSOCIATION.

On March 7, 1922, the directors of the Northern West Virginia Coal Operators' Association met in their offices at Fairmont, W. Va., and authorized the advisory board of the association to invite district officers of district No. 17, United Mine Workers of America, into conference for the purpose of negotiating a wage scale and working agreement to become effective after the expiration of present contract, March 31, 1922.

The membership of the Northern West Virginia Coal Operators' Association is composed of the majority of the operators in 12½ counties in northern West Virginia, with an approximate normal annual production of 20,000,000 tons and approximately 20,000 employees.

In accordance with the instructions from the directors of this association, the advisory board sent an invitation in the form of a telegram to President C. F. Keeney, of district No. 17, United Mine Workers of America, to meet at Baltimore on the 13th of March. Mr. Keeney accepted this invitation by telegram for a conference preliminary to the negotiations.

The association sent to Baltimore on the 13th to negotiate an agreement with the United Mine Workers of America the full scale committee and the subscale committee, and a meeting of the directors of the association was also called the same date at the same place. Mr. Keeney appeared at this meeting, stating he had no authority and asked that an adjournment take place until the 25th, at which time he would come back to Baltimore to meet with the operators with authority to negotiate and conclude a scale. He stated that his district convention was to meet at Charleston on the 21st, and that this convention would appoint a scale committee with authority to act, and that he would secure authority from the international policy board at their meeting in Cleveland on the 24th. To all of these requests the operators agreed, and returned to Baltimore on the 25th of March prepared to negotiate and sign a scale with an agreement for working conditions. The meeting convened at the Southern Hotel, Baltimore, on the 25th, shortly after 10 a. m., and Mr. Fred Mooney, secretary of district No. 17, requested adjournment until 1.30, stating that it would be impossible for Mr. Keeney to be present until that time.

Adjournment was agreed to, and upon reconvening at 1.30 Mr. Keeney was asked if he was "prepared to negotiate and sign a wage agreement for the field of northern West Virginia, beginning April 1." Mr. Keeney replied: "Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I am unauthorized to negotiate and conclude a contract at this time." Mr. Keeney also made further statements with reference to why he did not have authority, and after his speech International Representative Moore made a statement to the same effect that Mr. Keeney spoke, and the meeting adjourned.

Notwithstanding these facts the United Mine Workers of America sent to individual members of their organization in northern West Virginia the following referendum ballot:

"Do you favor and vote for a general suspension of mining operations beginning April 1, when the present contract between coal miners and operators expires, in the event no agreement is reached by that time?"

By the mine workers' refusal to negotiate a new contract as specified on this ballot they destroyed the only means of preventing a suspension of work on April 1.

From this record the public will clearly understand the position of the Northern West Virginia Coal Operators' Association in the present situation. That position has been consistently a willingness to negotiate with the miners' union in an effort to avoid stoppage of production in this district. The operators not only took the initiative by asking for negotiations but consented to delay while the miners' officials sought to obtain authority from their national policy committee. The fact that the district union officials are without this authority has been and still is the sole obstacle to a peaceful settlement in northern West Virginia. The scale committee of the operators has been from the start authorized to conduct such negotiations. That the public will not obtain its usual supply of coal from this district is due simply and solely to the national policy of the United Mine Workers.

In face of this attitude on the part of the operators it must be obvious that a suspension of mining operations on April 1 is not only not of their seeking but beyond their power to prevent.

NORTHERN WEST VIRGINIA COAL OPERATORS' ASSOCIATION.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois. I make it on two grounds. First, that this amendment is offered to a paragraph of the bill which covers salaries only and not a fund for the prosecution of crime or for the conduct of any legal action.

These men have been appointed at salaries fixed by statute. They would be entitled to the salary if they rendered service. The amendment would be absolutely ineffective if adopted. Secondly, when that amendment is made to this particular paragraph it is absolutely a limitation on executive discretion. If the amendment was made to the paragraph providing money for conducting lawsuits, it might possibly be held in order. But here where it is made to a paragraph covering salaries only it is an absolute limitation on the executive discretion. You would be as much as saying that the executive could not under any circumstances bring any action such as referred to in the amendment. I therefore hold that the amendment is absolutely out of order as a limitation on executive discretion.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUSTED. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Would there be any way to tell from what salary it was to be deducted?

Mr. HUSTED. No; there would be no way to tell that. No way to tell which officer was to be deprived of his salary or how many officers were to be deprived of their salaries.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I apprehend that this is not the proper place for the amendment. As has been stated by the gentleman from New York, the amendment at this place might be a limitation upon the service, if it should be carried, and the result would be a limitation upon the service, not on the money appropriated. There is a place in the bill where the amendment could be very properly offered, and it is my purpose to offer it at that time, not only to take care of worthy labor organizations but also to take care of the farmers' interests. I believe, as the gentleman from New York has said, the amendment is out of order at this particular place.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield? Is it not just as much in order to this item as the item to which the gentleman proposes to offer an amendment?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I think not.

Mr. MANN. Both limitations are in the same language.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. When a man gets an annual salary of $5,000 a year, if he should take part in a prosecution of a labor union organization or for a farmers' organization——

Mr. MANN. He would not get paid at all.

Mr. DENISON. That is the purpose.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. If that were absolutely certain, I would favor this place in the bill, provided it took in the farmers.

Mr. MANN. I am not saying where the amendment ought to go in.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. It ought to go in where it always has gone in.

Mr. MANN. As far as the point of order is concerned, why is it not as much of a limitation here as anywhere else?

Mr. HUSTED. May I reply to that?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. HUSTED. My answer to that would be that the amendment is not germane. Here is an amendment providing that certain funds shall not be used for the prosecution of labor unions. I claim that such an amendment is not germane to a paragraph which merely provides for salaries. It would be germane to a paragraph providing for the prosecution of crime, or for the prosecution of civil actions, possibly, but how it can be germane to the paragraph which relates only to salaries of certain officers of the Department of Justice, I confess I am unable to say.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, it provides that money appropriated here shall not be paid to those who do certain things. I do not see why it is not germane, and I do not see why it is not in order. I do not think it is a very good amendment.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Illinois yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. EVANS. Suppose the man whom the gentleman has in mind has worked in the year 11 months and 10 days, and has done nothing which violates the limitation. He then works for two days on a suit that is prohibited. The balance of his time is devoted to other matters not prohibited by the limitation. What would be the basis of his deduction?

Mr. MANN. That all goes to the question as to the advisability of the amendment at this place. It has nothing to do with the point of order as to whether the limitation is in order. The difficulties of excuting it have nothing to do with the point of order.

Mr. EVANS. But is it even possible of execution?

Mr. MANN. That would be something for somebody else to determine.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a word or two in answer to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. EVANS]. Where an attorney is working on a salary for the Government, the Government may deduct from his salary such part as he has not earned. If he should leave his duties temporarily, the Government could dock his salary, as we commonly refer to it. If he devotes part of his time to the prosecution of such a suit as is referred to in the amendment I have offered, he could do so upon his own time, but not upon the Government's time, nor could he receive compensation for it from the Government. That is the purpose of the amendment. It is clearly a limitation. Congress has the right to place any limitation it desires on any money that is appropriated. My amendment would deter the Attorney General's office from bringing these injunction suits, because the officials could not receive any compensation out of this appropriation for the time they would devote to such suits. There is no danger of their doing so without pay, in my judgment.

The CHAIRMAN. Following the decisions in the stop watch cases, the Chair is of opinion that this amendment is a limitation, and overrules the point of order.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky offers a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Substitute offered by Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky for the amendment offered by Mr. DENISON: Page 27, line 15, insert the following: "Provided, however, That no part of the money appropriated by this act shall be expended in the prosecution of any organization or individual entering into any combination or agreement having in view the increasing of wages, shortening of hours, or bettering the conditions of labor, or for any act done in furtherance thereof, not in itself unlawful: Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for the prosecution of producers of farm products and associations of farmers who cooperate and organize in an effort to and for the purpose to obtain and maintain a fair and reasonable price for their products."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Eighty-seven Members present, not a quorum. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Thereupon the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DOWELL, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having under consideration the bill H. R. 11065, finding itself without a quorum, he had caused the roll to be called, that 270 Members, a quorum, had answered to their names, and that he presented the list of the absentees for printing in the Journal and RECORD.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of offering it in another place in the bill, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the substitute which I just offered.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to withdraw the substitute offered by him to the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON]. Is there objection?

Mr. LONDON. Reserving the right to object, may I ask the Chairman if it would be in order to offer an amendment to the substitute? The amendment should include the words "And provided further" after the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will only say that the amendment to the substitute is in order as an amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. LONDON. I object, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the substitute.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. LONDON. After the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON] insert the words "And provided further," and then follow it up with the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York be again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from New York.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. LONDON offers an amendment to the substitute offered by Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky: At the end of the Denison amendment insert the words "And provided further."

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, may we have the entire amendment reported?

The Clerk read as follows:

And provided further, That no part of the money appropriated by this act shall be expended in the prosecution of any organization or individual entering into any combination or agreement having in view the increasing of wages, shortening of hours, or bettering the conditions of labor, or for any act done in furtherance thereof not in itself unlawful: Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for the prosecution of producers of farm products and associations of farmers who cooperate and organize in an effort to and for the purpose to obtain and maintain a fair and reasonable price for their products.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. I would like to inquire whether that is offered as an amendment to the substitute of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] or to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON]?

The CHAIRMAN. As the Chair understands it, it is an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. HUSTED. Then I make the point of order that the amendment is not now in order, the substitute having been offered to the original amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks a perfecting amendment would be in order to the amendment.

Mr. HUSTED. I think not after a substitute has been offered, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the amendment is in order.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON] aims to prevent a repetition of the experience which the miners had with the Democratic Attorney General, Mr. Palmer. Mr. DENISON in his talk before the committee explained the demoralizing effect of the application for an injunction by the Attorney General in the great industrial controversy which took place between the miners and the operators in the year 1919 and the impression it created among the great masses of the industrial workers, that the action of the Attorney General was intended to throw the entire weight of the United States Government against the workers and for the employers. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON] is limited to applications for injunction and is new. It is a new limitation so far as appropriation bills are concerned. The substitute offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] is carried in the current appropriation bill and has been carried in appropriation bills for a number of years.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman yield now?

Mr. LONDON. Yes.

Mr. DENISON. Does not the gentleman from New York think that the amendment offered by Mr. JOHNSON ought to be made to a different part of the bill?

Mr. LONDON. I was just going to say that the substitute offered by the gentleman from Kentucky is carried in the present current bill as a limitation upon that section of the appropriation act which provides for the enforcement of the antitrust law.

Mr. QUIN. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. LONDON. Yes.

Mr. QUIN. In the Johnson amendment the words "Provided, however," occur, and they ought to be eliminated if your words "And provided further" are maintained.

Mr. LONDON. Let us see. The object of my amendment to the substitute is to combine the Denison amendment with the Johnson substitute, the Johnson substitute being a part of the current law. For some reason the committee in dealing with this particular bill has seen fit to eliminate that protection to labor organizations. I do not know why they have chosen to do so now, in view of the crisis which faces the country. Do they want to make it known that the Congress, the executive department, that the Government of the United States will be against the strikers and will favor the operators? What was your reason for eliminating the provision which is carried in a number of appropriation bills?

Mr. NOLAN. Will the gentleman from New York yield?

Mr. LONDON. Yes.

Mr. NOLAN. The amendment also would strike out the protection to cooperative farm organizations which has been carried in the bill.

Mr. LONDON. Yes. I can not understand why the committee has chosen this particular moment for eliminating this provision of the appropriation bill.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONDON. Yes.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. I desire to inquire if the latter part of the amendment is not made unnecessary by the recent legislation which exempts farmers' organizations from being subject to prosecution for their cooperative selling and bargaining?

Mr. LONDON. I would be inclined to agree with the gentleman from Indiana that so far as the farmers are concerned the recent act would take care of the situation, and that makes it so much more striking, it makes it so much more important, that this provision relating to labor organizations should be continued in the law. The omission is surely not accidental.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONDON. Yes.

Mr. BARBOUR. The act referred to by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BLAND] takes care of the farmers' organizations, but provides in certain cases if they shall monopolize their products to enhance prices then an injunction can be applied for.

Mr. LONDON. This limitation does not intend to permit either labor organizations or farmers' organizations to commit violations of the law.

Mr. BARBOUR. No. But, as I say, the farmers' organizations are taken care of; but still, if they violate the law, then the Attorney General, or the Secretary of Agriculture through the Attorney General, can ask for an injunction, and if the amendment went in in this form it might conflict with that law to a certain extent.

Mr. LONDON. I do not quite get the gentleman's point.

In short, Mr. Chairman, my amendment intends to combine the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON] with the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON]. The object of this limitation is not to permit labor unions to violate the law but to protect them against an indefensible interpretation of the antitrust act. They are not and can not be monopolies, and they shall not be treated as such.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, I move that the debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto be now closed.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order——

Mr. QUIN. I have been recognized to speak here. The gentleman from New York can not put me off.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi has been recognized by the Chair. If the gentleman from New York will modify his motion and make it five minutes, the Chair will put it.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, I have obtained recognition and I am indeed sorry that my Republican friend endeavored to cut off any debate on this important amendment. The amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] and the further amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON], in my judgment, ought to be adopted here.

The gentlemen who oppose this action pretend to think that it would hurt the bill. This bill leaves out the necessary protection that these two amendments ought to guarantee. We had those very things in the antitrust law, in the Clayton antitrust law, that was placed in 1914 on the statute books, and these amendments are simply a guaranty that those things will still be carried out. The laboring men and the farmer organizations of the United States had that bill of rights granted to them by the Congress of the United States and signed by the President of this Republic, and to-day it stands as the law. The Supreme Court of the United States has never yet eliminated it, and when this bill is sought to be passed through this House without that security in it, it seems to me it would be as though you were endeavoring to strike down the labor unions and farmer organizations that already have this protection.

What harm could it do that this Congress should go on record as adopting these amendments, saying that none of these funds shall be used by the Attorney General or any other agency of this Government to override the very potent rights that were guaranteed in the Clayton Antitrust Act?

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. QUIN. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. As I understand the gentleman, he says that the effect of this amendment is already law, and this amendment will only insist upon its being law. Is that the gentleman's position?

Mr. QUIN. Oh, the gentleman does not understand. These amendments are proposed to keep your Attorney General and his agents from going out and criminally and wrongfully jumping on the poor union laboring men of this country and the organizations of poor farmers of this country, who, in my judgment, have had no class legislation enacted in their behalf, but only had justice given to them when the Clayton Antitrust Act was passed, exempting these two powerful forces for good in this country from being placed under the oppressive hand of organized capital and organized greed that always has its greedy hand in the pockets of all the people. We do not want any of the funds carried in this or any other bill to be available for the purpose of preventing the legitimate efforts of labor unions and farmers' unions to get justice and a fair price for their toil. Who of you can object to the amendment being adopted to further insure that those safeguards shall be placed around these labor organizations and the farmers' unions of the United States when this bill becomes effective? [Applause.]

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, I move that debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto be now closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HUSTED].

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. LONDON) there were—ayes 75, noes 40.

Accordingly the motion was agreed to.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry, please. Just what was the debate closed upon?

The CHAIRMAN. On the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON] and all amendments thereto.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I beg to refer to the notes of what was said. I took particular note of what the gentleman from New York said. He moved that we close debate upon this amendment.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. And all amendments thereto.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has stated the motion correctly. The gentleman is out of order.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I did not claim to be in order. I was undertaking merely to propound a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. And the Chair has answered it.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. All right. Then the Chair is out of order in discussing it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama will please be seated. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON] to the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON].

Mr. LOWREY. Mr. Chairman, may we have those amendments reported? Some of us got in late and do not know what we are voting on.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no objection, the amendment will be reported. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LONDON to the amendment offered by Mr. DENISON: At the end of the amendment add: "Provided further, That no part of the money appropriated by this act shall be spent in the prosecution of any organization or individual for entering into any combination or agreement having in view the increasing of wages, shortening of hours, or bettering the conditions of labor, or for any act done in furtherance thereof not in itself unlawful: Provided further, That no part of the money appropriated by this act shall be expended for the prosecution of producers of farm products and associations of farmers who cooperate and organize in an effort to and for the purpose to obtain and maintain a fair and reasonable price for their products."

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Should not the vote first be taken upon my substitute?

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON] is first in order. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. LONDON) there were—ayes 49, noes 84.

Accordingly the amendment of Mr. LONDON was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs upon the substitute of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. May we have it reported again?

Mr. MANN. I ask to have the original amendment and the substitute both reported.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no objection, the Clerk will report the Denison amendment and the substitute of the gentleman from Kentucky.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Substitute offered by Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky: Page 27, line 15, insert: "Provided, however, That no part of the money appropriated by this act shall be spent in the prosecution of any organization or individual for entering into any combination or agreement having in view the increasing of wages, shortening of hours, or bettering the conditions of labor, or for any act done in furtherance thereof not in itself unlawful: Provided further, That no part of the money appropriated by this act shall be expended for the prosecution of producers of farm products and associations of farmers who cooperate and organize in an effort to and for the purpose to obtain and maintain a fair and reasonable price for their products."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON].

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 74, noes 65.

Accordingly the substitute was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the amendment as amended by the substitute.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. NOLAN, Mr. BANKHEAD, and Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky) there were—ayes 69, noes 77.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed Mr. HUSTED and Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 68, noes 75.

Accordingly the amendment as amended by the substitute was rejected.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota: Page 27, line 15, insert: "For attorneys, accountants, and clerical assistance in the investigation and prosecution of fraudulent war claims against the Government and investigation of settlements made on war contracts and prosecution in such cases as the Attorney General shall deem necessary, $500,000."

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, in this bill providing for the entire legal department of the Government I find no provision for the necessary clerical assistance and accountants that will be required if we are going to see that those men who grafted upon the Government during the war are prosecuted. Everyone who is at all familiar with the situation recognizes the fact that the Attorney General and some individuals in the War Department have had for some time under investigation many of these claims, and in at least one case with which we are familiar—a recent case—have taken legal action.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Was there an estimate sent in for an item of this sort?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Not so far as this is concerned.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The Department of Justice has not asked for anything?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. So far as I know the Department of Justice has not asked for it, but I will say that I want to anticipate, because it will not be a very great length of time before they will ask for such an appropriation, and I want to get it in in time; that is the reason I am offering this amendment. I had no idea that gentlemen would oppose it. We know in a recent case prosecution has begun, and I know that the entire department which has charge of the prosecution in this great class of cases is now in the hands of one clerk, who a few years ago was drawing a salary of $1,200, and in the hands of the few investigators, none of whom are receiving an adequate salary. These men are being opposed to-day by the best lawyers in the United States. In any one of these cases the Government would not be more than adequately represented if it had two of the finest and highest priced lawyers in the United States.

I say without any hesitancy and without any reservations that these claims ought to be prosecuted, and if they are not prosecuted within a reasonable time the statute of limitations will expire and the men who have been guilty of these colossal war frauds will not be punished. After a thorough investigation, which lasted all of last year, I am thoroughly convinced of the necessity of an appropriation, so that the legal department of the Government will function in these prosecutions during the next two years.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I will.

Mr. MANN. As to the amount involved, has the gentleman made any estimate?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I have made somewhat of an estimate, that I do not have with me to-day, but I might present it to the House on another occasion. I do not know that I would be within a hundred thousand dollars of the necessary amount, and I make no pretension at this time as to the accuracy of the estimate or how much the Attorney General would need; it is a matter for him to determine, and I have such confidence in him that I feel he would not expend any more or any greater amount than is absolutely necessary.

Mr. MANN. Has the gentleman consulted the Attorney General or anybody in the department?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I will say that I have not consulted the Attorney General.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, I think I can say to the gentleman from South Dakota that he is out in his estimate just the amount carried in his amendment. The Department of Justice has not asked for this item, but the Department of Justice is engaged in this work, and has ample funds to carry it on at the present time. It does not need an additional dollar for this purpose, and if this money was appropriated it simply adds $500,000 to the amount carried in the bill which we would have to raise by taxation and which the department could put to no good purpose.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUSTED. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Inasmuch as the gentleman has just informed us that the Attorney General is engaged in the work of prosecution, will the gentleman state what prosecutions have been begun?

Mr. HUSTED. Well, the prosecution of Charles W. Morse is one which has had great attention in the public press.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Can the gentleman name any other?

Mr. HUSTED. I do not know what particular prosecutions have been carried on, but I know that they are engaged in investigating these cases. I know that is a large part of the work carried on by the bureau for the detection and prosecution of crime. These cases are in the hands of the attorneys for the department, and if prosecutions have not been instituted they soon will be.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield for one more suggestion? All through the campaign of 1920 I think there was not a Republican speaker who did not suggest that there ought to be prosecutions of the persons guilty of these infamous frauds on the Public Treasury. Therefore, I sincerely hope that the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUSTED. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. The gentleman says there was a force engaged on the investigation of these fraud cases; can the gentleman name some one above a minor clerk engaged in the work at the present time?

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield? Will the gentleman permit me to make a reply?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I asked the question of the chairman of the committee. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin feel that it devolves on him to protect the chairman of the committee?

Mr. HUSTED. The chairman of the committee does not need protection.

Mr. STAFFORD. The chairman of the committee needs no protection; but I thought I could give the gentleman from South Dakota some information which I thought might be agreeable to him; but I can do it in my own time.

Mr. HUSTED. I was looking up some papers to give the gentleman some definite information. Under fraudulent claims there are now 50 cases being investigated by the department, and there are 108 cases of fraud being investigated.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Are these war contract frauds?

Mr. HUSTED. I think nearly all of them are.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Those are the ones about which we are especially solicitous.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Does the gentleman know that one of those is a war fraud case?

Mr. HUSTED. I know from the statement of the chief of the bureau.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Will the gentleman name one war fraud case—I am not talking about all these fraud cases all over the country—with the exception of the harness case?

Mr. HUSTED. The gentleman knows perfectly well that no subcommittee can possibly go into such minute detail as to ascertain the title of every particular case being investigated by the Department of Justice. We have the general statement that this class of cases is having the very careful attention of the Department of Justice, that the cases are being investigated and being prepared for trial, and I know that the department is anxious to bring these guilty persons to justice as speedily as possible.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUSTED. Yes.

Mr. STEVENSON. I wanted to ask the gentleman if the provision under the heading "Detection and prosecution of crimes," found on pages 31 and 32, under which $2,250,000 is appropriated, does not cover all of the items practically that the gentleman embraces in his amendment?

Mr. HUSTED. It does.

Mr. STEVENSON. A bureau of investigations is provided for that.

Mr. HUSTED. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] referred to the fact that practically every Republican speaker on the stump in 1920 made statements that there would be prosecutions. Of course, practically every Republican speaker on the stump in 1920 said a great many things and made a great many proimses that have not yet been fulfilled. It is quite likely that there is more justification for not fulfilling those particular promises than anything else that was promised in the campaign of 1920. Because I will tell the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER], in confidence, that that was mostly just pure political bunk. The truth of it is that we had investigating committees here that investigated, not all, but a great many of these contracts, and never did one of those investigating committees of the House itself lay its hand upon a specific contract and say to the Department of Justice, "Here, prosecute this." They put the matter up to the Department of Justice in merely general terms.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I yield. I do not mean to say that there are not cases that need investigation.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Does not the gentleman perfectly well remember the report made by the commission of which Charles E. Hughes, now Secretary of State, was the head, in which he suggested boldly that there was indubitable evidence of fraud? Then the committee which was afterwards appointed by the House—I was not then a Member of the House—followed up the investigation and went into the spruce-tree contract cutting, and so forth, in the matter of airplanes, where millions and hundreds of millions of dollars were expended and no airplanes were produced. Afterwards some of the men to whom the trail most directly led were promoted.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I will say to the gentleman that, so far as that House investigation is concerned, the gentleman from Wisconsin, and a great many others, took just one side of the proposition and accepted it as proof, and probably never read the minority report.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. The gentleman evidently is opposing this appropriation. Am I correct?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes; I am opposing this because there is no estimate for it. The Department of Justice has not asked for it. I am not opposing any prosecutions, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. The gentleman is opposing it also upon the grounds that he does not deem it to be necessary because of the great purity of the last administration and the fact that they conducted the war without graft.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I have made no such statements.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Is not that one of the reasons the gentleman opposes it?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I oppose it because there has been no estimate made for it, and there is no testimony that it is needed except the gentleman's statement, and the gentleman does not know.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. We both served on investigating committees during the last Congress, and the gentleman reported in every case in which he made any report at all that there was no evidence of either graft or violation of law. The gentleman still believes that?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Oh, no; I did not so report. I can tell the gentleman of a great many specific cases, though I do not care to bring that matter up now.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. In view of the statement that the gentleman from New York [Mr. HUSTED] has made to the effect that the Department of Justice had all of the money that is necessary to make these prosecutions, and that all of the money that the Department of Justice has asked has been granted in order to make these prosecutions, will this amendment do anything more than simply provide additional funds for the employment of additional attorneys?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. That is all; and the gentleman from New York [Mr. HUSTED] has very frankly stated that situation to the House, and until there be an estimate from the Department of Justice or a statement that the Department of Justice needs it, I shall oppose this amendment. If the Department of Justice will say that it needs the funds, then I will join with the gentleman in providing it, but not until then.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota) there were—ayes 20, noes 63.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph. I am not willing to make an appropriation for the Department of Justice in view of the action of the House in refusing to limit the uses to which the appropriation may be made as proposed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON] and by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON]. Bear in mind, gentlemen, that previous bills have carried language similar to that proposed by the amendments which the committee has rejected. That language is now omitted from this bill. Its omission undoubtedly has a significance. I am bound to ask myself what it is.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Chairman, I dislike very much to object, but that water has gone over the dam, and I do not see any good purpose to be served by discussing it now. I shall have to object unless the gentleman confines himself to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will proceed in order.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, I am proceeding in order. That fact has a significance. It means something. Why has the committee reporting this bill omitted that limitation, and why has the House now refused to put the limitation in? That is something which everyone should ask himself.

More than two months ago I called the attention of the House to the fact that a great coal strike was impending.

Mr. HUSTED. I make the point of order that the gentleman is not proceeding in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will proceed in order.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I am doing it.

I begged that the administration would use some of its great power and prestige toward doing something to prevent that strike. I said that the strike was inevitable unless there was intervention. I said that the coal operators had prepared themselves for it and wanted the strike to come on. I called attention to the fact that they had refused to comply with their agreement to discuss the matter with their employees, and I urged the President to use some of his prestige to cause a meeting between the two great contending forces so that something might be done to prevent the strike.

But nothing was done. The President had business in Florida about that time. Oh, there has been a "bluff" at doing something to prevent the strike. A colorable and hypocritical pretense has been made of an effort to bring these contending forces together. But no sincere effort at settlement or conciliation has been made. By the way, I want it distinctly understood that I do not include within that condemnation the splendid effort of the chairman of the Committee on Labor. That was sincere and good; he has gone as far as he could. I refer to the executive and to the administrative branch of the Government. I assert that there has been no real and honest attempt to prevent the coal strike.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is nothing pending before the House calling for the remarks——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. NOLAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. NOLAN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to correct the impression that might have been created on this committee by the statement of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL]. He stated that the substitute offered by the gentleman from Kentucky might be considered a reflection upon the Department of Justice. I must disagree, to this extent: Long before I came to Congress, and that was some nine years ago, there was carried in the appropriation bill appropriating money for the Department of Justice an exemption prohibiting the use of the funds of the Department of Justice from prosecuting labor organizations and farm organizations under the provisions of the antitrust law. In 1914 the Sixty-third Congress passed the Clayton Act, amending the Sherman antitrust law. The Appropriations Committee of the House at that time did not see fit to wipe out that proviso, and it has been carried in every appropriation bill from that day to this. And it has not been considered a reflection upon preceding Attorneys General of the Department of Justice. And I take issue with the statement of the gentleman from Wyoming that it must be so considered, by the widest stretch of the imagination, to be a reflection upon the present Attorney General or the administration of the Department of Justice.

Let us see what the facts are. Some two years ago the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] succeeded in committee in having this provision stricken out. I succeeded in getting a roll call in the House proper, and by an overwhelming vote the House defeated the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] and reinstated the very provision that was offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] to-day.

I want to say to my Republican friends here that if they think the situation is such in the congressional elections that are coming along next November, that they can go along in the way they have been going on and get consideration from the so-called labor vote or the workingmen in the industrial districts, there will be an awakening after the votes are counted and it will not be helpful to their control of this House. [Applause.] It is passing strange that the Committee on Appropriations brought in this year, as they did last year, since my Republican friends came into control, the appropriation bill for the Army and omitted the prohibition of the stop-watch system, which the House promptly corrected. This subcommittee has brought this bill in for the first time since I have been a Member of the House without this exemption which would prohibit the Department of Justice from prosecuting labor and farm organizations under the provision of the Sherman antitrust law. Now, if it is true that after the passage of the Clayton Act we continued it, why could we not continue it now after the passage of the Capper-Volstead bill? What assurance have we that the farmer is any more secure under the Capper-Volstead Act than the laborer was under the Clayton Act?

Mr. BARBOUR. If I understood correctly the substitute of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON], it provided that money should not be used in case injunctions were brought against farmers' organizations.

Mr. NOLAN. Not at all. The amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON], which, by the way, we never voted on, provided that there should not be any money used for securing injunctions in labor disputes. But the substitute of the gentleman from Kentucky was the exact provision that has been carried each year for the past 12 years in the bill providing money for the Department of Justice.

Mr. BARBOUR. Did it not provide that money should not be used for Government prosecution against farmers' organizations?

Mr. NOLAN. Yes.

Mr. BARBOUR. The marketing bill—the Capper-Volstead bill—provides if a farmers' marketing organization violates the law it shall be prosecuted and the prosecution is in the hands of the Attorney General. The two things conflict. I am in favor of the amendment that was introduced, the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON] and the substitute of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON], but in my opinion the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky that applied to farmers' organizations was in direct conflict with the Capper-Volstead law.

Mr. NOLAN. I do not believe, if the gentleman will study the Capper-Volstead law, that he will find it so.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of Solicitor of the Treasury: Solicitor, $5,000; two assistant solicitors, at $3,000 each; chief clerk, who shall also discharge the duties of chief law clerk, $2,250; law clerk, $2,000; two docket clerks, at $2,000 each; clerks—two of class four, two of class three, two of class two; assistant messenger, $720; laborer, $660; in all, $30,230.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from New York yield? How much longer is he going to proceed to-night?

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DOWELL, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 11065 and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. MOORE of Illinois, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence for 10 days on account of important business.

DESIGNATION OF SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair designates the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] to preside at the opening of the session to-morrow.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. RICKETTS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that April 5 they had presented to the President of the United States for his approval the following bills and joint resolution:

H. R. 9633. An act to extend the provisions of section 2305, Revised Statutes, and of the act of September 29, 1919, to those discharged from the military or naval service of the United States and subsequently awarded compensation or treated for wounds received or disability incurred in line of duty;

H. R. 8815. An act to amend the act of March 1, 1921 (41 Stats. 1202), entitled "An act to authorize certain homestead settlers or entrymen who entered the military or naval service of the United States during the war with Germany to make final proof of their entries";

H. R. 2558. An act for the relief of Richard P. McCullough;

H. R. 8832. An act to provide for the exchange of certain lands of the United States in the Tahoe National Forest, Calif., for lands owned by William Kent;

H. R. 7870. An act for the relief of I. C. Johnson, jr.;

H. R. 9604. An act for the acquisition of a post-office site at Madison, Wis.;

H. R. 10297. An act to extend the limitations of time upon the issuance of medals of honor, distinguished service crosses, and distinguished service medals to persons who served in the Army of the United States during the World War; and

H. J. Res. 257. Joint resolution to appoint a commission for the exchange of sites for a post-office and courthouse building at New York between the Federal Government and the officials of the city of New York.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 57 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Saturday, April 8, 1922, at 12 o'clock noon.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clase 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. SMITH of Idaho: Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands. H. R. 10614. HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, April 8, 1922.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon, and was called to order by Mr. WALSH as Speaker pro tempore.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Holy, holy, holy, Lord God Almighty. Thou art under the great burden of the world and this infinite truth means strength for the weak, love for the loveless, and a rescue for human life. Heavenly Father, our prayer is that we may hear the world's deeper meaning through the surface of mortal things. Bless us with a wise appreciation of the present. Lead us so we shall feel most deeply a new power and a new persuasion bursting from the fountain of eternal truth. When the door of this day closes lift us above the work of the days; give us respite from our labors. May home be sweet and loved ones dear, and may we hear the spiritual melody that lures us to a better and a nobler life. Through Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 7) to amend section 2 of the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution to authorize the operation of Government-owned radio stations for the use of the general public, and for other purposes," approved June 5, 1920.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 9103) for the appointment of additional district judges for certain courts of the United States, to provide for annual conferences of certain judges of the United States courts, to authorize the designation, assignment, and appointment of judges outside their districts, and for other purposes, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. STEVENSON, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence for to-day.

RESIGNATION OF A MEMBER FROM COMMITTEES.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair lays before the House the following communication addressed to the Speaker.

The Clerk read as follows:

APRIL 8, 1922.

Hon. FREDERICK H. GILLETT,
Speaker of the House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

SIR: I hereby tender my resignation as a member of the following committees: Committee on the District of Columbia, Committee on Claims, Committee on Expenditures in the Post Office Department.

With great respect, your obedient servant,

JAMES P. WOODS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the resignation is accepted.

There was no objection.

ELECTION OF MEMBERS TO COMMITTEES.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 321.

Resolved, That JAMES PLEASANT WOODS, Member of Congress from the sixth district of Virginia, be, and he is hereby, elected a member of the standing Committee of the House on the Post Office and Post Roads; and

That JOSEPH T. DEAL, Member of the Congress from the second district of Virginia, be, and he is hereby, elected a member of the Committee on Claims.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Members are elected accordingly.

NAVY DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. STAFFORD rose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman from Wisconsin rise?

Mr. STAFFORD. To prefer a unanimous-consent request. At the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY] may have the privilege of submitting a privileged report—Report No. 888—on the Naval Department appropriation bill, H. R. 11228, before midnight to-night, as if the House were in session, and that all points of order may be reserved thereon.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY], from the Committee on Appropriations, may submit a privileged report on the Navy Department appropriation bill at any time before midnight to-night, as if the House were in session, and that all points of order be reserved thereon. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. And that the bill be referred to the Committtee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. And that the bill and report, when submitted, be referred to the Committtee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. Is there objection to the request as modified?

There was no objection.

DEPARTMENTS OF STATE AND JUSTICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 11065.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 11065) making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOWELL] will please resume the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 11065, with Mr. DOWELL in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 11065, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 11065) making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will resume the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of Solicitor of the Department of Commerce: Solicitor, $5,000; Assistant Solicitor, $3,000; clerks—2 of class 4, 2 of class 3, 3 of class 2, 1 of class 1; messenger, $840; in all, $21,040.

Mr. VESTAL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. VESTAL. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I desire to call the committee's attention to a statement made by the distinguished gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] on the 3d of April, found in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, on page 5396, in speaking about the increase in the salaries of the officials of the Patent Office. I suppose that my distinguished friend is still somewhat piqued over the fact that the bill to increase salaries in the Patent Office passed the House and passed the Senate and became a law, and in his statement to the House on that day he said:

It seems that that legislation will increase the appropriations for salaries in the Patent Office $1,951,340.

The statement is such an exaggeration of what the real fact is that I feel the committee ought to know about it. The fact is that the figures that the gentleman from Wyoming gave to the committee represent the whole appropriation for the full year. One million nine hundred and fifty-one thousand three hundred and forty dollars pays it all, and the bill that we passed only increased the original appropriation by $447,000. The appropriation was $1,500,000 for the year, and the increase in the salaries carried by the bill passed increased them by $447,000, making a total appropriation for the full year of $1,951,340.

The gentleman from Wyoming goes on to say—

Two million dollars increase, practically, in one comparatively small bureau of the Government.

I feel that it is only my duty, being a member of the Committee on Patents, and having something to do with the passage of the bill referred to, which increased the salaries in the Patent Office, to see that this error should be corrected in the RECORD.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VESTAL. Yes.

Mr. MILLER. Were not the fees in the Patent Office increased correspondingly, so as to take care of that additional expense?

Mr. VESTAL. The fees of the Patent Office were increased so that the entire increase is taken care of, and if the business keeps on as it started on the first of this year we shall have a surplus of $386,000.

That is all I care to say. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

For rent of buildings and parts of buildings in the District of Columbia, $36,000, if space can not be assigned by the Public Buildings Commission in buildings under the control of that commission.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The Department of Justice had a lease for five years on the building that it is now occupying. As I recall, that lease was negotiated about four or more years ago. Has the gentleman any information as to whether that lease has been renewed or whether any negotiations are on foot looking to its renewal and extension?

Mr. HUSTED. The lease is about to expire and negotiations are under way for a renewal of it; but I will say to the gentleman that it will be impossible to renew the lease on any such terms as the present ones.

Mr. STAFFORD. When does this lease expire?

Mr. HUSTED. I think it expires on July 1 of this year.

Mr. STAFFORD. Well, here is the practical situation that confronts the committee and the Congress: This building was erected primarily for the Department of Justice, under a contract whereby we secured that property at the rate, as I recall, of 36.4 cents per square foot. Costs of construction have gone up considerably since then, as all costs have gone up. During the war private investors were not willing to enter into contracts with the Government for similarly constructed buildings for less than 50 or 60 cents per square foot. Here is a department housed in a building that is suitable for its needs, with no appropriation available to continue it in those quarters, and it will be obliged to find quarters in available public buildings. Are there any public buildings available that will house such a great and growing force as that of the Department of Justice?

Mr. MANN. I read in the newspaper the other day—which is not probably a very accurate source of information—that the Department of Justice might be accommodated in the buildings north of the Munitions and Navy Buildings if Congress should conclude to buy that property instead of having the buildings upon it torn down. Whether there is room there or not for the Department of Justice I do not know.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman will agree that those buildings—which are frame buildings, as I recall—are not suited for permanent occupancy, especially by such a force as that of the Department of Justice.

Mr. MANN. It would be far better, I think, than being out on the street.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, yes; I agree that it would be better than being out on the street. They might be able to do a little more work in those frame shacks that are falling to pieces as the years go on.

Mr. MANN. According to the statements which have been made in the public press—I do not vouch for them—the owners of the Department of Justice Building have demanded a rental which is more than twice as much as they are now receiving. I do not know whether that is a reasonable rent or not. I am not advised as to that, but I really do not think very much of the idea of putting up buildings for Government use and getting a department into them on the ground that they are going to lease them very cheaply, and then as soon as they get the department in there proceeding to more than double the rent. I call that a sort of a holp-up.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. I ask unanimous consent for an extension of time of five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to bring up the history of the neglect of the then Attorney General in not following the direction of Congress in the legislative appropriation bill authorizing the leasing of this property, which carried a mandatory direction that the lease to be entered into should be for a period of five years with an option on the part of the Government for another five years. That was included in the lease of the building now occupied by the Department of Labor, but as to the Department of Justice Building they did not follow the direction of Congress but entered into a lease for the period of five years only. We are confronted with the condition of rising costs, and it can not be expected that we will be able to secure the same quarters when building costs are so much higher at the same rental as we secured this building five years ago when costs were so much less. We will necessarily have to pay more. I should say that twice the present rental would be an exorbitant price. Perhaps an increase of 50 per cent over what we are paying to-day would be a reasonable rental considering the increased costs.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. So far as the Department of Justice is concerned and its present necessities, I can take the gentleman down to the new Munitions and Navy Buildings and show him unoccupied space there now that would house the Department of Justice.

Mr. STAFFORD. If there is available space in a well-constructed building, such as the Navy or Munitions Building, the Department of Justice should be housed there; but I am opposed to the continued housing of Government activities in flimsy shacks where in the summer time the quarters are unfit for the occupancy of employees.

Mr. HUSTED. The Department of Justice expects to continue in the occupancy of its present premises. They are fairly well adapted to its purposes. Perhaps there is not quite room enough, but there does not seem to be any other place that is available. It would cost a great deal to move, and be very inconvenient, especially at the present time. Arrangements have been made which will assure the continuance of the department in its present location. It will be at a somewhat increased rental, but the rental, I think, will be reasonable and much less than the owners of the premises would rent the property for to any private concern.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman state what that rental will be?

Mr. HUSTED. I can not state exactly what the rental will be.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman has stated that it would be reasonable, although at an increased cost, and I thought he had the figures.

Mr. HUSTED. I think it will not be in excess of a reasonable amount.

The Clerk read as follows:

Detection and prosecution of crimes: For the detection and prosecution of crimes against the United States; the investigation of the official acts, records, and accounts of marshals, attorneys, clerks, referees, and trustees of the United States courts and the Territorial courts, and United States commissioners, for which purpose all the official papers, records, and dockets of said officers, without exception, shall be examined by the agents of the Attorney General at any time; for the protection of the person of the President of the United States; for such other investigations regarding official matters under the control of the Department of Justice or the Department of State as may be directed by the Attorney General; hire, maintenance, upkeep, and operation of motor-propelled or horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles when necessary, including not to exceed $3,750 for purchase of one automobile, and including not to exceed $10,000 for taxicab hire to be used exclusively for the purposes set forth in this paragraph and to be expended under the direction of the Attorney General, whose certificate as to the expenditure thereof shall be conclusive on the accounting officers of the Treasury Department; per diem in lieu of subsistence when allowed pursuant to section 13 of the sundry civil appropriation act approved August 1, 1914, including not to exceed $250,000 for necessary employees at the seat of government, and including a Director of the Bureau of Investigation at not exceeding $7,500 per annum, to be expended under the direction of the Attorney General, $2,250,000: Provided, That this appropriation shall be available for advances to be made by the disbursing clerk of the Department of Justice when authorized and approved by the Attorney General, the provisions of section 3648 of the Revised Statutes to the contrary notwithstanding: Provided further, That for the purpose of executing the duties for which provision is made by this appropriation, the Attorney General is authorized to appoint officials who shall be designated "special agents of the Department of Justice," and who shall be vested with the authority necessary for the execution of such duties.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the second proviso, beginning in line 12 and ending on line 18, as being legislation unauthorized on an appropriation bill.

Mr. HUSTED. Will the gentleman state the basis of his point of order?

Mr. BLANTON. That there is no law authorizing such legislation on an appropriation bill. I will say to the gentleman that this has been carried in an appropriation bill, but not in such a way as to make it permanent law. One President had appointed by the Department of Justice one of these special agents specially and solely to protect the body of a certain individual citizen in the United States as he traveled over the country during 12 months of the year.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, the Attorney General has certainly general authority to appoint officials to execute the law. The fact that in the proviso they are designated by a certain appellation does not affect the situation at all. This provides that they shall be designated special agents of the Department of Justice, but they could be designated by any other name just as well, and the fact that they are so designated does not give them any additional authority. The fact that they are given this special appellation does not affect the situation one way or the other.

Mr. BLANTON. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUSTED. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Has Congress ever passed a law authorizing the Attorney General to appoint officials who shall be designated "special agents of the Department of Justice"?

Mr. HUSTED. The fact that they are designated as special agents of the Department of Justice does not give them any additional authority; it is not legislation creating any power or greater authority, nor does it widen the scope of the activity of these agents; it is merely a name. We have carried similar designations, over and over again, in different parts of the act.

Mr. BLANTON. But nevertheless when we wanted to change the designation of the Assistant Secretary to Undersecretary we had to have legislation for it, and we had a special rule brought in.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is inclined to think that unless there is special legislation on this question the point of order should be sustained.

Mr. HUSTED. The chairman of the subcommittee is unable to cite the Chair to any special law, but he believes that the Attorney General has the general authority.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment: Page 32, line 12, after the word "notwithstanding," add the following: "Provided further, That for the purpose of executing the duties for which provision is made by this appropriation the Attorney General is authorized to appoint officials who shall be vested with the authority necessary for the execution of such duties."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 32, line 12, after the word "nothwithstanding," insert: "Provided further, That for the purpose of executing the duties for which provision is made by this appropriation the Attorney General is authorized to appoint officials who shall be vested with the authority necessary for the execution of such duties."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment. All of the employees of the Department of Justice that are authorized to be appointed are creatures of legislation. It is a matter of statute fixed by law. This is clearly an attempt to give additional authority to the Deparment of Justice outside of the present legislation, and authorizing him to appoint additional employees unauthorized by the present law. It is clearly legislation on an appropriation bill, and I make a point of order against it.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is overruled.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the amendment. I want to ask the gentleman from New York if there is any limitation on the salaries of these officials?

Mr. HUSTED. I think there is no statutory limitation. I can give the gentleman an idea of the range of salaries.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I know what the range of the ordinary salaries of the agents of the Bureau of Investigation are, but I want to inquire if it is not a fact that the designation of special agents of the Department of Justice is simply a device to enable the Attorney General to differentiate between the general agents and these special agents as far as salaries and compensation are concerned. Knowing the views of the Attorney General with reference to some of the laws relating to appointments in the civil service and the service of the Government, I want to inquire if it would not be a wise policy for the Appropriations Committee to put some limitation on the salaries to be paid to these special agents.

Mr. HUSTED. That would be a matter of legislation.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. But in this bill you are providing for their appointment and appropriating money to pay them.

Mr. HUSTED. It could be done.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Why does not the committee do it?

Mr. HUSTED. The committee has not found any abuse. Let me say that the highest amount paid in this bill is to the director, who receives $7,500. That is Mr. Burns. The next is assistant superintendent, who receives $5,000, and there is one man who receives $4,000. The average salary paid to these employees would be in the neighborhood of $1,800 or less. This is not the only lump-sum appropriation carried in this bill. It has many lump sums with practically no limitation of the amount to be paid. So far as the information of the subcommittee is concerned, there has not been any abuse of the power.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Unless something of that kind is intended, I see no reason for making these officials special agents of the department, when the Attorney General and the chief of the bureau now have authority to appoint all the regular agents of the bureau that they may find desirable.

Mr. HUSTED. I would say to the gentleman from Texas that they no longer can be designated as special agents, because the point of order made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] struck that designation out of the paragraph.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. It leaves the same discretion in the hands of the Attorney General to pay them any salary he may see fit to pay them.

Mr. HUSTED. That applies practically to all of the employees in all of the bureaus of the Department of Justice. I do not think there is a limitation on any one of them.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. No; but the tremendous pressure, according to press reports, that is being exerted on the Attorney General and others in high positions, it seems to me, should impel Congress to be very slow in opening up these lump-sum appropriations for the appointment of new officials for the Department of Justice or any other department of this Government. I very much hope that the Appropriations Committee will in the future adopt some safeguard.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment, to add after the last word of the gentleman's amendment the following:

Provided, That no salary shall be paid to any of such employees in excess of $3,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of the Husted amendment insert: "Provided, That no salary shall be paid to any of such employees in excess of $3,000."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, after the adverse ruling on the point of order and the amendment is offered the committee can do now just what the former favorable ruling on the previous point of order prevented, namely, appoint special agents, whether they are called special agents or some other kind of an employee. Under this paragraph, if this amendment is adopted without limitation, the Attorney General could pay out of the $2,250,000 we are giving him any salary he sees fit—$25,000, $50,000, $100,000. We certainly ought to put a limitation upon it. I do not complain when the Chair overrules my point of order. I accept his judgment and opinion. In fact, I never complain. I can not complain about the Washington Post putting in an alleged interview with me this morning that did not occur and was never authorized, as I had no interview with any Post representative. We ought to put a limitation upon these salaries. The gentleman says that high salaries are not paid. Much talk has been made about bringing Bergdoll back and the Bergdoll investigation. The report shows that General Ansell, the very man whom the investigating committee condemned, was paid, and the report of the Clerk shows that he was paid at the rate of $20,000 a year for his services helping a House committee. We certainly ought to put some kind of a limitation in this provision, and I just submit it to the House.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman's amendment provides that no one shall be paid in excess of $3,000. Is that a day or a week, or how much?

Mr. BLANTON. Three thousand dollars per annum. That is a per annum salary. That is considered in the law.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the great horror which the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] just expressed, because this appropriation did not have a limitation as to the amount to be paid for salaries, would have come with considerably more force if it had been made at any time during the eight years the Democrats had control of the House, while he was a Member of the House, and it would have come with greater force if it had been ever made by any Member on the Democratic side of the House when the Democrats were in control of the House at any time during the last 50 years. This appropriation for the Secret Service of the Government has been carried from time immemorial, and it has always been considered one of those appropriations that ought to be in a lump sum. So far as my observation goes, it never has been used to pay extravagant salaries, and if we should adopt the provisions limiting the salary to $3,000 it would first cut down the salary of a division superintendent, who is properly receiving $5,000, and then would be an invitation to every employee to urge that his salary be increased to $3,000. The proposition is pure political bunk. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman knows that the present President had the good judgment and the good sense when he came into office——

Mr. MANN. To name a mighty good Attorney General.

Mr. BLANTON. To find out that theretofore under this clause a man had been employed to go around as a bodyguard to an individual citizen of this country and receive his annual salary.

Mr. MANN. I do not know about that.

Mr. BLANTON. Your President put him out of office, and I approve of his doing it.

Mr. MANN. I poke my nose into a good many things, but I have not poked it into everything in the Government, as the gentleman from Texas has.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to modify my amendment by adding the words "per annum" to the amendment that I offered.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment as the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BLANTON asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment by inserting the words "per annum" after the figures "$3,000."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, if this amendment should prevail it would cut out 10 expert bank accountants, who are paid $4,000 a year; it would cut out a division superintendent at $5,000 a year; and it would cut out 2 special agents, who are paid $3,200 a year. The average salary paid in the bureau does not exceed $1,800 a year. There are only a few men, a very few men, not exceeding 10 in number, who receive as much as $3,000 a year. The salaries have been kept down to a very low figure. There has been no abuse of the power which has been vested in the Attorney General, and it would be very unfortunate to limit it, because no one knows when an emergency may arise when he may be compelled to employ some expert who will demand a much higher salary than $3,000. I think we can safely leave this to the good judgment and discretion of the Attorney General.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment to the paragraph:

At the end of the paragraph insert the following: "These officials shall be designated as special agents of the Department of Justice."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that that is legislation and unauthorized.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HUSTED] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. HUSTED: At the end of the amendment just adopted insert: "These officials shall be designated as special agents of the Department of Justice."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order it is legislation, and the Chair has already ruled on it.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Enforcement of antitrust laws: For the enforcement of antitrust laws, including not exceeding $10,000 for clerical services and not exceeding $40,000 for compensation of attorneys at the seat of government, $225,000.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky: At the end of line 22, page 32, add as follows: "Provided, however, That no part of the money appropriated by this act shall be spent in the prosecution of any organization or individual for entering into any combination or agreement having in view the increasing of wages, shortening of hours, or bettering the conditions of labor, or for any act done in furtherance thereof not in itself unlawful: Provided further, That no part of the money appropriated by this act shall be expended for the prosecution of producers of farm products and associations of farmers who cooperate and organize in an effort to and for the purpose to obtain and maintain a fair and reasonable price for their products."

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I hardly think it worth while to argue the point of order. This question has been decided many times, and this provision has been carried in bill after bill here year after year.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard on the point of order. The amendment as offered applies to the entire appropriation carried by the bill and not to the particular fund carried in this paragraph. For that reason it is not germane to this paragraph. My second point is that this amendment, in this precise form, having already been acted upon by the committee and defeated by the committee, is not again in order on this bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, since the amendment that has been offered applies to the section which has just been read, as well as to other provisions in the bill, it is certainly in order, because it applies to the provision which has just been read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair believes the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] is in order, and refers to section 5797 of Hinds' Precedents, where a case is determined practically setting forth the same facts as in this case. The point of order is overruled.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, the substance of this amendment first got into an appropriation bill just before the expiration of the Presidency of Mr. Taft, and he vetoed the "sundry civil appropriation bill," carrying the substance of the language used in this amendment. In a few days thereafter President Wilson came into office and the appropriation bill which Mr. Taft had vetoed came back to the House with exactly the same language in it. That bill passed both the House and the Senate and was sent to the President, then President Wilson, who approved it. Since that time this language has been in every annual appropriation bill notwithstanding the fact that every time it came up the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. SIMEON D. FESS, the chairman of the Republican campaign committee, has sought to defeat it, his efforts to the contrary notwithstanding.

I appreciate that Congress but recently passed an act relative to farmers. That act yet has to run the gantlet of the courts; and, until it has done so, and until the act recently passed by the Kentucky Legislature, which enables the farmers to pool their products until they can get a fair price for them has been held good, this language ought to be carried as law in order to prevent prosecution of just such organizations as the one to which I have referred to in Kentucky, and which, I understand, exist in other States.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment to the amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment to the amendment offered by Mr. HUSTED: After the word "farmers" insert "or producers of mineral products and associations of producers of mineral products."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman mean to include within that language the coal operators? Is that the purpose of the amendment?

Mr. HUSTED. If it is minerals.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Do I understand the gentleman from New York [Mr. HUSTED], who is in charge of the bill, to have just stated that the intention of the amendment is to protect from prosecution any organization of coal operators?

Mr. HUSTED. The chairman of the subcommittee means exactly this, that he is opposed to any kind of class legislation, and he considers the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky the rankest kind of class legislation. In order to emphasize his opposition, he offers this amendment. I do not see why all people should not stand on the same basis before the law, or why a special favor should be granted to anybody. [Applause.] I do not believe it is right, I do not believe it is American, and I wanted to go on record on that proposition.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Then the purpose of the gentleman's amendment is to load down this amendment with the object of defeating it?

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 27, noes 26.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. Those in favor of calling for tellers will please rise. [After counting.] Nineteen gentlemen have risen, not a sufficient number. The amendment is agreed to.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CONNALLY of Texas: At the end of the paragraph on line 22 of page 32 insert "enforcement of civil service laws, 30 cents."

[Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

DISTRICT COURTS.

Salaries: One hundred and one district judges, at $7,500 each, $757,500: Provided, That this appropriation shall be available for the salaries of all United States district judges lawfully entitled thereto for the fiscal year 1923.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. BLANTON. Does this embrace only the district judges now in office?

Mr. HUSTED. Only those now in office.

Mr. BLANTON. It does not embrace 22 new ones?

Mr. HUSTED. Only those now in office.

Mr. MANN. We provide for the salaries of district judges if they are provided.

Mr. BLANTON. We have now 101 in office.

Mr. MANN. If we create more, they could be paid out of this appropriation.

Mr. BLANTON. And cause a deficiency?

Mr. MANN. And cause a deficiency.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Hawaii: Chief justice, $6,000; two associate justices, at $5,500 each; in all, $17,000: Provided, That from and after July 1, 1922, the salary of the chief justice of the Supreme Court of Hawaii shall be $6,000 per annum and the salaries of the associate justices in Hawaii shall be $5,500 each per annum.

Mr. MANN rose.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order, unless the gentleman from Illinois desires to make it, that it is legislation unauthorized on an appropriation bill and changes a statutory salary.

Mr. MANN. It is clearly in order under the Holman rule.

Mr. BLANTON. It is an increase.

Mr. MANN. It is a decrease.

Mr. HUSTED. It is a decrease from $7,500 to $6,000 for the chief justice and a decrease from $7,000 to $5,500 for the two associate justices.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. MANN. I do not know but that perhaps the statement already made covers it, but it has been stated that the Territorial act which passed in reference to farm homesteads, and so forth, carried this item for the increase in the salary of certain officials in Hawaii, and that no word was said about it on the floor of the House.

I do not think the reduction ought to go through without any word being said about it, and I think the gentleman ought to state, while the item is under consideration, why the salary of the chief justice of Hawaii is reduced to $6,000, while we still pay the Alaska judges $7,500 and pay the judges in the United States $7,500 or $7,000, and so forth, and so on.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, I went into this quite fully during the general debate and gave a pretty complete explanation of the reasons why the committee took this action.

Mr. MANN. I heard the gentleman's explanation, which was that it went through the House without anybody knowing about it, which I thought was problematical, and without any other explanation of it.

Mr. HUSTED. Well, as a matter of fact, there was not any debate on the floor of the House and the title of the Hawaiian Homes Commission act made no reference to it. In addition to all that, it was not mentioned in the report on the bill and the attention of the House was not directed to it.

The Department of Justice informed the subcommittee that they had never been consulted about it; that they did not consider the increase as justified; and that they would not recommend these salaries. In view of the fact that the House passed upon it without debate, without any discussion, and the fact that there was no reference made to it in the report on the bill, and the fact that the title did not disclose it so that Members of the House would have their particular attention directed to it, and in view of the statement of the Department of Justice we thought the proper course was to bring these salaries back to the figure at which they stood when the Hawaiian Homes Commission bill came up. If the increases are justified, let them come in in the regular way with the usual recommendation and let the Committee of the Whole pass upon it.

Mr. CLOUSE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUSTED. Yes.

Mr. CLOUSE. I wonder if you provide there for a reduction of the salaries of the district judges in the Hawaiian Islands?

Mr. HUSTED. No; and they were not increased.

Mr. CLOUSE. I happen to know that a former law clerk happens to be one of the district judges, appointed a few years ago. He went over there at a salary of $1,600 or $1,800 a year and has no reputation as a lawyer that I know of, and I was wondering if it would not be advisable to investigate some of the salaries of district judges and reduce some of them.

Mr. HUSTED. There is a constitutional provision against reducing the salary of a district judge during his term of office, which precludes any legislative action.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Does the gentleman know who the judge is in this case?

Mr. HUSTED. I have no idea who he is.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. There is no intention to reduce the salary to get rid of the district judge?

Mr. HUSTED. No. I do not know who he is and I do not know his politics.

Mr. MANN. I do not know whether I have any objection to the reduction proposed. I do not know anything about it. Here is a legislative committee that has jurisdiction of the subject, the Committee on the Territories. They put in a legislative bill a provision for increase of salaries. The Committee on Appropriations were so busy with their work that they never read the bill as they should have done and did not know that this increase was in the bill.

I read the bill. I knew it was in the bill, and I assumed that the Committee on the Territories had a good reason for making a slight increase in the salaries of the judges in Hawaii, as there had been an increase in the salaries of all the other judges of the Federal courts throughout the entire country.

Mr. HUSTED. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. HUSTED. These are judges of Territorial courts. They are not United States judges. This does not affect the salary of the United States district judge in Hawaii. These are Territorial courts, inferior courts, and they placed the salary of the chief justice of an inferior court at the same figure as that of a United States district judge.

Mr. MANN. This is not an inferior court at all. The gentleman is entirely mistaken. He is not posted on the subject. This is the chief justice of the Supreme Court of Hawaii. The Supreme Court of Hawaii is not an inferior court. Of course, we do not fix the salaries of the supreme court justices of the States; but I say that we have increased the salaries of all Federal judges. The Committee on the Territories, having jurisdiction of the subject, proposed an increase in the salaries of the judges out in Hawaii. The Committee on Appropriations, without knowing anything at all about the subject of salaries in the Territory of Hawaii, propose by the appropriation bill to repeal the provision that came from the Committee on the Territories that did have jurisdiction of the subject. I just call attention to it because we have had so much said in the House about how under the new rule of the House the Committee on Appropriations would never interfere with the legislative jurisdiction of a legislative committee. Yet here was the legislative committee that had proper jurisdiction of this subject that reported a bill which passed the House, without the knowledge of the members of the Committee on Appropriations who did not examine the bill, but with full knowledge on the part of other Members of the House. Now the Committee on Appropriations at once rush in and say, "We did not know anything about this, and therefore we will repeal it."

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman will remember that I was one of those who advocated the change in the Appropriations Committee, putting all the appropriations under one committee. I want to say to the Committee on Appropriations, as I have repeatedly said on the floor of the House, that if they continue to usurp the powers and duties of other committees, we will have to go back to the old system. There is no doubt in the world that the membership of this House will not permit any one committee to usurp the entire functions of the House. I do not want to see it done, and I have said in season and out of season that the Committee on Appropriations must be simply an appropriating committee rather than a legislative committee. Now, may I ask a question in connection with this subject of the judges of the Hawaiian Islands?

I remember one of my colleagues from Texas was appointed one of the judges out there. I do not know whether he holds that position yet or not, but it seems to me, taking the statement of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] as correct—and I know it is—there must be some reason, either political or otherwise, why this attempt has been made to reduce this salary. I think the gentleman from New York ought to explain the reason for it.

Mr. MANN. I do not think there is anything political about it. I do not know who the judges are, although I doubtless met some of them when I was out there, but I do not recall them. I am of the opinion that they ought to have an increase of salary. Very likely the increase that was made may have been too much. I do not know. The Committee on Appropriations, however, are basing their entire proposition in the main on the fact that this increase in salaries reported from the Committee on the Territories went through the House, as they say, without anybody knowing anything about it. That is because they did not know about it, and they assumed that because they did not know anything about it everybody else was in equal ignorance.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I recall the consideration of the bill relating to salaries when it was reported by the Committee on the Territories. The question of the salaries of the officers in Hawaii, the salary of the governor, the salary of the secretary, and the salaries of the judges were discussed at length. I had made two visits to Hawaii. I therefore knew the subject matter under consideration when the bill was considered. The discussion revolved around the question of the expense of living out there. Building material and housekeeping are very expensive, and when an officer is big enough to be governor or secretary of the Territory or judge of the courts he must maintain a house in keeping with his position, and he can not do it in Hawaii on a small salary. Everything is expensive, and that is the reason the salaries were fixed by the Committee on the Territories as they were fixed at that time. It was not done hurriedly, but was done after very careful consideration.

It is appropriate that I add that Hawaii more than pays her why. After all expenses of Federal administration are paid there is still a large balance in the Federal Treasury out of the revenues of Hawaii.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I was very glad to hear the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] express himself as he did with regard to the placing of all the powers of the House in the Committee on Appropriations. As one of those who voted against him at that time, I wish to say that I now agree with him, or he agrees with me, that if there was ever anything done by this House in making rules that had less good sense about it than that action of the House, I do not remember what it was.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LITTLE. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. Let me say to my friend from Kansas that I am still of the opinion that a committee of 35 men, known as the Appropriations Committee, is better fitted and can more economically administer and provide the appropriations for the Government than the various committees which formerly did that work, and that it will be all right for the Committee on Appropriations to continue to do it if they will confine themselves to their own business and let the other committees attend to their legislative business. But if the Committee on Appropriations attempt to legislate and undertake to direct the policies of the Government to the exclusion of other committees, then it will be only a matter of time until the present large Committee on Appropriations will be disbanded and the House will go back to the old system.

Mr. LITTLE. Whenever you place such powers in any 35 men, of course the result will be just exactly what the gentleman from Texas finds it to be. You can not endow men with the power to run all the finances and determine all the expenditures of the Nation without causing them to feel that they ought to run everything, including every kind of legislation. The proper people to take up such things and pass upon them are those who are familiar with the legislation upon which the appropriations are founded. A man goes on a Military Committee, spends months on the legislation, then is told to scrap all he knows, stop work, and allow some man who has had no previous experience in such matters to expend all the money the legislation authorizes. Why set aside 150 men and let 35 run the House? Why have 35 Congressmen instead of 435 in charge of all expenses?

Mr. HUSTED. Will the gentleman yield for a question, please?

Mr. LITTLE. In just a moment I will. But there is no Committee on Appropriations of 35 men to pass on this bill. It is a committee of five each time. There are less men passing on these appropriation bills now than ever before. The men who are now passing upon these appropriation bills are men who in no case have any particular familiarity with the subjects on which they are appropriating. The committee that legislates is the committee that should decide how much money should be spent on the subjects of its legislation. The House has yielded its powers to 35 men. Of course they usurp power. All men with tyrannical powers become tyrants gradually. Everybody loses his head under such circumstances and thinks he is "it," and that he can do as he pleases and ought to do as he pleases. What the House should do is to organize the committees so that every man here has some responsible duty to attend to. You have shoved over onto these gentlemen of the Appropriations Committee all the real responsibilities of the House, and yet you expect them to act as if they did not have them. All this violates our theory of a representative government and gives a little oligarchy of five to handle our funds. Power should be distributed, not concentrated, in our expenditures. Keep near the people when you spend their money.

Mr. HUSTED. Does the gentleman think that the Holman rule should be abolished?

Mr. LITTLE. No.

Mr. HUSTED. This provision is clearly in order under the Holman rule. Does not the gentleman think that the Committee on Appropriations should avail itself at the proper time of the provisions of the Holman rule to save the Government money?

Mr. LITTLE. Yes.

Mr. HUSTED. That is all this is.

Mr. LITTLE. I was not speaking directly to this particular provision. I was taking advantage of the confession of the gentleman from Texas to express some views that should have been expressed long ago. These great bills which were formerly considered by from 12 to 20 men now receive consideration from subcommittees of 5, and practically no more. One hundred and fifty Members are deprived of power and responsibility which are centered in 35. The duties of the House should be so assigned to the various committees that every Representative shall have an active committee and a real share in our responsibilities.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment:

Page 36, line 18, strike out the proviso.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, in line 17, by striking out the figures "$6,000" and inserting in lieu thereof the figures "$7,500," and in line 18 by striking out the figures "$5,500" and inserting in lieu thereof the figures "$7,000."

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, I merely wish to say that these increases are not recommended by the Department of Justice. The Department of Justice says they are not entitled to them. They do not render the services to the value of these amounts. If you put them in you give these judges more money than they are entitled to. There is no good sense or reason in doing it. It is foolishly restoring a salary which never should have been allowed.

Mr. MANN. Well, Mr. Chairman, salaries are fixed by law. Whether the appropriation is made or not, the judges who serve will receive the money appropriated and then have a claim in the Court of Claims for the balance, which will be finally paid. It is pure monkey work to provide by law that a man shall be paid $7,500 and then only appropriate $6,000. The Department of Justice has not recommended it, as the gentleman says. Well, they are always recommending increases of salaries of judges and other officials under the Department of Justice in the United States, outside of Hawaii, and they all want the increase. I do not undertake to say just what the salary of the judges in Hawaii should be. My personal impression is that they are just as well entitled to $7,500 as the justices in Alaska are.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Does the gentleman remember—I do not remember a single case up to this time except this one—where the Department of Justice has recommended a decrease of this character?

Mr. MANN. I do not recollect any case of the kind in 25 years' service.

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. Did I understand the gentleman to say that these salaries are fixed by statute?

Mr. MANN. They are.

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. What is the idea of appropriating $6,000?

Mr. MANN. The Committee on Appropriations—and I am not complaining—proposed to put a proviso in the bill reducing the salary to $6,000. If that provision had remained in the bill, there was no reason for increasing the appropriation over $6,000. But the committee having agreed to an amendment striking out the reduction, the gentleman from New York, in my judgment, ought to have offered the amendment to restore the appropriation for the full salary.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out in line 18 the figures "$17,000" and insert "$21,500"; that is the total.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 36, line 18, strike out "$17,000" and insert "$21,500."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For judges of circuit courts, at $4,000 each, $28,000: Provided, That from and after July 1, 1922, the salaries of the judges of circuit courts in Hawaii shall be $4,000 each per annum.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. What salaries are provided for the circuit judges?

Mr. HUSTED. Six thousand dollars is the amount carried in the commission act. It was $4,000 before that time. There is no good reason when you have restored the salary of the chief justice and the two justices why you should not also restore the salaries of the judges of the circuit court. You ought not to make fish of one and flesh of another.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, acting on the suggestion of the gentleman from New York, I move to strike out the proviso.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 36, beginning on line 24, strike out the proviso.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out, in line 23, page 26, the figures "$4,000" and insert "$6,000," and strike out "$28,000" and insert "$42,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 36, line 23, strike out the figures "$4,000" and insert "$6,000," and in the same line strike out "$28,000" and insert "$42,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

MARSHALS, DISTRICT ATTORNEYS, CLERKS, AND OTHER EXPENSES OF UNITED STATES COURTS.

For salaries, fees, and expenses of United States marshals and their deputies, including the office expenses of United States marshals in the district of Alaska, and hereafter the Attorney General shall pay the office expenses of United States marshals in the district of Alaska from the appropriation "Salaries, fees, and expenses of United States marshals and their deputies" services rendered in behalf of the United States or otherwise, services in Alaska in collecting evidence for the United States when so specially directed by the Attorney General, and maintenance, alteration, repair, and operation of horse-drawn and motor driven passenger-carrying vehicles used in connection with the transaction of the official business of the office of United States marshal for the District of Columbia, $2,250,000: Provided, That there shall be paid hereunder any necessary cost of keeping vessels or other property attached or libeled in admiralty in such amount as the court, on petition setting forth the facts under oath, may allow: Provided further, That marshals and office deputy marshals (except in the district of Alaska) may be granted a per diem of not to exceed $4 in lieu of subsistence, instead of but under the conditions prescribed for the present allowance for actual expenses of subsistence: And provided further, That from and after July 1, 1922, the salary of the United States marshal, United States district for Hawaii, shall be $3,000 per annum.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of asking the gentleman what the salary of the United States marshal for Hawaii is.

Mr. HUSTED. Three thousand dollars.

The Clerk read as follows:

For salaries of clerks of United States district courts, their deputies, and other assistants, expenses of travel and subsistence, and other expenses of conducting their respective offices, in accordance with the provisions of the act approved February 26, 1919, $1,255,000: Provided, That hereafter no clerk or deputy clerk or assistant in the office of the clerk of a United States district court shall receive any compensation or emoluments through any office or position to which he may be appointed by the court, other than that received as such clerk, deputy clerk, or assistant, whether from the United States or from other litigants: Provided further, That clerks of United States district courts, their deputies and assistants, who are or may be appointed United States commissioners may receive compensation for both offices in an aggregate amount not exceeding the rate of $2,000 per annum: Provided further, That the acceptance of payment for personal services from litigants other than the United States shall be deemed a vacation of their appointments as clerks, deputy clerks, or clerical assistants: Provided further, That from and after July 1, 1922, office expenses of clerks of United States circuit courts of appeals, also the personal compensation of said clerks, their deputies, and other assistants, and their expenses of travel and subsistence, when absent from official headquarters on official business, shall be allowed after authorization and approval by the Attorney General, and shall be paid from this appropriation by the respective United States marshals designated by the Attorney General. All fees and other moneys of every character and description received by said clerks, by virtue of their offices, shall be paid into the Treasury, as in the case of clerks of United States district courts: And provided further, That from and after July 1, 1922, the salary of the clerk of the United States District Court for Hawaii shall be fixed in the same manner as salaries of clerks of United States districts courts under the act of February 26, 1919.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the provisos beginning in line 15, page 39, down to and including the word "assistants," in line 4, page 40.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the remainder of the paragraph.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, I think those provisos are subject to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the reservation of the point of order as to the rest of the paragraph.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, on page 39, line 11, after the word "of," where it appears before the words "United States," by inserting the words "United States Circuit Court of Appeals and." That is simply an inadvertent omission.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HUSTED: Page 39, line 11, after the word "of," where it appears the second time, insert "United States Circuit Court of Appeals and."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HUSTED: Page 40, line 12, after the words "Attorney General," insert "Provided further, however, That the salaries of clerks of the United States Circuit Courts of Appeals shall not be fixed at a rate in excess of $5,000 per annum."

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUSTED. Certainly.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Did not that proviso go out of the bill?

Mr. HUSTED. No; no point of order was made as to that.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I thought the gentleman from Illinois made the point of order against all of the provisos.

Mr. HUSTED. Only down to the proviso in line 4, on page 40.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I misunderstood the gentleman.

Mr. HUSTED. Does the gentleman wish some explanation of this amendment?

Mr. MONTAGUE. No; I understand the significance of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HUSTED: Page 39, line 15, strike out the figures "$1,255,000" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$1,300,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For 270 copies of volume 259, Supreme Court Reports, to continue the sets now in the hands of certain officials, at $1.75 per volume, $472.50.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I believe the House is entitled to know of a condition relative to the Supreme Court Reports which was uncovered in the hearings on this bill. Under the law the reporter for the Supreme Court of the United States gets a salary of $4,500 a year. In addition to that, if he should issue two volumes of the reports during any one year, he receives $1,200 more. In addition to that he is allowed, not a clerk at $1,200 a year, but $1,200 for clerk hire. In addition still, he is allowed $600 for rent and miscellaneous items. The law requires the book to be sold at $1.75 per copy. The publisher has not been selling it at that price; but, instead, he has been selling it at $3 per copy. The necessity for his selling it at $3 a volume grows out of a most peculiar condition of affairs. In the first place, the reporter cuts up the decisions into two volumes, smaller than they should be, in order to have two editions, so that he may get the extra $1,200. In addition to that, he has the placing of the contract for the printing and binding, and has placed that with a New York firm, from which he has exacted and has received $6,500 per year for the placing of the contract.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. And he is still in office?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, I do not see any provision here made for the payment of the clerk of the United States Supreme Court, nor the marshal, nor the various deputy clerks. How are they paid?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The reporter of the Supreme Court is paid in an unusual way. He is paid under a permanent statute. His drafts are made directly on the Treasury, and Congress does not have to appropriate for it. The law requires the book to be sold at $1.75 a volume; yet the reporter who gives out the publication and binding of it exacts $2.16⅔ a volume before he will let the printer have it. Consequently, it is impossible for the publisher to sell it for $1.75, as he has to pay the reporter of the Supreme Court $2.16⅔ a volume before he will let him have the contract. Adding all these things together, the reporter of the Supreme Court, with his salary and allowances and this piece of graft, gets $14,000 a year, while a justice of the Supreme Court himself gets only $14,500 a year.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is there any connection between the price fixed in this bill at which the Federal Reporter, published by the West Publishing Co., of St. Paul, is fixed at $2 a year and their recent policy in reducing the size of the volume of the Federal Reporter to one-half what it was some years ago?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I am not familiar with the publisher which the gentleman has just named, but I wish to say this, that the reporter for the Court of Claims of the United States gets a salary of $1,000 a year, and he does not get any graft or perquisites. He prints a volume much bigger than the one that is printed by the reporter of the Supreme Court, and it is sold for $1.25 a volume.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has any attempt been made by the committee to correct this glaring injustice to the lawyers who have occasion to use the Supreme Court reports?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I am informed that it has been brought to the attention of the Judiciary Committee of this body.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

National Training School for Boys: Superintendent, $2,500; assistant superintendent, $1,500; teachers and assistants, $12,900; chief clerk, $1,000; nurse, $900; matron of school and nurse, at $600 each; storekeeper and steward, $720; farmer, $660; baker, $660; tailor, $720; parole officer, $900; office clerk, $720; assistant office clerk, $480; physical director, $720; six matrons of families, at $240 each; foremen of shop and skilled helpers, $4,200; assistant farmer and assistant engineer, at $420 each; laundress, $360; teamster, $420; florist, $540; engineer and shoemaker, at $600 each; cook, $600; dining-room attendants—boys $300; officers, $240; housemaid, $216; seamstress, $240; assistant cook, $300; 8 watchmen, at $420 each; secretary and treasurer, $900; in all, $40,736.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that in cases where changes have been made in items carried in paragraphs the Clerk be authorized to correct the totals.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk will read.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House with the amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DOWELL, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 11065) making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the same back to the House with certain amendments with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and all amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 1 o'clock and 59 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday, April 10, 1922, at 12 o'clock noon.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota: Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. H. R. 10716. A bill granting the consent of Congress to the State of Minnesota to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Mississippi River; without amendment (Rept. No. 886). Referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota: Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. H. R. 10770. A bill granting the consent of Congress to the county of Itasca, State of Minnesota, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the south arm of Pokegama Lake; with amendments (Rept. No. 887). Referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. BUTLER: Committee on Naval Affairs. H. R. 11214. A bill authorizing the President to scrap certain vessels in conformity with the provisions of the treaty to limit naval armaments, and for other purposes; without amendment (Rept. No. 889). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. KELLEY of Michigan: A bill (H. R. 11228) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes; committed to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered to be printed.

By Mr. APPLEBY: A bill (H. R. 11229) to amend the act approved December 23, 1913, known as the Federal reserve act; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. DRANE: A bill (H. R. 11230) to authorize the acceptance of title to forest lands in the State of Florida and to create national forests therefrom, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. WALSH (by request): A bill (H. R. 11231) to amend section 135 of the Judicial Code; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. SISSON: A bill (H. R. 11232) to amend section 12 of the act approved July 17, 1916, known as the Federal farm loan act; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. HULL: A bill (H. R. 11233) authorizing the Secretary of Commerce to convey certain lands to the county of Muscatine, Iowa; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. WALSH: A bill (H. R. 11234) to provide for the printing and distribution of Supreme Court Reports and amending sections 225, 226, 227, and 228 of the Judicial Code; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. ROGERS: A bill (H. R. 11235) to provide for the reclamation of the United States military reservation at Fort De Russey, Honolulu, Hawaii; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BLANTON: Resolution (H. Res. 322) authorizing the Speaker of the House to appoint a select committee of 11 Members of the House of Representatives to investigate, hold hearings, and procure all facts relative to certain alleged abuses; to the Committee on Rules.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BRAND: A bill (H. R. 11236) for the relief of the widow of Rudolph H. von Ezdorf; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. PRINGEY: A bill (H. R. 11237) for the relief of the heirs of James Taylor, deceased; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. ROACH: A bill (H. R. 11238) granting a pension to Samuel West; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee: A bill (H. R. 11239) granting a pension to Helen D. Craig; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. TINKHAM: A bill (H. R. 11240) for the relief of John J. Shaw; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. TOWNER: A bill (H. R. 11241) granting a pension to Catherine Tuttle; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WEAVER: A bill (H. R. 11242) for the relief of John P. Lockhart; to the Committee on Claims.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

5022. By Mr. KAHN: Resolution adopted by the San Francisco Labor Council, urging the passage of House bill 10646; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

5023. Also, resolution of the Foreign Trade Club of San Francisco, indorsing the resolutions of the National Merchant Marine Association relative to the President's ship-subsidy proposals; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

5024. By Mr. KISSEL: Memorial of Young & Metzner (Inc.), of Long Island City, N. Y., relative to jute bagging for covering cotton, House bill 7456, paragraph 1517; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

5025. By Mr. TAGUE: Resolution passed by the Boston City Council on April 3, protesting against the closing of the Boston (Mass.) Navy Yard; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

5026. By Mr. TEMPLE: Petition of W. M. Brown, of West Pittsburgh, Pa., and Dr. Thad. C. Brown, of Fort Collins, Colo., in support of the Bursum bill providing for the retirement of disabled officers of the World War; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

5027. By Mr. TOWNER: Petition of Howard L. Dawson, of Creston, Iowa, and 54 other citizens of Creston and Ellston, Iowa, protesting against the passage of House bill 9753; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

SENATE.

The Chaplain, Rev. J. J. Muir, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father, Thou hast been a good God unto us in all Thy dealings, notwithstanding our inclination at times to go away from Thy truth and our failure to appreciate the obligations resting upon us. But we come this morning thanking Thee for the goodness and the mercy multiplied as the days go by, and humbly beseech of Thee that there may be had this morning the consciousness of Thy nearness and the direction of Thy wisdom in all that may be said and done. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The reading clerk proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of the legislative day of Wednesday, April 5, 1922, when, on request of Mr. CURTIS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. MOSES presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Berlin, N. H., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation providing for compulsory Sunday observance in the District of Columbia, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. BORAH presented a petition of sundry citizens of Porthill, Idaho, praying for the enactment of legislation reviving the United States Grain Corporation, so as to stabilize prices of certain farm products, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. LODGE presented a memorial adopted at a mass meeting held in Boston, Mass., March 29, 1922, under the auspices of the Massachusetts Public Interests League, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation creating a department of education, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. WILLIS presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Barberton and Kenmore, in the State of Ohio, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation providing for compulsory Sunday observance in the District of Columbia, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented a letter from the Business Men's Club, of Cincinnati, Ohio, giving their views relative to the soldiers' bonus question, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a resolution of Dayton Post, No. 5, American Legion, of Dayton, Ohio, favoring the inclusion of a provision in the soldiers' bonus bill conferring the benefits thereof upon dependents of deceased ex-service men, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a resolution of Miller Stockum Post, No. 485, American Legion, of Cleves, Ohio, favoring the passage of the soldiers' bonus bill, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I have here a very brief letter from the Business Men's Club of Cincinnati, giving the result of a referendum vote on the question, "Are you in favor of a soldiers' bonus?" They ask that it be incorporated in the RECORD, and I ask that it may be referred to the Committee on Finance and printed in the RECORD without reading.

There being no objection, the letter was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE BUSINESS MEN'S CLUB,
OFFICE OF THE EXECUTIVE SECRETARY.
Cincinnati, Ohio, March 29, 1922.

Senator ATLEE POMERENE,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The board of directors of the Business Men's Club has instructed me to send you the attached copy of a letter sent to the President and to the Senate, giving the referendum votes of the members of the Business Men's Club on the question, "Are you in favor of a soldiers' bonus?" the signed votes received to date being:

No	582
Yes	99
Conditionally	18
Yes; if with sales tax	3

The directors will appreciate your presentation of this information to the proper Senate committee and to the Senate for record in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Very respectfully, RUTHERFORD H. COX,
Executive Secretary.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. FLETCHER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 1106) to correct the military record of James Burke, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. WADSWORTH, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 2371) to further amend an act entitled "An act for making further and more effective provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1916, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 594) thereon.

Mr. EDGE. I report back favorably without amendment from the Committee on Commerce the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 188) creating a committee to investigate existing conditions of industry and commerce in the United States for the purpose of recommending to Congress legislation defining the rights and limitations of cooperative organizations as distinguished from illicit combinations in restraint of trade, and I ask that it be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the joint resolution will be referred to that committee.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. This does not mean that it is adopted by the Senate in that form?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It does not. The request is that the Committee on Commerce be discharged from the further consideration of the joint resolution, and that it be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. Without objection, it will be so referred.

SPECIAL POSTAL CANCELING STAMPS.

Mr. TOWNSEND. From the Commitee on Post Offices and Post Roads I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 10740) authorizing the use of special canceling stamps in certain post offices. I will state that this is similar to a bill which was passed by the Senate some days ago authorizing the use of special stamps for canceling letters in certain cities of the United States where there are to be held conventions, public meetings, or other gatherings of extraordinary importance. The authorization will involve no expense to the Government, but will accommodate the local communities, and enable the post offices in the various places named to use special canceling stamps. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I do not desire to object, but I wish to make a brief statement. I do not know that I agree with the kind of legislation proposed by the bill just reported. Last year I introduced a bill of similar import, but it was rejected, the Post Office Department stating that it did not encourage or favor such legislation at that time. I do not see any reason why the policy should be changed now. However, I am not going to object to the bill reported by the Senator from Michigan, but I can not understand why such legislation should be passed in some cases and not be allowed in others.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I should like to state that this is the first time my attention has been called to the matter referred to by the Senator from South Carolina. This practice had been indulged in for many years by the department, and I supposed that it had the approval of the department.

Mr. DIAL. No; the department——

Mr. TOWNSEND. I do not remember the case to which the Senator has referred; certainly it was not brought to my attention.

Mr. DIAL. The bill to which I have referred authorized the use of a special canceling stamp by the post office at Greenville, S. C., but the department reported against it, and it did not pass. I am not going to object to the bill reported by the Senator from Michigan, but I think a uniform rule should be provided.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I should like to have the bill go over for a few moments until I may examine it. I desire to offer an amendment to it, and I did not know the bill was coming up this morning. I will not ask that the bill go over for the day, but I should like to have it go over for a little while.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made to the present consideration of the bill.

IMPROVEMENT OF THE ST. LAWRENCE RIVER (S. DOC. NO. 179).

Mr. MOSES. I report a resolution from the Committee on Printing, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

Mr. KING. Let it be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The reading clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 272), as follows:

Resolved, That the reports of the United States and Canadian Government engineers made to the International Joint Commission on the Improvement of the St. Lawrence Waterway from Montreal to Lake Erie, together with Appendices B and C accompanying the same, be printed, with illustrations, as a Senate document.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I inquire whether that embraces all the maps which accompanied the report?

Mr. MOSES. Yes, Mr. President; it embraces the engineering map, for which there has been very great demand. They are original maps.

Mr. KING. I am familiar with them, and have examined them, and I think they should be printed.

Mr. MOSES. There has been very great demand for them.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the resolution?

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. CARAWAY:

A bill (S. 3416) to permit the city of Fort Smith, Sebastian County, Ark., to erect or cause to be erected a dam across the Poteau River; and

A bill (S. 3417) authorizing Independence County, Ark., to construct a bridge across White River at or near Batesville, Ark.; to the Committee on Commerce.

A bill (S. 3418) for the relief of Carl L. Moore; and

A bill (S. 3419) for the relief of James E. Fitzgerald; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. NORRIS:

AMENDMENT OF STATE AND JUSTICE DEPARTMENTS APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CULBERSON submitted an amendment proposing to pay $3,500 to Mrs. Daisy Crawford Carroll, widow of B. Harvey Carroll, late consul to Cadiz, Spain, being one year's salary of her deceased husband, who died at his post of duty from illness incurred while in the Consular Service, intended to be proposed by him to House bill 11065, the State and Justice Departments appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT OF HOUSE RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. CARAWAY (for Mr. ROBINSON) submitted an amendment providing that the jurisdiction of the Mississippi River Commission be extended so as to include both the north and south banks of the Arkansas River for an equal distance between its mouth and the intersection thereof with the division line between Lincoln and Jefferson Counties, Ark., and that any funds which are herein or may be hereafter appropriated by Congress for improving the Mississippi River between Head of Passes and the mouth of the Ohio River, and which may be allotted to levees and bank revetment, may be expended within the limits of said extended jurisdiction, under the direction of the Secretary of War, etc., intended to be proposed by him to House bill 10766, authorizing improvement of rivers and harbors, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENTS OF AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. STERLING submitted an amendment proposing to increase the appropriation for the location and destruction of the barberry bushes and other vegetation from which rust spores originate, from $200,000, as proposed by the Committee on Appropriations, to $350,000, intended to be proposed by him to House bill 10730, the Agricultural appropriation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

Mr. KELLOGG submitted an amendment proposing to increase the appropriation for the investigation and improvement of cereals, including corn, and methods of cereal production, and for the study and control of cereal diseases, including barberry eradication, and for the investigation of the cultivation and breeding of flax for seed purposes, including a study of flax diseases, and for the investigation and improvement of broom corn and methods of broom-corn production, from $432,505, as proposed by the Committee on Appropriations, to $732,505, and to increase the appropriation for the location and destruction of the barberry bushes and other vegetation from which rust spores originate from $200,000, as proposed by the Committee on Appropriations, to $500,000, intended to be proposed by him to House bill 10730, the Agricultural appropriation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

KNICKERBOCKER THEATER DISASTER.

Mr. BALL. I ask unanimous consent to present the recommendations of the grand jury which conducted the investigation into the Knickerbocker Theater disaster and ask that they may be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read as requested.

The reading clerk read as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 3, 1922.

Hon. PEYTON GORDON,
United States Attorney, Washington, D. C.

SIR: We, the members of the grand jury of the January, 1922, term, having heard all of the testimony presented to us in the case of the Knickerbocker disaster, make the following recommendations:

(1) That Congress should be asked to furnish larger appropriations to the building inspector's office, to the end that they may pay adequate salaries to employ a sufficient number of computers and inspectors to do the work required.

Respectfully,

M. D. MCQUADE, Foreman.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 3, 1922.

Hon. PEYTON GORDON,
United States Attorney, Washington, D. C.

SIR: We, the members of the grand jury of the January, 1922, term, having heard all of the testimony presented to us in the case of the Knickerbocker disaster, make the following recommendations:

(2) That the building code of the District of Columbia be revised by correcting paragraphs which are ambiguous and conflicting, and that specific changes be made regarding the construction of the type of larger buildings, particularly those in which public gatherings will be held.

Respectfully,

M. D. MCQUADE, Foreman.

Mr. BALL. I move that the first recommendation be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, that the second recommendation be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and that they be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there are no concurrent or other resolutions the morning business is closed, and the calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

REPORT OF ALIEN PROPERTY CUSTODIAN.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication just received from the Alien Property Custodian, transmitting, pursuant to Senate Resolution 191, information relative to the activities of the office of the custodian.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, the document is very voluminous, and inasmuch as the cost of printing it will be very large, an estimate of the cost should be had from the Government Printing Office. I move that the report be referred to the Committee on Printing.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MOSES. I ask that the Secretary may read the letter of transmittal accompanying the report and also the statement briefing the substance of the report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the letter and statement will be read.

The reading clerk read as follows:

ALIEN PROPERTY CUSTODIAN,
SIXTEENTH AND P STREETS NW.,
Washington, D. C., April 10, 1922.

To the Senate of the United States:

In compliance with Senate Resolution 191, Sixty-seventh Congress, there is herewith transmitted the information requested.

The property administered by this office consists to-day of some 33,000 active trusts representing property scattered from the Philippine Islands and Hawaii and located in almost every State and Territory of the United States. Generally speaking, the property consists of industrial plants, such as chemical and woolen mills, steamship lines, banks, land and cattle companies, salmon factories, gold, silver, and other mines of precious metal, and other miscellaneous industrial plants, as well as thousands of parcels of real estate and trusts represented by securities and liquid assets. The "trading with the enemy act" directs the President to cause a detailed report to be made to the Congress as of January 1 of each year of all proceedings under the act during the year preceding. No such report has been filed under this section since that of February 22, 1919. When the Senate's resolution was passed this office was engaged in preparing a report not only for the year 1921, under the present administration, but for the years 1919 and 1920, hitherto not covered by any report as required by the "trading with the enemy act."

The data requested by this resolution covers the office of the Alien Property Custodian since the creation of that office by the act of October 6, 1917, covering a period of almost four and one-half years. In order that the great volume of information contained in this report can be properly presented and readily understood, the information is divided into several parts corresponding with the various subdivisions of information requested in the Senate's resolution.

PART 1.

Containing "the names of all attorneys who have been appointed or employed by the Alien Property Custodian and the compensation which has been allowed to each and the character of services performed by each."

(NOTE.—This includes the names of all attorneys employed in the Washington office of the Alien Property Custodian whose compensation was paid out of the congressional appropriation as well as a list of the State counsel and an explanation as to their duties.)

PART 2.

Containing "the names of all attorneys, directors, supervisors, managers, auditors, or other agents appointed by the Alien Property Custodian to take care of or to have the administration of property under the control of the Alien Property Custodian, with the compensation paid to each, or to be paid to each, by the Alien Property Custodian, or out of the trusts or trust funds in his custody; the names of all attorneys appointed or employed by corporations, agents, or individuals who have been or are acting as administrators or caretakers of property for the Alien Property Custodian, and the compensation paid to or to be paid to each."

(NOTE.—In part 2 will be found a list of every corporation seized in whole or in part by the Alien Property Custodian, a description thereof, as well as data showing counsel, board of directors, officers, etc., together with their terms of service and compensation and the disposition of the property, if sold or liquidated.)

There is also included in this section liquidations other than those included in the report of corporations included in this section and consummated before March 4, 1921, together with the expenses thereof. In this section will be found a report of the 23 enemy insurance companies administered by the Alien Property Custodian, containing similar information given in connection with the other corporations reported on in this section. In addition thereto, in this section is given a list of miscellaneous fees paid attorneys, giving their names, the trust number, and the amount. Except where noted by asterisks, these miscellaneous fees were all paid previous to March 4, 1921, for services rendered before that date. In this section is also included a description of liquidation and sale under supervision of Alien Property Custodian of property in the Philippine Islands, Porto Rico, Hawaii, and American Samoa.

PART 3.

Containing "the names of all attorneys who have represented or who now represent claimants to property under the control of the Alien Property Custodian; the names of all attorneys who have represented claimants to whom property has been returned under section 9 of the trading with the enemy act."

(NOTE.—It is impossible for this office to supply "the compensation allowed each of such attorneys out of the trusts or trust funds subject to such claims," because this office has no concern whatsoever with the compensation paid individuals who employ counsel to present their cases to this office. No such compensation is ever paid out of the trust funds or upon the authority of the Alien Property Custodian, and it would be a very peculiar state of affairs if the Alien Property Custodian did have any information as to what claimants were paying the lawyers practicing before this department.)

In response to this portion of the Senate's resolution, there is transmitted the name and description of every claim filed with this office, together with action taken thereon, the date thereof, and the name of the attorney representing the claimant, if any. There is also included a complete list of all past and pending litigation under section 9, giving the claim number, the name of the plaintiff, the jurisdiction in which the action is brought, the type of action, the amount involved, the disposition, if any, the name of the plaintiff's attorney, as well as any special counsel representing the Alien Property Custodian, and the fees paid the latter. In this section is also recited a full description of fees paid depositaries.

PART 4.

Containing "a statement and description of all property sold by the Alien Property Custodian, with the names of the corporations or persons to whom sold, and the amount received therefor."

(NOTE.—Information relative to sales of property under corporation management are contained in part 2, described heretofore.)

There is included in this section a detailed statement showing lists of all patents, trade-marks, and copyrights sold by the Alien Property Custodian, giving the United States Patent Office number, the date of issuance by the United States Patent Office, title and description of the patent, the date of assignment and sale, and the name of the purchaser. There is also included in this section a detailed statement showing all sales of miscellaneous stocks and bonds, all real estate, and sales of miscellaneous merchandise, with the dates thereof, the amounts received, and a full description of the property sold, together with the trust number.

The closing lines of the Senate's resolution request "a statement or description of all property seized or demanded by the Alien Property Custodian since the passage of the resolution declaring a state of peace to exist with Germany, Austria, and Hungary." No seizing of property, property rights, or money has been made subsequent to the passage of the peace resolution, July 2, 1921, by the Alien Property Custodian. Section 5 of the peace resolution reads, in part, as follows:

"All property of the Imperial German Government, or its successor or successors, and of all German nationals which was on April 6, 1917, or has since that date come into the possession or under control of or has been the subject of a demand by the United States of America or of any of its officers, agents, or employees, from any source or by any agency whatsoever, and all property of the Imperial and Royal Austro-Hungarian Government, or its successor or successors, and of all Austro-Hungarian nationals which was on December 7, 1917, in or has since that date come into the possession or control of or has been the subject of a demand by the United States of America or any of its officers, agents, or employees, from any source or by any agency whatsoever, shall be retained by the United States of America," etc.

This language authorizes the Alien Property Custodian to follow up any demand made for property under the trading with the enemy act in case the property has not actually been reduced to possession either because of court litigation or noncompliance with the terms of the trading with the enemy act. Were such language not included in the peace resolution, a premium would have been placed on those who disregarded and disobeyed the provisions of the trading with the enemy act or who refused to comply with demands made by the Alien Property Custodian in accordance with that act. In accordance with the provisions of the peace resolution there have been, however, the issuance and service subsequent to July 2, 1921, of demands of the Alien Property Custodian for the purpose of effecting a reduction to possession of property or property rights or funds which have been seized prior to July 2, 1921, by an outstanding demand and the title of which was vested in the Alien Property Custodian prior to July 2, 1921, by reason of such seizure demand. There were also certain curative demands made necessary as notices of the legal effect of the former seizures and necessary for the purpose of completing the administration by the Alien Property Custodian of property and property rights formerly acquired. No property, however, has been seized or demanded by the Alien Property Custodian since July 2, 1921. The last property seized by the Alien Property Custodian under the trading with the enemy act was the Bergdoll property, seized on May 27, 1921, within the scope of the trading with the enemy act. In order that the classes of demands may be more thoroughly understood the following three general classes are described herewith:

(1) Curative—necessary in instances where the custodian had formerly seized rights in or to a debt, evidenced by a promissory note, etc., or on an open account, unsecured or secured by mortgage, etc., or in instances where the custodian had formerly seized rights under some contract, in all of which instances it became necessary to serve a demand on the obligor in order to initiate proceedings if required to preserve the trust.

(2) Stock-cancellation demands—necessary in those instances where the right, title, and interest to shares of stock in corporations had been seized and it was necessary to secure certificates of stock from the corporation evidencing ownership of such rights in the custodian.

(3) Notices of seizure of the fee or lesser estate in real property—for recording purposes. Such instruments were necessary in those instances where there had been previously seized prior to July 2, 1921, the right, title, and interest in and to the fee or lesser estate, but no record notice thereof had been made in the offices of the respective recording officials and a record title was necessary for purposes of sale or to protect property against foreclosure or sale for nonpayment of taxes.

Expenses and fees are deducted from the trust funds under the operation of the Executive order of the President describing the rules and regulations respecting the scope of the powers and authority and performance of the duties of the Alien Property Custodian under the trading with the enemy act, dated February 26, 1918, and known as subdivision (b), article 3, powers of administration, reading as follows:

"The Alien Property Custodian may pay all reasonable and proper expenses which may be incurred in or about securing possession or control of money or other property and in or about collecting dividends, interest, and other income therefrom and in otherwise protecting and administering the same. So far as may be, all such expenses shall be paid out of and in any event recorded as a charge against the estate to which such money or other property belongs."

Also, under the decision of the Comptroller of the Treasury (26 Comp. Dec. 265) it was held that all expenses incurred in connection with the administration of enemy trusts were properly chargeable against the same.

The fees paid attorneys and counsel for services rendered the Alien Property Custodian in connection with the administration of the affairs of the corporations seized in whole or in part under the trading with the enemy act were paid out of the trust fund of the particular corporation involved from time to time in accordance with the above Executive order. If not paid out of the trust funds, payments have been made from the funds of the particular corporation upon action of the board of directors, with the approval of the Alien Property Custodian, if this office controlled a majority of the stock of the company. These fees cover services as counsel for the corporation, such as routine legal matters or court work or court litigation for the corporation, or in some instances, fees as attorneys representing the interests of the Alien Property Custodian for litigation in which the corporation might be involved affecting the rights of the Government or the corporation itself. The following data taken from the records of this office show the grand total of fees paid attorneys, salaries or fees to officers, directors, and supervisors, as well as expenditures for accounting, auditing, advertising, and printing. The details of all the grand totals herewith noted are contained in the body of the report submitted herewith:

Attorneys' fees prior to Mar. 4, 1921	$2,138,546.93
Attorneys' fees since Mar. 4, 1921	116,469.47
Salaries of officers and directors of corporations previous to Mar. 4, 1921	1,574,017.62
Salaries of officers and directors of corporations since Mar. 4, 1921	132,435.94
Paid for accounting, auditing, and appraising previous to Mar. 4, 1921	1,084,859.23
Paid for accounting, auditing, and appraising since Mar. 4, 1921	2,718.55
Paid for advertising and printing previous to Mar. 4, 1921	258,067.52

Respectfully submitted.

THOMAS W. MILLER,
Alien Property Custodian.

Mr. KING, Mr. CARAWAY, and Mr. STERLING addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is a further communication to be read.

The reading clerk read as follows:

[Office of Alien Property Custodian.]

This report consists of thousands of typewritten pages, and covers all operations of the Alien Property Custodian under the Wilson administration, when A. Mitchell Palmer and Francis P. Garvan occupied the office, and for the year just closed under the administration of President Harding. The Senate's resolution directs the present custodian to report all fees paid attorneys, as well as salaries of officers, directors, and supervisors paid by the various corporations, and also the amounts paid for accounting, auditing, advertising, and printing. This information to include all such payments made under the Wilson administration, as well as under the present one. The following figures are disclosed by the report:

Attorneys' fees paid prior to Mar. 4, 1921	$2,138,546.93
Attorneys' fees since Mar. 4, 1921	116,469.47
Salaries of officers and directors of corporations previous to Mar. 4, 1921	1,574,017.62
Salaries of officers and directors of corporations since Mar. 4, 1921	132,435.94
Paid for accounting, auditing, and appraising previous to Mar. 4, 1921	1,084,859.23
Paid for accounting, auditing, and appraising since Mar. 4, 1921	2,718.55
Paid for advertising and printing previous to Mar. 4, 1921	258,067.52

The trading with the enemy act directs the President to cause a detailed report to be made to the Congress up to December 31 of each year of all proceedings under the act during the preceding year. This report is the first one filed under this section of the law since that of A. Mitchell Palmer under date of February 22, 1919. The present custodian was engaged in preparing a report by direction of President

Harding, and, in accordance with the law, for the year 1921, as well as for the years 1919 and 1920 hitherto not covered by any report as required by law, when the Senate's resolution was adopted.

The report also discloses the fact that charges heretofore made by Senator KING that the present Alien Property Custodian has seized property since peace was declared with Germany last July are groundless and without any foundation whatsoever. The last property seized by the custodian was that belonging to Grover Cleveland Bergdoll, seized on May 27, 1921, under the provisions of the trading with the enemy act and within the scope of that act.

The report gives in detail all information concerning every corporation seized in whole or in part by the custodian. This will show all fees paid attorneys as well as salaries paid to officers and directors out of the trust or company funds of each corporation, together with their names and dates of service. Amounts paid for auditing, accounting, and appraising are shown in detail as well as the money spent on advertising, and the newspapers so favored. One accounting bill alone of $173,757.50 was paid to an accounting firm out of the congressional appropriation for a report which covered the various operations of the custodian office to August, 1919, but which was not completed and delivered until April, 1921, and when completed was of no practical value.

The conduct of affairs of the Alien Property Custodian in the Philippine Islands under the direction of former Governor General Harrison is reported in full. A complete list is given of the 8,000 claims for the return of property under the amendments to the act, giving the names of the attorneys representing these claims and the action thereon. All litigation in which the Alien Property Custodian appears is described, together with the names of the attorneys representing the custodian and the fees paid. A complete list is given, in addition to the corporations sold, of all sales of miscellaneous stocks, bonds, real estate, and merchandise sold since seizure, as well as a detailed description of all patents seized and their disposition.

DISCHARGE OF EX-SERVICE MEN FROM CIVIL SERVICE.

Mr. CARAWAY, Mr. STERLING, and Mr. KING addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. STERLING. Out of order, I——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Arkansas will state his inquiry.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, I should like to know whether anyone on this side is to be recognized? I have been on my feet here, while half a dozen Republican Senators have been recognized since I rose and addressed the Chair.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, who has the floor?

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, I have a part of it. If it is to be the rule of the Senate that the Vice President is to look on the Republican side of the Chamber all the time and ignore every Democratic Senator, let that rule be announced.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks that perhaps the Senator from Arkansas was on his feet.

Mr. CARAWAY. The Chair knows that I was on my feet.

Mr. MOSES and Mr. LENROOT. Regular order, Mr. President.

Mr. WILLIS. I demand the regular order.

Mr. CARAWAY. The regular order is to know whether I am going to be recognized or not.

Mr. MOSES. Evidently not.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Arkansas will be recognized in due time.

Mr. STERLING. I will say for the satisfaction of the Senator from Arkansas that it will take me but a moment.

Mr. CARAWAY. Oh, I wish no favor. I am asking only my right.

Mr. LENROOT. I rise to a point of order. I demand the regular order.

Mr. CARAWAY. Well, demand it; I am demanding it myself.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will recognize the Senator from Arkansas as soon as the pending matter is disposed of.

Mr. CARAWAY. I suppose as soon as all Senators on the other side are through.

[At this point Mr. STERLING introduced a bill and submitted a proposed amendment to the Agricultural Department appropriation bill, which appear under their proper headings.]

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. CARAWAY. That is very kind of the Chair. I tried to attract the attention of the Chair before the morning business was closed in order to introduce a resolution. I ask now, out of order, to be permitted to introduce it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the resolution will be received and the Secretary will read the resolution.

The reading clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 271), as follows:

Whereas by act of Congress it is provided that in the event of reductions being made in the force in any of the executive departments no honorably discharged soldier or sailor whose record in said department has been rated as good shall be discharged or dropped or reduced in rank or salary; and

Whereas many honorably discharged soldiers and sailors whose records were good have been demoted, dropped, and discharged from the service: Now therefore be it

Resolved, That the President of the United States is hereby requested if not incompatible with the public good to inform Congress:

(a) How many honorably discharged sailors and soldiers have been demoted, dropped, and discharged from the service since the 1st day of March, 1921; and

(b) By what, if any, charges, or lack of efficiency, justifying said dismissal or demotion; and

(c) Giving the name and date of demotion, dropping, or discharge of each soldier or sailor.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. CARAWAY. Section 4——

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I demand the regular order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Arkansas has the floor.

Mr. LENROOT. I demand the regular order. Debate is not in order.

Mr. LODGE. Debate is not in order.

Mr. KING. I ask unanimous consent——

Mr. McCORMICK. The resolution should lie over under the rule.

Mr. KING. I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Arkansas may make such statement as he cares to make upon the resolution which he has just offered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. MOSES, Mr. MCCORMICK, Mr. LENROOT, and Mr. ODDIE objected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will lie over under the rule.

Mr. CARAWAY. It is to be presumed that at some time in the course of my lifetime I shall get recognized again and those Senators who are so anxious to object now——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The regular order is the calendar under Rule VIII.

Mr. CARAWAY. I understand what the regular order is, but since it took me so long to get recognized I shall complete my statement.

Mr. MOSES. I call for the regular order.

Mr. CARAWAY. Call for the regular order, if you wish, but I shall get the floor some time in my own right, and then I shall make a statement.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The calendar under Rule VIII is in order and will be proceeded with.

THE CALENDAR.

The bill (S. 384) to require judges appointed under authority of the United States to devote their entire time to the duties of a judge was announced as first in order on the calendar.

Mr. DIAL. I move that that bill be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

The bill (S. 214) to amend section 24 of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 581) to repeal the act prohibiting increased pay under lump-sum appropriations to employees transferred within one year, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 582) to repeal section 5 of the act approved June 22, 1906, entitled "An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907, and for other purposes," was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1439) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for vocational rehabilitation and return to civil employment of disabled persons discharged from the military or naval forces of the United States, and for other purposes," approved June 27, 1918, as amended by the act of July 11, 1919, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1467) to carry into effect the findings of the Court of Claims in favor of Elizabeth White, administratrix of the estate of Samuel N. White, deceased, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Objection was made heretofore to that bill. Let it go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1807) to aid in stabilizing the coal industry, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I suppose that bill will take considerable time. Let it go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1016) to amend an act entitled "An act to repeal section 3480 of the Revised Statutes of the United States," was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like some explanation of that bill. The Senator who introduced it does not seem to be here, so I ask that it go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1375) to prohibit and punish certain seditious acts against the Government of the United States and to prohibit the use of the mails for the purpose of promoting such acts was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I suppose that bill will take some time. I have no objection to its being considered.

Mr. STERLING. I think the bill had better go over, under the circumstances.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The resolution (S. Res. 67) authorizing the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments to hold hearings here or elsewhere and to employ a stenographer to report the same was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let that go over, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 63) for the relief of Lester A. Rockwell was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 491) to provide, without expenditure of Federal funds, the opportunities of the people to acquire rural homes, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2051) to amend section 3142 of the Revised Statutes, to permit an increase in the number of collection districts for the collection of internal revenue and in the number of collectors of internal revenue from 64 to 74 was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING and Mr. OVERMAN. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 62) for the relief of Charles K. Bond, alias Kimball W. Rollins, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1829) for the relief of Walter Runke was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 7) to amend the act entitled "An act to regulate the business of loaning money on security of any kind by persons, firms, and corporations other than national banks, licensed bankers, trust companies, savings banks, building and loan associations, and real estate brokers in the District of Columbia," approved February 4, 1913, was announced as next in order.

Mr. POMERENE. I ask that that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 496) for the relief of George A. Robertson was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 985) to amend the provisions of an act relating to certain railway corporations owning or operating street railways in the District of Columbia, approved June 5, 1920, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. That bill involves the question of merger of street railroads in the District of Columbia. It is a very important bill, and will require considerable discussion. I should like to see the matter considered, but I do not think we will have time this morning.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

SCHOONER "CHARLOTTE W. MILLER."

The bill (S. 1063) for the relief of the owners of the schooner Charlotte W. Miller was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. A bill for this purpose has been passed by the House and has already become a law.

Mr. KING. Did it pass the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Yes.

Mr. KING. Then I move that this bill be indefinitely postponed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the indefinite postponement of the bill.

The motion to postpone indefinitely was agreed to.

BILLS, ETC., PASSED OVER.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 48) authorizing retirement as warrant officers of certain Army field clerks and field clerks Quartermaster Corps was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be passed over.

CAPT. EDWARD T. HARTMANN AND OTHERS.

The bill (S. 1281) for the relief of Capt. Edward T. Hartmann, United States Army, and others was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I will ask for an explanation of that bill.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, I think I can explain it in a word.

This is a bill for the relief of Army officers who lost their personal property in the sinking of the steamer Meade, upon which they were, in 1899. The only difficulty about the case is that the other officers who were on the vessel have already had bills passed in their favor; and the Secretary of War sends down this bill for the four remaining officers who have not had the same remedy, and the bill takes care of them. That is the reason why the committee reported it favorably.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator whether he thinks it is wise and proper for the Government to pay such large sums for personal property that was lost?

Mr. SPENCER. The sums are not large. These were the personal belongings of the officers that were stored in the steamer Meade when it was sunk in the harbor of Ponce, P. R., on May 16, 1899. These officers suffered this damage through no fault of their own, because they and their personal property were put upon this steamer by order of the department; and I thought the department very properly said that the officers ought not to be required to sustain this loss personally. It is largely clothing and accouterments and personal property. I should have said that the department was very fair in its decision that they ought to be reimbursed for that loss.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator, if this is a just claim against the Government, why it was not paid years ago?

Mr. SPENCER. One of the reasons is because some Senators from time to time objected when the bill came up; and, as a matter of fact, the other officers on this same transport by individual bills have obtained precisely the same relief for themselves. These four officers, not having pressed their individual bills perhaps as vigorously as the others, have not had the relief; and this bill simply gives to the men mentioned in the bill the relief that the other officers have had.

Mr. KING. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that the Senate has refused to pass bills to reimburse soldiers and officers for property which was lost in fires in barracks and lost upon ships, and my understanding was that where payment was made it was limited solely to property which in the discharge of their duties they were compelled to have. If the Government of the United States becomes an insurer of all the property of all the officers and all the privates in the Army, we shall be assuming a tremendous responsibility.

Mr. SPENCER. I think I can assure the Senator that this bill merely covers that class of property which the officers were required to have with them and to carry with them on this vessel.

Mr. OVERMAN. How was the amount due ascertained?

Mr. SPENCER. A board of review was held, and the board of review went over every item and certified to the War Department these items, and then the War Department sent down this bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay to Capt. Edward T. Hartmann the sum of $272.50, Capt. Frederick G. Lawton the sum of $1,400, Capt. Frank B. Watson the sum of $1,500, and Capt. James Ronayne, United States Army, the sum of $1,658, which sums, or so much thereof as may be necessary, are hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, said sums to be payment in full for all losses of personal property incurred by them by reason of the sinking of the United States transport Meade in the harbor of Ponce, Porto Rico, on or about May 16, 1899: Provided, That the accounting officer of the Treasury shall require a schedule and affidavit from each, such schedule to be approved by the Secretary of War.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS, ETC., PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 2040) to provide for compulsory school attendance of children, to provide for the taking of a school census, to create the department of school attendance and work permits for the administration of this act and the act to regulate the employment of child labor in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, within the District of Columbia, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, that bill is one which many of us are in favor of, but there are a number of amendments to be offered. It will take more time than we shall have in the morning hour.

Mr. McCORMICK. What is the bill?

Mr. KING. It is a bill for compulsory education, and other purposes.

Mr. LODGE. What is the number?

Mr. KING. It is Order of Business 202, and I ask that it go over. I shall be glad to join with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER] in asking for a special hour when this bill can be taken up for consideration.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I have been trying for a good many weeks to bring up this bill. I am going to let it go over for this time; but I give notice now that at an early date I shall ask for the fixing of a definite time at which it shall be considered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 32) for the relief of contractors, subcontractors, and material men who have suffered loss by reason of Government orders was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I have been asked to have that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2170) to encourage the development of the agricultural resources of the United States through Federal and State cooperation, giving preference in the matter of employment and the establishment of rural homes to those who have served with the military and naval forces of the United States, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that bill go over. It will take too long to consider it to-day in the morning hour.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

LONGEVITY PAY FOR RESERVE OFFICERS, ETC.

The bill (S. 150) to provide longevity pay for reserve officers and National Guard officers serving under orders of the War Department was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I ask for an explanation of that bill before I consent to its consideration.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, this bill affects only about 8 or 10 National Guard officers, and is designed to correct an inadvertent omission in prior legislation. I understand that it gives to those National Guard officers who are now detailed to duty on the General Staff merely the same recognition which other officers have when similarly detailed. Both the Secretary of War under the former administration and the Secretary of War under the present administration have certified to Congress that it is to cure an evidently unintentional mistake in the prior legislation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That National Guard officers and officers of the Reserve Corps who have had service in the National Guard or the Organized Militia of any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, who are called to duty under section 3a or 5b of the national defense act, shall from the beginning of said duty at any time since June 4, 1920, receive the same pay and allowances as a Regular Army officer having the same rank and length of service as said National Guard or Reserve Corps officer, whose prior service in the National Guard and the Organized Militia shall be counted in ascertaining his rights under this proviso.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, there is a mistake in line 6, in the last part of the line, where a section is designated as "5b." It should be "5 (b)." There should be parentheses around the letter "b" which follows the "5."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, parentheses will be placed around the letter "(b)." If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SPECIAL POSTAL CANCELING STAMPS.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I have no objection to the Senate taking up the report from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads of House bill 10740.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 10740) authorizing the use of special canceling stamps, and it was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Postmaster General be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by him, to permit the use of special canceling stamps, as follows: In the Gloucester, Mass., post office, dies bearing the words and figures "Don't Miss 300th Anniversary Celebration, Gloucester, Mass., August, 1923." In the Chicago, Ill., post office, dies bearing the words and figures "Chicago Boys' Week, May 19–25, 1922." In the Sunbury, Pa., post office, dies bearing the words and figures "Old Home Week, 150 Birthday, July 1–2–3–4, 1922." In the Indianapolis, Ind., post office, dies bearing the words and figures "Indiana Health Exposition, May 19–27, 1922, Indianapolis, Ind." In the Chicago, Ill., post office, dies bearing the words and figures "International Live Stock Exposition, Chicago, December 2nd to 9th, 1922." In the Chicago, Ill., post office, dies bearing the words and figures "Pageant of Progress Exposition, Chicago, July 29 to August 14, 1922": Provided, That no permit shall be granted for a longer period than six months and the duration of the event to be advertised: Provided further, That nothing in this act shall be construed to authorize the expenditure of any postal funds or appropriation either for the purchase of special canceling stamps or post-marking dies or for adapting canceling machines for the use of such stamps or dies or for installing the same, but all expense shall be prepaid by the permittee.

SEC. 2. That any permission granted under this act is hereby revoked in the event the Government shall find it expedient or necessary to use special canceling stamps or post-marking dies for its own purposes.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 2, line 6, after the numerals "1922," insert the following language:

In the Tacoma, Wash., post office, dies bearing the words and figures "See Rainier National Park via Tacoma, season June–September, 1922."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MOSES. I offer the following amendment, the language to be inserted at the end of the amendment just adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. To follow the amendment just agreed to insert:

In the Portsmouth, N. H., and the Dover, N. H., post offices, dies bearing the words and figures "Three Hundredth Anniversary of the first settlements in New Hampshire, 1623–1923."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

SALARIES OF TEACHERS IN SCHOOLS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The bill (S. 1976) to amend the first paragraph of section 2 of an act entitled "An act to regulate the salaries of teachers, school officers, and other employees of the board of education of the District of Columbia," approved June 20, 1906, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. A joint committee of the House and Senate are considering the question of education and the matter involved in the bill. In view of the fact that they will soon report a comprehensive educational plan for the District, I ask that the bill be passed over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

LONGEVITY AND CONTINUOUS SERVICE PAY OF NATIONAL GUARDSMEN.

The bill (S. 1790) to place national guardsmen who entered the World War otherwise than through the draft on equal basis as to longevity and continuous-service pay with national guardsmen who were drafted was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That from and including August 5, 1917, officers and enlisted men of the forces of the Army of the United States, other than the Regular Army, who have had service in the National Guard or Organized Militia of any State, Territory, or District of Columbia, but who have entered the service otherwise than through the draft of August 5, 1917, are entitled to count such service in computing longevity and continuous-service pay from and including August 5, 1917.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, this bill merely carries out the intention of Congress expressed in a measure which it enacted on July 9, 1918. Since that date the officers and enlisted men in the National Guard have been on a parity as to longevity and continuous-service pay. The few months before that time were intended to be covered by Congress in this bill enacted July 9, 1918, but the Comptroller of the Treasury held that it was prospective in its operation. This bill merely carries out the intention of Congress, covering the few months between August 5, 1917, and July 9, 1918.

Mr. KING. How much is involved and how many persons does it affect?

Mr. SHEPPARD. It affects very few persons, and involves less than $100,000. I had an estimate on the subject made by General Lord. It puts the men who came in by enlistment or who volunteered in the National Guard on a parity with the men who were drafted, as to longevity and continuous-service pay, for the few months between August, 1917, and July 9, 1918.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DISTRICT SUPERINTENDENTS OF COAST GUARD.

The bill (S. 1075) giving permanent rank to district superintendents of the Coast Guard on the retired list was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

INVESTIGATION OF FEDERAL RESERVE SYSTEM.

The resolution (S. Res. 115) directing an investigation of the administration of the Federal reserve system and the office of the Comptroller of the Currency, which had been reported by Mr. MCCORMICK from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, was read and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Banking and Currency of the Senate, or any subcommittee thereof, is authorized and directed to investigate the administration of the Federal reserve system and of the office of the Comptroller of the Currency and to report its findings to the Senate with such recommendations as it deems proper. For the purposes of this resolution the committee or any subcommittee thereof is authorized to employ such stenographic and clerical assistance, to meet at such times and places and to sit during the session and recesses of the present Congress, to have such printing and binding done, to make such expenditures for traveling, and to make such other expenditures as it deems necessary. The committee or any subcommittee thereof is further authorized to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths and affirmations, and to take testimony. The President of the Senate is authorized, upon the request of the committee or any subcommittee thereof, to issue subpœnas for such purposes, and the Sergeant at Arms of the Senate is directed to serve such subpœnas. Any person who willfully refuses to obey any such subpœna and any witness guilty of contumacy shall be liable to penalties provided in section 102 of the Revised Statutes of the United States. All expenses of the committee or any subcommittee thereof incurred under this resolution shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate on vouchers authorized by the committee, signed by the chairman thereof.

FOREIGN TRADE ZONES.

The bill (S. 2391) to provide for the establishment, operation, and maintenance of foreign trade zones in ports of entry of the United States, to expedite and encourage foreign commerce, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That may go over for the present.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

COURT OF CLAIMS.

The bill (S. 2228) to amend certain sections of the Judicial Code relating to the Court of Claims was announced as next in order.

Mr. NELSON. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

AMENDMENT OF TRANSPORTATION ACT OF 1920.

The bill (S. 2337) to amend the transportation act, 1920, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. TOWNSEND. A similar bill has passed the House and is on the calendar, having been reported from the same committee which reported this bill. I therefore move that Senate bill 2337 be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

OBLIGATIONS OF FOREIGN GOVERNMENTS.

The bill (S. 2135) to enable the refunding of obligations of foreign Governments owing to the United States of America, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I move that the bill be indefinitely postponed. House bill 8762 of like character has passed the Senate and become a law.

The motion was agreed to.

JOINT RESOLUTION AND BILLS PASSED OVER.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 183) imposing a duty of 90 per cent on all goods exported from the United States for the use of the American Expeditionary Forces and its allied forces and which have been sold to any foreign Government or person, when reimported into the United States, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2515) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes,' approved June 3, 1916, and to establish military justice," approved June 4, 1920, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 268) for the relief of William O. Mallahan was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2035) for the relief of William M. Carroll was announced as next in order.

Mr. MCCORMICK. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The resolution (S. Res. 150) directing the Secretary of the Senate to employ a special officer for the office of the Secretary of the Senate was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2573) to amend section 198 of the act of March 4, 1909, entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States," as amended, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 8331) to amend the transportation act, 1920, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

ADDITIONAL HOSPITAL FACILITIES FOR VETERANS OF WORLD WAR.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I ask unanimous consent, in view of the fact that it may not be reached to-day, that we take up for immediate consideration Calendar No. 588, House bill 10864. It is a bill which has been favorably reported by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, appropriating $17,000,000 for additional hospital facilities for disabled veterans. In view of the fact that the committee has unanimously reported the bill, the Director of the Veterans' Bureau, the so-called White committee, and the special committee of this body which has been investigating hospital facilities for disabled soldiers, are all in favor of the measure, it seems to me we should expedite action and pass this bill without delay. The need of further hospitals for our disabled veterans is so urgent that I feel impelled to request immediate action and prevent further delays. I ask unanimous consent that it be taken up and considered now.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. JONES of Washington. This is regular Calendar Monday, and it is the only time we have had on the calendar for some time. Of course, we want this bill passed, and no doubt it will be passed in a very short while. So I think we had better go on with the calendar until 2 o'clock, and then, no doubt, the Senator can get the bill up and have it passed.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I fear it will not be reached by 2 o'clock. Will the Senator agree that it may be taken up later in the day?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I am satisfied the unfinished business can be temporarily laid aside after 2 o'clock in order to afford an opportunity to pass this very meritorious measure.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection being made, the Secretary will proceed with the call of the calendar.

CHARLES F. GETCHELL.

The bill (S. 748) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Charles F. Getchell was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

ORIN THORNTON.

The bill (S. 1655) for the relief of Orin Thornton was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

GEORGE EMERSON.

The bill (S. 726) for the relief of George Emerson was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

Mr. MYERS. I ask the Senator from Utah to withhold his objection to the consideration of that bill until I can make a brief explanation of it.

Mr. KING. I shall do so.

Mr. MYERS. I shall be glad if the Senator will hear my explanation.

Mr. KING. I should be pleased to hear the explanation of the Senator.

Mr. MYERS. The facts in this case are as follows: George Emerson was a young married man, a man of family, working for a living in Great Falls, Mont. He was commissioned a second lieutenant during our war with Germany and served down at Camp Travis, Tex., where he was engaged in training soldiers for service. While there he was appointed bookkeeper and cashier of the regiment, or of the barracks, without his solicitation. He was chosen for the position of cashier and bookkeeper, to handle considerable funds, and had to serve whether he wanted to or not. He was the bookkeeper and he had to have under him a cashier, and the cashier necessarily had to have access to the cash. A private in the Army, one Moore, was selected as cashier without the volition or choice of Mr. Emerson. He did not select the man, but the officers over him selected and designated Moore, and it was necessary for that man to have a key to the safe and access to the cash. That man stole some money out of the safe, simply absconded, deserted, and left the country. Mr. Emerson had no control over him, but the Army lost some money on account of it. Mr. Emerson demanded an investigation and a hearing. It was accorded him and granted, and a judicial board of inquiry, consisting of three officers—a colonel, a major, and a captain—sat and heard the evidence on both sides, sworn testimony.

They sat for quite a while and examined everybody who could be brought before them who could shed any light on the matter. They unanimously exonerated Lieutenant Emerson, and returned a verdict that he was in no wise to blame, was not responsible, and did not profit by Moore's robbery. He was not court-martialed, he was not punished, but was removed from the Army and he went back to civil life. When he left the service the War Department arbitrarily held out of his salary the sum of $235, after he had been exonerated of any wrongdoing. I will say in this connection that it devolved upon the commanding general of the camp to review the findings of the board of inquiry, this court, and he did set them aside; but Lieutenant Emerson was not prosecuted, he was not court-martialed, he was not punished in any way. The commanding general simply set aside the findings of the court of inquiry and ordered that the balance of $235 due Lieutenant Emerson on his salary as an officer be withheld and not paid him. One man set aside the findings of a court of three officers, who conducted an exhaustive investigation, heard sworn testimony, and exonerated Lieutenant Emerson.

Mr. KING. What reason did the commanding general assign for setting aside the findings of the board?

Mr. MYERS. None. His order is set forth here in the committee report. Everything is set forth in this report.

I will read from the report of the Secretary of War, which was made on the bill, as follows:

> The proceedings of the board were disapproved by the commanding general Camp Travis, who stated as follows—

And here is the commanding general's statement:

> "1. Transmit herewith proceedings of the board of officers in the case of Lieut. George Emerson, Air Service, in charge of the tenth exchange.
>
> "2. These proceedings were disapproved by me, but in view of the fact that I do not believe that trial before a general court-martial is warranted under the existing conditions, I have discharged this officer on October 21, withholding his final pay, in accordance with instructions contained in Circulars 85 and 468 c. s., War Department."
>
> 5. The Judge Advocate General on December 16, 1919, rendered an opinion in the case, the last paragraph reading as follows:
>
> "6. It is the opinion of this office that Second Lieut. George Emerson is liable to the Tenth Infantry exchange for all losses it has sustained by reason of the theft and fraudulent transactions of Private Moore, as above set out, and for any sums it may be required hereafter to pay to the bank by reason of them."
>
> 6. The opinion of the Judge Advocate General was approved by the Secretary of War, who directed the Chief of Finance to enter a stoppage of pay against Second Lieut. George Emerson and apply the amount collected to the liquidation of his indebtedness to the Tenth Infantry exchange.
> 7. The records of the Finance Department indicate that there was a collection made by the withholding of $235.87, the final pay of Lieutenant Emerson.

The commanding general does not give any reason for his action. He does not say the evidence produced at the hearing was not true. He does not say the preponderance of evidence was against Lieutenant Emerson. He gives no reason whatever. It was simply an arbitrary and, I think, most unjustifiable act. If Lieutenant Emerson was guilty of any participation in the theft, he should have been court-martialed, convicted, and sent to the penitentiary. If he was not guilty, he is entitled to this money.

Emerson went back to his home in Great Falls, Mont. He is a poor man, working for his living, and has a family dependent upon him, and he badly needs this money. I say there can be no middle ground about it. This man is either criminally guilty and should have been punished, or he is not, and this thing of letting him out of the Army and not prosecuting him and then withholding $235 of his pay is wholly untenable, in my opinion.

Mr. KING. I notice that the report of the Judge Advocate General, setting aside the findings of the three officers, was approved by the Secretary of War.

Mr. MYERS. Yes; it was.

Mr. KING. I can hardly believe that the Judge Advocate General or the Secretary of War, both of whom we know to be humane men and men of good judgment and integrity, would set aside a finding as to liability unless there was some reason for it.

Mr. MYERS. I apprehend they were automatic, routine orders. The commanding general made his order without giving any reason for it, and the Judge Advocate General, I take it, automatically upheld the action of the commanding general, and the Secretary of War simply stands by the Judge Advocate General. None of them gave any reasons. I say, if a man steals $235 and is proven criminally guilty, he should be sent to the penitentiary, but if there is no crime proven against him the Government should not arbitrarily withhold $235 from his pay. The board of inquiry held there was no proof of any criminal complicity at all.

Mr. KING. I presume that the action of the Secretary of War and the commanding general was based upon the theory that Lieutenant Emerson had charge of the funds; that it was his duty to see that the funds were safely kept; and if a private were assigned to aid him, the private would be his subordinate and it would be his duty to take the necessary precautions to conserve the fund intrusted to his care.

It seems to me, in view of the fact that so many officers and persons in the Government service are intrusted with money, that there must be a very high degree of care and diligence exacted of them or there would be large sums—small, perhaps, in each item, but in the aggregate large—lost by embezzlement or theft or what not, and the Government would be responsible. There must be a high degree of care exercised by Government officers who are charged with the conservation of funds.

Mr. MYERS. The Senator may presume those are the reasons, but he can not know. No one can know.

Mr. KING. I have no doubt those are the reasons.

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President——

Mr. MYERS. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. BURSUM. There is this phase about the question, as I see it. These were not Government funds. They were canteen funds which belonged, as I take it, to the regiment or the several companies. In order to manage the canteen it was necessary to have an assistant, and I take it that the assistant was selected by the several officers of the regiment. There is no provision whereby the canteen officer could be protected or could enforce a surety bond from the assistant. The assistant was selected by the officers of the regiment, and of necessity he must consent because his services were required.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I would like to inquire whether the evidence is set forth in the report, so we can judge for ourselves?

Mr. MYERS. The evidence is not set forth in the committee report. It is quite bulky.

Mr. OVERMAN. It seems to me that two great officers, including the Secretary of War, have approved the finding of the commanding general.

Mr. MYERS. The evidence is not set forth in the report, but a transcript of the evidence was before the Senate Committee on Military Affairs, and that committee carefully considered the matter, and I believe reported unanimously in favor of the bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. I can understand what the Senator means, but the Judge Advocate General and the Secretary of War turned down the findings of the board, and therefore I would like to read the evidence.

Mr. MYERS. There is nothing to show that they passed on the evidence at all, as I understand it. The Senate Committee on Military Affairs, however, has considered the evidence for the Senator from North Carolina, and has made this recommendation. At least a subcommittee, a portion of the full committee, examined the transcript of the evidence and made a recommendation, and the whole committee acted favorably upon it. The full committee recommends the passage of this bill, and I think its action was unanimous.

Mr. OVERMAN. I understand these were not Government funds, but canteen funds.

Mr. BURSUM. The very nature of the case would preclude it from being a Government fund.

Mr. OVERMAN. I would like to have the matter go over, and I will look into it a little further.

Mr. MYERS. It has gone over a good many times.

Mr. OVERMAN. It is a bad precedent to allow a claim where it has been turned down by the Judge Advocate General and the Secretary of War.

Mr. BURSUM. It is only a question of withholding this sum of $235 from the pay of this officer.

Mr. OVERMAN. The principle would be just the same if it were only 10 cents.

Mr. MYERS. The trouble is that some minor bills go over month after month and Senators are not willing to take the judgment of the committee which is charged with the investigation of these matters and reporting to the Senate.

Mr. OVERMAN. I like to investigate for myself.

Mr. MYERS. If every one of the 96 Senators is determined to investigate all the evidence and read it, we will never get action on this bill, and a poor man suffers meantime and is denied justice. A committee of the Senate investigated this matter, went to the bottom of it, passed on the evidence, and has reported to the Senate. I think its conclusions and recommendation should be worth something. Now one or two Senators hold up action.

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not want to fall out with the committee who made the report, but they ought at least to give a résumé of the evidence, so that each Senator voting upon the question can do so upon his own conscience and can settle the matter for himself.

Mr. MYERS. Will the Senator send to the War Department and get the transcript of the evidence, if it be there, as I think it is, and read it before the calendar is called again?

Mr. OVERMAN. If the Senator from Montana will furnish it, I shall be glad to read it.

Mr. MYERS. I shall undertake to get it for the Senator.

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not know anything about the claim except what I have heard stated on the floor of the Senate, but here are three men who say the matter is all right and the man ought to be paid, and then the commanding general and the Judge Advocate General, and the Secretary of War, who reviewed the testimony, say he ought not to be repaid.

Mr. MYERS. The commanding general said that, and I think the Senator ought to know that in all probability the Judge Advocate General and the Secretary of War just automatically approved his action. It is inconceivable that they should be able to read all the evidence in such cases. They have not the time. They must rely on the action of officers under them.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator surely does not mean that these officers will put the stamp of their approval upon a report without looking into it at all. Neither the Secretary of War nor the Judge Advocate General will turn down a report of this kind which will blacken the name of a man without looking into the facts.

Mr. MYERS. I do not suppose the Judge Advocate General has the time to give attention to the vast multitude of details that are involved in cases of this kind. It is inconceivable. However, if the Senator wants to read the testimony, I will see if I can get it for him.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. KING. It is understood that the bill is to go over and certain information is to be furnished.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 1452) providing for establishing shooting grounds for the public, for establishing game refuges and breeding grounds for protecting migratory birds, and requiring a Federal license to hunt them, was announced as next in order.

Mr. NEW. I ask that the bill be temporarily passed over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be passed over temporarily.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 138) authorizing the payment of the cost of transportation for certain supplies purchased by the Military Establishment was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 41) authorizing transportation for dependents of Army field clerks and field clerks, Quartermaster Corps, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2328) for the relief of Margaret I. Varnum was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be passed over.

CAPT. BENJAMIN S. BERRY.

The bill (H. R. 2556) to advance Capt. Benjamin S. Berry to the permanent rank of major was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to place Maj. Benjamin S. Berry, United States Marine Corps, on the lineal list of officers of the Marine Corps, to take rank among the permanent majors of the Marine Corps next after Lauren S. Willis, United States Marine Corps: Provided, That said Benjamin S. Berry shall not by the passage of this act be entitled to any back pay or allowances of any kind: And provided further, That nothing contained in this act shall operate to increase the number of majors in the United States Marine Corps as now authorized by law.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

Mr. PAGE. I ask the Senator from Utah to state the ground upon which he wants to have the bill go over?

Mr. KING. I shall be willing to hear an explanation from the Senator as to whether there is any reason why the bill should be passed.

Mr. PAGE. To my mind it is a very meritorious bill.

Mr. KING. I shall be glad to hear what the Senator wishes to say about it.

Mr. PAGE. In the first place, it is a bill pretty well hedged about with safety. The bill does not entitle Captain Berry to any back pay of any kind whatsoever. The facts of the matter are these, and I would like to have the Senator from Utah know them, because I think he should be in sympathy with the bill if he understood the facts. Here was a young man, who in his early days was a little inclined to drink too much whisky. He reformed. He lost a great many numbers because he was intemperate for a time, but later on he performed a great many deeds which, I think the Senator will agree, ought to entitle him to consideration here. Let me read from the report for just a moment:

The purpose of this bill is to restore Capt. Benjamin S. Berry, United States Marine Corps, to the position on the permanent list of the Marine Corps which he would have held had he not been court-martialed in May, 1910.

Here is the vital point:

Ever since that date Capt. Benjamin S. Berry has performed unusually meritorious services, so much so that he received the French croix de guerre with palm and was also awarded the distinguished service cross by the commander in chief of the American Expeditionary Forces in France, for "he led his men in a gallant attack across open ground and into the Bois de Belleau, France, northwest of Chateau-Thierry, on the afternoon of June 6, 1918, inspiring them to deeds of valor by his example. When he reached the edge of the woods he fell, severely wounded. Nevertheless, he arose and made a final dash of 30 yards across through a storm of bullets and reached again the first wave of his command, before yielding to exhaustion from his injury."

It is the opinion of the department that this act alone should eliminate and atone for any former mistake which he may have made, and that it would have a good effect upon the service in general if it became known that such deeds of valor as shown by this officer could atone for a former error. Besides this, however, Captain Berry has constantly performed his duties in an excellent manner since May, 1910.

Mr. KING. I have listened with great interest to what the Senator has said, but I am not quite clear from the statement he has made as to the reason why this man was court-martialed, the result of the court-martial, and also I would like to know the reason why if men are court-martialed they should by special act of Congress later on, because they have done their simple duty as all officers do——

Mr. PAGE. Why does the Senator say simple duty? He did a meritorious and worthy act that gave him a right to come back and ask for restoration.

Mr. KING. Conceding that he did more than his duty, that he was heroic and renderd valiant and splendid service, I was wondering as to the propriety by special act of advancing the man in rank in the Army.

Mr. OVERMAN. Why did this come from the Committee on Naval Affairs?

Mr. KING. He is a member of the Marine Corps.

Mr. PAGE. Here is the statement of his commanding officer, Brig. Gen. W. D. Neville, United States Marine Corps, who says:

Major Berry in his younger days got into trouble—

That is a pretty plain statement; he owns up to it—but, unlike a good many officers, he reformed before he got out rather than afterwards. Since his court-martial I think he has been on five or six expeditions, including three to Cuba, two to Santo Domingo, and one to Vera Cruz.

In June, 1917, he went to France in command of the Forty-fifth Company of the Fifth Regiment. He served in the training area back at Baumont, and also in the occupational lines at Verdun.

He goes on and gives a long list—I will not repeat it—of engagements in which this officer participated. He made a mistake; he fell, but he got up, and since 1916 he has been a man of exceptional valor and has rendered service of great value. Should we not sometimes forget little failures in a man's past life?

Mr. KING. I am not referring to the officer's failure at all; I do not care anything about that; I understand that he fought gallantly and bravely in the World War. The point is this: This officer holds a certain rank. If his conduct has been such as to entitle him to promotion, why was he not promoted? Why is it necessary to have a special act of Congress for that purpose? The laws governing promotions, as the Senator from Vermont knows, were very liberal and gave a great deal of discretion to the officers in charge. I think from the record here that Major Berry was a very gallant officer; I do not care anything about his former record; but he went overseas, as I understand the Senator from Vermont, holding a certain rank. He performed fine service there, service which ought to entitle him to promotion. Why was he not promoted in the regular line, in conformity with the regular procedure, as other officers were promoted? Scores of men went into the Army as captains and came out lieutenant colonels, and some of them even generals. Other men went in as second lieutenants and came out as majors. The number of promotions was very great. Thousands and tens of thousands of men were promoted, and properly so; I have no complaint of that at all. I am wondering, however, why this man, because of his valorous deeds, was not promoted; why he has to come to Congress to get a special bill through.

Mr. PAGE. All I can say is that the officer was not promoted, although he ought to have been promoted. Evidently there was a mistake somewhere which we are now trying to rectify.

I can not see anything in the Senator's argument that leads me to believe that this bill should not be passed, because there may have been possibly some reason why this officer was not promoted. I have not investigated that matter and I can not do so now; but one thing is sure, if any officer is entitled to be restored to his proper rank on account of glorious service, I think that Major Berry is one. So I want to see this bill passed unless there is some strong reason why it should not be.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I am very much in sympathy always with officers who perform splendid service, as evidently this officer did; and I should like to see him promoted for his services; but it seems to me that we ought not to pass special bills to promote officers when in the regular line of promotion there are so many opportunities for advancement.

Mr. PAGE. Is not the following provision of the bill a sufficient answer to the Senator's objection:

Provided, That said Benjamin S. Berry shall not by the passage of this act be entitled to any back pay or allowances of any kind: And provided further, That nothing contained in this act shall operate to increase the number of majors in the United States Marine Corps as now authorized by law.

Mr. KING. The question of this officer's compensation does not cut any figure with me at all. If this is a just bill, it ought to be passed; if it is not, it ought not to be passed. I have such respect for my friend from Vermont that I would do anything in the world that I possibly could for him, but I confess that I do not yet see any reason from the explanation which has been made by my good friend for the passage of this measure.

Mr. PAGE. Has the Senator from Utah any objection to the bill being now considered?

Mr. KING. Yes; I have.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, despite the objection of the Senator—because he has objected to this measure, I think, a half dozen times—I should like to have the bill disposed of.

Mr. KING. If the Senator had not asked me the question so categorically, I was going to suggest to him that he ask the Secretary of War why, with the splendid record that this officer concededly made, he was not promoted in the regular, orderly line of promotion and advancement.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I think there possibly may be a reason, and I was wondering why it was not obtained from the department.

Mr. PAGE. The officer is in the Marine Corps; that is why the bill comes from the Naval Affairs Committee.

Mr. TOWNSEND. On account of this officer's previous record, he might not have been in a position where he could have properly received the promotion owing to others ahead of him. I can imagine that some consideration of that kind may have been the cause of his failure to be promoted. From what has been stated here, I agree with the Senator from Vermont that, if this officer did render such excellent service, and if the question of back compensation is not involved, Congress could not, perhaps, do a more meritorious thing than recognize such service and conduct on the part of one of the officers of the United States. I imagine there is a reason why this officer was not promoted, and my guess is that it was something along the line which I have suggested.

Mr. KING. Does not the Senator from Michigan think that we ought to be advised of the reason?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I myself have no objection to that. I appreciate the interest of the Senator from Vermont in this matter, and I know how discouraging it is, when we consider bills on the calendar so seldom, to have postponed from week to week many meritorious measures. I have no objection, however, to the information being obtained which the Senator from Utah desires.

Mr. KING. Let me cut the Gordian knot. If the Senator from Vermont will permit me, I will ask him to let this bill be passed over for a few moments; and then, if he will telephone to the Secretary of the Navy and ascertain the reason this officer was not regularly promoted, I shall be glad to join with him in having the bill taken up before 2 o'clock.

Mr. PAGE. It will take me just one minute to give the reason of the former and also the present Secretary of the Navy. Former Secretary Daniels says:

It is the opinion of the department that this act alone should eliminate and atone for any former mistake which he may have made, and that it would have a good effect upon the service in general if it became known that such deeds of valor as shown by this officer could atone for a former error. Besides this, however, Captain Berry has constantly performed his duties in an excellent manner since May, 1910.

Secretary of the Navy Denby says:

It is the opinion of the department that this act alone should eliminate and atone for any former mistake which he may have made, and that it would have a good effect upon the service in general if it became known that such deeds of valor as shown by this officer could atone for a former error. Besides this, however, Captain Berry has constantly performed his duties in an excellent manner since May, 1910.

In view of the foregoing, the department strongly recommends that the bill (H. R. 2556) be enacted.

We have also the opinion of General Neville.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator say that under the law, in view of the officer's former court-martial, he could not be promoted in regular order and that an act of Congress is required for that purpose?

Mr. PAGE. I should dislike to avail myself of a technicality. I ask the Senator whether, in the case of a just and meritorious private bill, it is usual to go back and make a further investigation? Two Secretaries of the Navy and General Neville have unqualifiedly made their recommendation that this bill shall pass.

Mr. KING. I again ask the Senator—perhaps he did not understand me—if he understands that the reason why this officer was not promoted because of his valorous conduct lies in the fact that he was formerly court-martialed and that an act of Congress is required to relieve him of the effects of the court-martial in order that the promotion may be obtained?

Mr. PAGE. I have not investigated that circumstance, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. KING. If the Senator says that is the reason, I have no objection to the bill; and if the Senator will telephone and discover that that is the reason, I shall join with him in having the bill taken up.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Of course, the Senator from Utah understands that two Secretaries of the Navy have recommended the passage of the bill. If they had the power to promote this man they would not ask for a special act of Congress, but they both recommended the passage of the bill.

Mr. PAGE. Do I understand that the Senator from Utah requests that the bill go over for a few moments, but that he will allow it to be taken up later in the afternoon?

Mr. KING. If the Senator will telephone and secure the information I have indicated, I will join with him in having the bill taken up and passed this afternoon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

Mr. KING subsequently said:

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] has just called my attention to the bill to which I objected a few moments ago, and he has indicated from information which he has just received that the bill does not involve a promotion, but that it merely places the beneficiary at a given point on the list of majors, he already holding that rank. I have no objection to the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LENROOT in the chair). Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 2556) to advance Capt. Benjamin S. Berry to the permanent rank of major.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 1298) to carry out the findings of the Court of Claims in the case of the Fore River Shipbuilding Co. was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. I ask that that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 7589) for the relief of Maj. Ellis B. Miller was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

JOHN SULLIVAN.

The bill (S. 1690) to correct the military record of John Sullivan was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I ask that that bill may go over.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Utah if he has read the report on this bill? It is very brief, and I think he will find it to disclose an exceptionally meritorious case in this instance.

Mr. KING. If the Senator will make an explanation, I shall be glad to withhold my objection.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, the situation in this case is this: This is a bill which I inherited from my predecessor, former Senator Gallinger. It has repeatedly been reported from the committee. The Senator will observe that the bill has been pending in the Senate for almost a year and that it is almost four months since it was reported from the committee. The Senator will also discover from reading the very brief report accompanying the bill that the Secretary of the Navy in the last preceding administration and the Secretary of the Navy in the present administration have likewise reported favorably upon it.

The circumstances are that the man whose record is sought to be corrected by this bill had a charge of desertion against him which he expiated by returning to the service and completing not only the term of his original service in the Navy but serving most acceptably in the Navy for some 20 years thereafter. The man is dead, and the bill is designed simply to correct his record.

So far as any "raid upon the Treasury" may possibly be concerned, under the bill, after much delay, the aged widow of the sailor may perhaps receive the small stipend which would accrue to the widow of an enlisted man. That, however, is not the purpose of the bill. The purpose of the bill is to clear up the record of the man whose fault was completely expiated and who had been assured at the time of his surrender and the completion of his original term of enlistment that that would serve to clear his record. Not only did he surrender and render that service during the period of the Civil War, but by successive reenlistments in the Navy he served for 21 years thereafter. It was 12 years after his retirement before he even applied for a pension, and he did so then simply because he was in such physical condition, that it was necessary for him to receive the stipend.

A pension was paid to him regularly until two weeks before his death, when he was notified that the desertion charge had not been cleared up and he was dropped from the roll. Two weeks after that notice the man died.

This measure has been pending practically ever since; and it seems to me that, after the lapse of years, in view of the man's good record following the offense which he committed during the period of the Civil War, and the long and honorable record which he had in the Navy subsequent to the error, it is merely an act of slight justice to grant the right which this bill seeks to grant, namely, that he "shall be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the naval service of the United States in 1895," which was the termination of his actual service in the Navy, covering a period, in all, of something like 27 years.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I shall not object to this bill, but I want to say that we are confronted with a large number of measures designed to relieve the charge of desertion from men who actually did desert. I have not much sympathy with deserters. As I have said, there are now a large number of similar bills before the committee, as there have been in the past. Of course, the correction of the record is merely the basis for obtaining a pension for the soldier or sailor himself, if he is not dead, or for his widow, if one has survived him. What the Senator says, that this is not a raid on the Treasury, I know he means in good faith, but undoubtedly, within a very few weeks after the passage of this bill, there will be a pension granted.

Mr. OVERMAN. I will inquire if the bill has the usual clause forbidding the payment of back pension?

Mr. MOSES. The Senator will find that provision in the last clause of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LENROOT in the chair). Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which provides that in the administration of the pension laws and the laws conferring rights and privileges upon honorably discharged soldiers, John Sullivan, late chief boatswain's mate, United States Navy, shall be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the naval service of the United States in 1895; but that no pension shall accrue prior to the passage of the act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 548) to place Albert Hamilton on the retired list of the United States Navy was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2718) to provide for leasing of the floating dry dock at the naval station, New Orleans, La., was announced as next in order.

Mr. PAGE. I am requested to ask that that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

REIMBURSEMENT TO NAVAL HOSPITAL PATIENTS.

The bill (S. 2719) to reimburse certain persons for loss of private funds while they were patients at the United States Naval Hospital, naval operating base, Hampton Roads, Va., was announced as next in order, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the persons herein named the following amounts, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated: Joseph Julian Jordan, seaman, second class, $210; William Raney Pickard, apprentice seaman, $25; James Buchanan, apprentice seaman, $40; Orvin Jefferson Bullock, apprentice seaman, $70; William James Thomson, fireman, third class, $95; Raymond Leonard Martin, fireman, third class, $75; William Brewster, fireman, third class, $15; Hiram Bitts Dain, apprentice seaman, $22; Arlous Pate, apprentice seaman, $35; Alvin Curtis, fireman, third class, $30; Irvin Howard Neil, seaman, second class, $40; James Fred Taylor, hospital apprentice, second class, $80; Franklin Elmo Brown, pharmacist's mate, third class, $20; Hamilton Okey Johnston, hospital apprentice, second class, $20; Leo Sherry, hospital apprentice, first class, $20; Raymond Clyde Malouin, hospital apprentice, first class, $70; Canaco Nacional Nallaris, mess attendant, first class, $185; and Birley Thomas, fireman, third class, $75; being the respective amounts of their private funds which the said persons had placed in the safe in the office of the executive officer at the United States Naval Hospital, naval operating base, Hampton Roads, Va., for safe-keeping and which were stolen therefrom on or about April 1, 1921, by some unknown person or persons.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have investigated this bill and I think it should pass, but I appeal to the chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee to have the department report some bill that will safeguard the interests of the Government, and I think the Military Affairs Committee should do the same thing. We are passing these bills almost every calendar day where officers of the Army and Navy intrusted with funds are compelled to come to Congress for redress. The money is stolen from the safe or from some depository by persons who are their subordinates.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, is this bill recommended by the department?

Mr. KING. Yes; it is recommended.

Mr. PAGE. It is. The Senator thinks a general law should be passed to take care of cases of this kind?

Mr. KING. I think there ought to be some law by which persons who are intrusted with the custody of money, who are officers of the Government, should be required to give bond.

Mr. MOSES. May I ask if these officers are bonded in any sense?

Mr. KING. I think not. We never get back anything. We pay the money.

Mr. PAGE. I think that the officers are bonded; but here is a case where the amount of the loss will be asked of the surety company under its bond and it will be turned right back, so that the man who is going to lose this amount will suffer in spite of everything, and he can not afford to lose it. That is the report that comes to us. He is a poor man. Let me read the Senator two or three lines from the report.

Mr. KING. If the officers are bonded, then I am not in favor of making the appropriation. What is the good of requiring them to be bonded if, when there is a theft or an embezzlement, the Government has to pay the amount?

Mr. MOSES. May I suggest to the Senator that we have a statement with respect to the bond and how it is going to affect the situation?

Mr. PAGE. I know, because we looked that matter up, that this poor fellow under the law will have to suffer the loss, because the bonding company will come right back upon him to pay the amount. The Secretary of the Navy makes a statement in regard to that matter which is very brief, and I will read it:

Inasmuch as the persons named in the proposed bill deposited the amounts indicated in the safe pursuant to instructions which had the approval of the department, and the said amounts disappeared through no fault or act of their own, it is felt that the Government, in the custody of whose agent the funds were placed for safekeeping, should make reimbursement to these persons in the amounts stated, with the view of itself being later reimbursed in case said funds or any portion thereof are recovered. While there is no legal obligation on the part of the Government to make such reimbursement, it is nevertheless considered that under the circumstances and in justice to these men such reimbursement should be made.

It is therefore recommended that the proposed draft of bill hereto attached be enacted into law.

I do not think there is any question but that there is a bonding process that takes care of that matter; but here is a case where it is a fact that a party who is innocent will be compelled to suffer.

Mr. MOSES. Furthermore, if I understood the Senator, every possible safeguard had been made to take care of this money. The money had been put into a safe or in some perfectly secure place.

Mr. PAGE. Certainly; and the department reports that there has been no possible laches or fault on the part of this party who had the custody of the money.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. KING. I do not object, as I stated. The explanation, as I understand the Senator, simply means that these patients deposited their money in the safe, leaving it with some officer of the Government——

Mr. PAGE. It was deposited by an officer of the Government.

Mr. KING. And it was stolen from the safe. There is nothing in the report to indicate that the officer was bonded. What I was stating was that the Government ought to require these officers who take money to give bond, and if the money is stolen the Government ought to look to the officer and the surety company for payment.

Mr. MOSES. Let me ask the Senator from Vermont, further, whether there is anything in the report to indicate what steps were taken to discover the culprit or to secure restitution of the amount?

Mr. PAGE. It appeared before our committee that every step was taken to safeguard the Government, and it is an unfortunate condition that makes it finally come back to this man to pay it.

Mr. MOSES. I understood the Senator to read from the report a statement that these funds were put into a safe.

Mr. PAGE. Yes; by direction of the officer.

Mr. MOSES. That safe must have been in the office of some officer of the hospital, to wit, an officer of the Government. The money was stolen from the safe. What steps were taken to discover who had access to the safe, who could have stolen the money, who was the culprit, and whether from the culprit restitution could have been had? What was done about this burglary, theft, or whatever the offense was?

Mr. PAGE. Here is the plain statement. It is very brief:

This safe was entered some time between 4.30 p. m., April 1, 1921, and 8.30 a. m., April 2, 1921, and the cash on deposit, to the amount of $1,127, including the amounts indicated in the proposed bill, was stolen. A board of investigation was immediately convened on April 2, 1921, by order of the commandant, naval operating base, Hampton Roads, Va., to inquire into the alleged theft. After careful investigation the board reported that the safe was found open about 8.30 a. m., April 2, 1921, that the combination was unlocked, and the safe entered by some person or persons unknown, and that the responsibility for the theft can not be definitely fixed. No further information has been received up to the present time as to the identity of the person or persons committing the alleged theft.

Mr. MOSES. There is nothing there to indicate that the combination was set and the safe locked at 4.30 o'clock on the afternoon of April 2. That is a mere statement that they found the combination open and the safe available to anybody who chose to open the door and take out the money. From that record I could not possibly deduce that the proper steps were taken. Certainly no one could deduce that effective steps were taken to fix the responsibility for this theft.

Mr. PAGE. I do not believe we have any safes that burglars can not get into; and if the Government is to hold men responsible, it seems to me that if a fair investigation shows them free from responsibility morally, and if the Secretary of the Navy recommends, as he does here, that reimbursement be made we ought to act in accordance with that recommendation.

Mr. MOSES. Legislation of this character simply sets a premium upon carelessness.

Mr. KING. Exactly.

Mr. PAGE. I do not think so in this case.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, the situation was that these were patients at the hospital. Under the regulations they had to deposit any cash they had with this officer. They had to do it. It was a requirement. They did deposit these funds with this officer, and he put them in the safe. Somebody opened the safe and stole the money. The men who are patients at the hospital ought not to lose the money. They did what the regulations required them to do, and the board which investigated the matter found that the safe had been opened and robbed and the money taken away.

Mr. MOSES. And that nobody was responsible?

Mr. FLETCHER. They do not fix the responsibility. The officer who was the agent of the Government had these funds in his hands. The men who put them there certainly ought not to suffer by reason of the robbery of the safe where they were deposited.

Mr. MOSES. No; but the Senator misses the point of my inquiry. The officer who received these funds from the patients, undoubtedly under a regulation of the hospital, probably by general regulation of the department, was a bonded officer. Of course, a premium had to be paid for his bond, and I suppose the bonding company is responsible for this loss. Why should the loss which the bonding company will have to meet, and for which they received their premium, now be transferred to the Treasury of the United States?

Mr. FLETCHER. Nothing is said in the report about his being a bonded officer, whether they went on his bond or not, or whether the bond was collectible or not.

Mr. MOSES. But the Senator from Vermont just said he was a bonded officer and that under the bond this officer would have to pay the amount himself, probably through some arrangement with the bonding company, which has not yet been disclosed.

Mr. FLETCHER. The officer himself.

Mr. PAGE. May I ask the Senator from New Hampshire whether it is not true that this money was in the hands of this official, and by the consent and direction of the officials above him the money was placed in the identical safe where it was placed, which was supposed to be a secure safe, and between 4.30 o'clock in the afternoon and 8 o'clock the next morning the burglars went in and took the money?

Mr. MOSES. That is not the testimony which the Senator read. The testimony is not that the safe was blown or that violence was employed in getting at it. In the morning they found the combination unset, so that anybody could open the door. Who was the bonded officer to whom the Senator refers?

Mr. PAGE. It does not appear in the report. I simply have the report from the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. MOSES. In other words, who is the real beneficiary of this legislation?

Mr. PAGE. The man who had the funds on deposit there.

Mr. MOSES. That is to say, the patients?

Mr. PAGE. No; the officer in charge of the money.

Mr. MOSES. He being a bonded officer, as I understood the Senator to say.

Mr. PAGE. I have not the facts here; but my impression is that it so turns out that he being a bonded officer the bonding company can come back and make the person charged with the money pay the amount; so that it virtually comes out of a man who should not suffer.

Mr. MOSES. In other words, bonds are given to the public, and premiums are paid for the bonds, and the bonds are no good? Is that it?

Mr. PAGE. If the bonds are good, they are so good that when they are paid by the bonding company this man who had the money has to suffer.

Mr. MOSES. The bonding company takes a premium for the bond, and then tries to compel the man who was bonded to reimburse it; and, failing that, to have the Treasury reimburse it.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, if I read this bill correctly, this is not a bill for the purpose of reimbursing some officer of the Government. This is a bill for the purpose of paying directly these patients who were in the hospital, who deposited their money in the Government depositary. Nothing is said here about any officer, if I am reading the correct bill; and I find no report with this bill.

Mr. KING. If the Senator will permit me, the Senator is absolutely correct there. These patients deposited their money in a safe, and the money was stolen from the safe. The officer has not paid them. Whether he was bonded or not, I am not able to state. I think the Government ought to pay these men who lost their money; but I think it is a mistaken policy, and wrong, for the Government to become a guarantor of all bailments that may be made by those who come into the hospitals, and so on.

The Senator knows that every calendar day, and at various other times, we are called upon to pay for the losses in post offices. Somebody has burglarized the safe, and the postmaster comes here, and we appropriate and pay him; and in the cantonments and in the various agencies of the Government where money is embezzled or stolen we are frequently called upon to make reimbursement. It has gotten now so that if anybody loses money by reason of his own carelessness he feels that Congress will make the appropriation. We are liberal. Such persons think: "If we go to Congress, we can be reimbursed." If these Government officials who have charge of money knew that they would be held personally responsible, and that Congress would not make the appropriation, greater care would be taken, greater vigilance would be observed, the money would not be stolen or embezzled, and Congress would not be called upon to appropriate thousands of dollars to reimburse individuals who have suffered by reason of the peculations and the wrongs of Government officials or third persons. My suggestion is that we ought to compel them to be bonded, and we ought to restrict the authority of Government officials to become bailees for everybody that may come anywhere around them.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, in looking over this bill I think the Senator from Florida is exactly correct. Here are some patients that were sent down to this hospital, and one of the regulations of the hospital is that their money shall be deposited. They take their money and put it into the safe they have there for safe-keeping. I do not think the Government is legally bound to refund this money. I do not think any officer of the Government was legally bound to pay it, but the fact is that the money was deposited under a regulation of the hospital, and these men lost it through a burglary. The proposition now clearly before the Senate is, Will the Senate permit or authorize the payment of the money to these poor men, these patients, who had placed their trust in the Government safe at that hospital because they had to do it, and whose money was stolen, having had no protection at all?

Mr. PAGE. It is stated in the letter of the Secretary of the Navy that "the persons who are named in the proposed bill deposited the amounts indicated in the safe pursuant to instructions." So they did it under orders.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, I have listened to the discussion about the pending bill, and I thoroughly agree with the remarks to the effect that the Government should pay. I think the Government ought to carry the responsibility and pay. But that was only incidental to what I really wanted to say.

This morning I offered a resolution——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CARAWAY. I was recognized, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment. The Senaor from Arkansas is recognized for five minutes.

DISCHARGE OF EX-SERVICE MEN FROM CIVIL SERVICE.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, this morning I offered a resolution calling upon the President to tell us how many former sailors and soldiers with honorable discharges who are within the classified service had been dismissed, demoted, or their salaries lowered. I did that because we have a statute which provides that—

In the event of reductions being made in the forces in any of the executive departments, no honorably discharged soldier or sailor whose record in said department is rated good shall be discharged or dropped or reduced in rank or salary: And provided further, That any person knowingly violating the provisions of this section shall be summarily removed from office, and may also, upon conviction thereof, be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000 or by imprisonment for not more than one year.

Quite a number of soldiers and sailors with honorable discharges who were within the classified service have been dismissed from the service without any explanation. Three of them were in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. There were many of them in the navy yard. There were some of them in the Treasury Department, and the departments are dismissing soldiers and sailors with honorable discharges whose records are good, and we want to know why.

There is a cry all over this country now that there is no respect for the law. How can we complain when some negro becomes a bootlegger if the highest executive officer in the land and Cabinet officers shall disregard the law and deprive men of their rights? You can not build up a respect for law and at the same time let those who are charged with the duty of enforcing it ignore it. The law is as binding upon the President as upon the humblest citizen in the land. It is within the power of the Republican majority to smother these resolutions, as I presume they are going to do. The Post said, when the other two resolutions went to the Committee on Civil Service, that the chairman of the committee was a friend of the administration, and therefore that they were dead. That may be. I am not concerned, I want to repeat, with the politics of the men who have been discharged. I want only to see justice done. I hate injustice; I hate tyranny; I dislike any man who, because he is clothed with a little brief authority, ignores the rights of those who are helpless to strike back.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. CARAWAY. I yield.

Mr. STERLING. I hope the Senator from Arkansas will possess his soul in patience over this matter of the reference of those resolutions to the Committee on Civil Service. The Committee on Civil Service, or the members thereof, Mr. President, will possess their souls in patience at the same time.

Mr. CARAWAY. I do not want to yield all my time.

Mr. STERLING. They can not do two jobs of work at the same time.

Mr. CARAWAY. I am conscious of that.

Mr. STERLING. And in due time the resolutions referred to the committee will be considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator declines to yield further.

Mr. CARAWAY. I do not want to be discourteous to the Senator. I am simply saying that that is what the public press says. I do not say it is true, but that is the impression which exists among the people, that the resolutions are dead. I hope the Senator will report them out.

Mr. STERLING. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. CARAWAY. Certainly.

Mr. STERLING. I am not responsible for what the public press says.

Mr. CARAWAY. I am conscious of that.

Mr. STERLING. On the contrary, everything I have said has indicated just the opposite of what the Senator states the public press has said.

Mr. CARAWAY. I do not yield any further. I am conscious of that, and I am not criticizing the Senator. I think he is too quick to suspect that somebody is criticizing him. Whatever the Senator's attitude is, I do not believe the resolutions will be reported out. I believe that hidden behind the power that goes with the Executive, they are going to ignore the people's rights, and are going to trample upon them.

But there is a court of appeal, above Presidents and above Cabinets, to which court these people who have had their characters blackened, and who have been denied the right to make an honest living, can appeal. These women who were discharged can appeal to that court. These ex-service men, who went out when Congress declared that a state of war existed between this country and Germany, who laid down their civil employments and imperiled their lives and their futures to save this country, now have their rights taken from them by the Executive and the Cabinet, and they have an appeal. It lies beyond this administration; it lies in the common sense and fairness and justice of the American people, and I am confident, sir, despite all that may happen here, despite what the Senate may do, that the American people are going to hear that appeal, and do justice by these men and these women. I do not care whether they vote the Republican ticket or the Democratic ticket; they have a right to look to the Executive and to the Congress of the United States for justice, and when it is denied them, there is somebody, somewhere, who is going to rebuke those who sit in high places and ignore the rights of those in humbler stations.

REIMBURSEMENT TO NAVAL HOSPITAL PATIENTS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2719) to reimburse certain persons for loss of private funds while they were patients at the United States naval hospital, naval operating base, Hampton Roads, Va.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MAJ. ELLIS B. MILLER.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate return to the consideration of House bill 7589. I have conferred with the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] in regard to it, and he will find in the back of the report of the committee a complete statement of all the details and circumstances of this case.

Mr. KING. Will not the Senator make a very brief statement?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I will do so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington asks that the Senate return to the consideration of House bill 7589. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7589) for the relief of Maj. Ellis B. Miller, and it was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, commission Ellis B. Miller as a lieutenant colonel in the United States Marine Corps as of date of June 4, 1920: Provided, That the said Ellis B. Miller shall take rank on the lineal list of lieutenant colonels in the United States Marine Corps next after James K. Tracy, the officer who immediately preceded him on the list of first lieutenants on May 13, 1908: Provided further, That the said Ellis B. Miller shall establish to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Navy, by examination pursuant to law, his physical, mental, moral, and professional fitness to perform the duties of a lieutenant colonel in the United States Marine Corps: And provided further, That the said Ellis B. Miller shall not by the passage of this act be entitled to any back pay or allowances of any kind: And provided further, That nothing contained in this act shall operate to increase the number of lieutenant colonels in the United States Marine Corps as now authorized by law.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The bill is recommended by the Secretary of the Navy and recommended very strongly by General Lejeune, the General Commandant of the Marine Corps. It is to relieve this officer from the effects of an accidental circumstance for which he was not responsible in any way at all.

Years ago, when Major Miller was called up with his class for examination for promotion in the Philippine Islands, he was examined under an old order regulating those examinations, which had been issued in 1906. It so happened that he was the last on the list of officers coming up for examination.

In the meantime, in September, 1908, a new order, making new regulations for these examinations, had been issued, but it did not reach the Philippine Islands until February, and when the reports were made, all the officers who had been examined, and whose examinations were the same in all respects, so far as approvals were concerned, were passed, and the reports of the board of examiners was approved by the department, except as to this officer. Being the last on the list, his report came in late, and the department ruled that the examination was not valid, because it should have been under the new order; but the new order had not reached the Philippine Islands at that time.

Subsequently he was reexamined, passed the examination, and qualified in every way, and the department recommends that this bill be passed to relieve him from the consequences of that accidental circumstance.

Mr. KING. If he had been examined at that time, would he have measured up to the standards required?

Mr. POINDEXTER. He would have. The statement I have just referred to is specifically to that effect.

Mr. KING. Has his service been that of an honorable officer since then?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Entirely so. Otherwise, I would not be urging the passage of the bill.

Mr. KING. I have no objection to it.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 140) for the relief of Peter Shell was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2498) to correct the military record of Alonzo C. Shekell was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

WORLD WAR FOREIGN DEBT COMMISSION.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, the hour is approaching at which, by special order, the Senate is to take up the nominations of Senator SMOOT and Representative BURTON. On Friday I suggested the propriety of considering these nominations in open executive session. An objection was interposed at that time, as I understood, by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS], with a view to a further consideration of the subject. Accordingly, I renew the request now for unanimous consent that the matter be considered in open executive session.

AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The READING CLERK. A bill (H. R. 10730) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes.

Mr. KELLOGG. I offer an amendment to the bill, which I ask may be printed and lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. McNARY. As the unfinished business is now before the Senate, I think, in view of the notice given by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], I should ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. MOSES. Is that necessary? A motion to go into executive session is privileged and it does not require that the unfinished business shall be laid aside.

Mr. LODGE. The motion is privileged, of course.

Mr. McNARY. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana has the floor.

WORLD WAR FOREIGN DEBT COMMISSION.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I said at that time and I repeat now, because there may be Senators here who were not present then, that so far as I am advised there is no disposition upon the part of any Senator to question in any way whatever either the personal character or the fitness of either of the gentlemen named. The questions to be considered are merely the question of the eligibility of these gentlemen under the Constitution and the propriety of naming Members of Congress to positions of this character. In view of that condition, I can see no reason whatever for not having an open discussion of the matters at issue.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, this is clearly executive business under the rules respecting nominations. I think, if the Senator desires to make a motion to have the matter considered in open executive session, it should be made after we have gone into secret executive session, where alone it is in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understood the Senator from Montana to be presenting a unanimous-consent request. Is the Chair correct?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That is correct.

Mr. LODGE. I know there is nothing of a personal character in this question, but I have always thought and I think now it is a great mistake to alter or change in any way the rule in regard to the consideration of nominations.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. LODGE. I think what I have to say can be said in a moment.

Mr. NORRIS. All right; I will wait.

Mr. LODGE. No; I have no desire to cut the Senator off. I yield to him.

Mr. NORRIS. I can say what I have to say at any time, but I suggest to the Senator from Montana that I am one of the members of the Committee on the Judiciary who joined with the Senator from Montana in reaching the conclusion that as a matter of law Senator SMOOT and Representative BURTON are disqualified. I desire to say, however, that it seems to me only fair to those who have reached that conclusion that their attitude should not be misunderstood. It is, as I look at it, purely a question of constitutional law. There is no one, so far as I know, who doubts the ability or fitness of either one of these gentlemen to fill the place to which they were appointed by the President. I do not desire to be put in the attitude of voting against them.

I suggest to the Senator from Montana, unless the nominations are considered in open executive session, which looks doubtful now, that he present at the proper time a resolution embodying the legal proposition, and let us vote on that. When that is voted down, if it is voted down, then all those who voted for it would be at liberty to vote for the confirmation of the two appointees.

I do not want to be put in the attitude of voting against them, because I have nothing on earth against them and I frankly admit their qualifications for the particular place. We will be misunderstood, however, unless something of that kind is done. I think the Senator from Montana could easily make the record. If it is sustained on that, then the matter is ended. If he is not sustained, as a matter of form we could all vote for the confirmation.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, it seems to me that whatever arrangements are made ought to be made after we go into executive session. I see no reason for debating this purely legal question before others than Members of the Senate, because the Senate must pass upon the question, and it is a constitutional inquiry that is proposed.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I do not believe in discussing nominations in open session. I am in favor of keeping within the rule, and I also think that we should probably save a great deal of time by discussing the question in secret executive session. If any Senator should desire to print his speech made in executive session, that could be done. That has been done before in one or two cases, and it could be arranged in this case. So a Senator's argument might be printed in the RECORD. It was done in the case of former Senator Morgan on the Panama Canal question.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I have no desire to avail myself of that privilege, particularly because my views have been expressed in the open Senate as well as in my report which I submitted to the committee.

If the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] will give me his attention for a moment, I desire to say that there is involved in the question before us rather more than the naked proposition of law. There was made a part of the report which I submitted to the Committee on the Judiciary the brief speech of former Senator Hoar, made in the year 1903, as my recollection now serves me, which was addressed rather to the propriety of filling places of this character from Members of Congress than to the question of the eligibility of Members of Congress under the Constitution for positions of that kind.

The same subject was commented upon by another distinguished son of Massachusetts, ex-Governor McCall, in a recent number of the Atlantic Monthly. Senator Hoar said, when the subject was before the Senate for consideration on an earlier occasion, I think in the year 1898, that there was practical unanimity among the Members of the Senate that whatever might be the inhibition of the Constitution, the practice was one which ought not to be followed. So that would be a consideration aside from the mere question which would be determined by a resolution such as is suggested by the Senator from Nebraska.

I may say in this connection that I had thought of the propriety of getting a formal declaration from the Senate on the question of eligibility, but that would exclude the other consideration to which I have adverted, which it seems to me is too important, in view of the consideration that it has had, to be entirely ignored in connection with these important nominations.

Mr. LODGE. If we are going to discuss any question of constitutionality or the propriety of the President's action, both on the ground of precedent and on general grounds, to save the time of the Senate I object to the request of the Senator from Montana.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I inquire whether the report of the committee has been made public or whether there is any objection to the report being made public?

Mr. LODGE. That we can determine when we get into executive session.

Mr. CUMMINS. The reports of the committee have been printed and, I think, copies are in the possession of all Senators, so far as I know, or accessible at least to all Senators.

Mr. FLETCHER. It is a confidential print, is it not?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No.

Mr. CUMMINS. The reports were submitted in executive session, as I remember it.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I have never understood that there was any character of secrecy attached to any of them.

Mr. CUMMINS. Nor did I; and they have been in the hands of the Senate for two or three weeks.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 3 hours and 10 minutes the Senate (at 5 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) took a recess in executive session until to-morrow, Tuesday, April 11, 1922, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate April 10, 1922.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, April 10, 1922.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon, and was called to order by the Speaker.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Lord our God, we bless Thee for the manifestation of Thyself made in the gladness of the spring air, and for the brightness of this beautiful day that lures us with sweet persuasion to offer Thee our grateful praise. These are the affirmations of our Heavenly Father, and may there be a festival of happiness in all our breasts. O dwell among men; reign on the throne of conscience. Bless our country until it blooms and bursts into the fruits of prosperity and contentment. Endow us with the dominion of mind that suffers itself to wait, withstand, bear and forbear, and we beseech Thee that thus may wisdom's work be made manifest. In Thy holy name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, April 8, 1922, was read and approved.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTIONS SIGNED.

Mr. RICKETTS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled joint resolutions of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. J. Res. 7. Joint resolution to amend section 2 of the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution to authorize the operation of Government-owned radio stations for the use of the general public, and for other purposes," approved June 5, 1920; and

H. J. Res. 249. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to donate and grant certain buildings in Alaska to the Woman's Home Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

DEPARTMENTS OF STATE AND JUSTICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. The unfinished business is the bill making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes, on which the previous question was ordered on the bill and amendments to final passage. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put the amendments in gross.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I demand a separate vote on the amendment, on page 32, line 22.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky demands a separate vote on the amendment referred to. Does any gentleman desire a separate vote on any other amendment? If not, the Chair will put the remainder of the amendments in gross. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment on which a separate vote is demanded by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON].

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of line 22, page 32, add as follows: "Provided, however, That no part of the money appropriated by this act shall be spent in the prosecution of any organization or individual for entering into any combination or agreement having in view the increasing of wages, shortening of hours, or bettering the conditions of labor, or for any act done in furtherance thereof not in itself unlawful: Provided further, That no part of the money appropriated by this act shall be expended for the prosecution of producers of farm products and associations of farmers who cooperate and organize in an effort to and for the purpose to obtain and maintain a fair and reasonable price for their products."

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Let us divide on the vote.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. It is clear that there is no quorum present. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON] moves a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Ansorge	Chindblom	Drewry	Funk
Anthony	Christopherson	Dunn	Gahn
Bacharach	Clark, Fla.	Dupré	Goldsborough
Blakeney	Codd	Edmonds	Gorman

Knight	O'Brien	Sanders, Ind.	Watson
Kreider	O'Connor	Schall	Williams
Kunz	Olpp	Shelton	Wilson
Lampert	Perkins	Slemp	Wood, Ind.
Langley	Petersen	Snyder

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and fifteen Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves to dispense with further proceedings under the call. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will open the doors. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON].

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the "ayes" seemed to have it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I demand a division.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky demands a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 102, noes 56.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky demands the yeas and nays. As many as favor this vote by the yeas and nays will rise and stand until they are counted. [After counting.] Forty-four gentlemen have risen, not a sufficient number. The yeas and nays are refused.

Mr. NOLAN. Has the Speaker ruled that 44 was not a sufficient number? What did the last vote show?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is told that 54 are required.

Mr. NOLAN. One-fifth of those present?

The SPEAKER. Two hundred and thirteen.

Mr. NOLAN. We had a division of the House, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The rule is one-fifth of those present.

Mr. NOLAN. The division on this particular vote showed less than 200 present.

The SPEAKER. That does not show how many were present.

Mr. NOLAN. Let us take the other side, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count the other side. [After counting.] The Chair has already counted over 200. The yeas and nays are refused. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HUSTED, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the naval appropriation bill (H. R. 11228), and pending that motion, Mr. Speaker, I would like to secure an agreement about the time for general debate.

The SPEAKER. Pending his motion, the gentleman from Michigan desires to come to an agreement about the time for general debate.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. What suggestion has the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] to make about the time for general debate?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I informed the gentleman from Michigan that because of the number of requests I have had from this side of the House I hope he will be most liberal in fixing the time for general debate. This is the last appropriation bill to be reported, and gentlemen on this side of the House desire to occupy some time. As a matter of fact, the time on which the gentleman from Michigan and I have agreed informally will be entirely satisfactory to me.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Speaker, is it not a fact that both the gentlemen who now occupy the floor are in favor of the bill? It does not seem fair for them to agree between themselves about the time for the general debate.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I will say to my good friend from Illinois that it is not my purpose to inquire of anybody as to whether he favors or opposes the bill. I shall be very glad, as far as I am concerned—and I am sure the same is true of the gentleman from South Carolina—to yield indiscriminately to Members of the House, regardless of their position on the bill, and it is our purpose to be exceedingly generous in general debate. I was about to suggest 2 days' general debate, or 12 hours altogether.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Speaker, minority views have been filed in relation to this bill. I believe there is a sharp division in the House upon the questions involved, and it seems to me that there should be a division on the part of the honorable gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY] of half of his time, one-half of his time, making one-quarter of the total time to go to Members who have minority views. I think I shall insist upon that disposition of the time if it is possible for me to do so.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that on appropriation bills, where, as a rule, everybody is in favor of the bill, but there are divisions as to certain amendments and provisions of the bill, it is not customary to divide the time according to whether a man is for or against the bill, but it is customary to recognize the gentleman in charge of the bill and the ranking member of the committee on the other side of the House.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I assure the gentleman from Illinois that he will not have any cause to complain. I am certain that he will be amply taken care of, and any other Members who desire to oppose the bill will be generously treated.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] suggested that he had many requests for time on that side. It is barely possible that all the time may have been promised already on both sides of the House. We ought to know something about the division of the time as between those who are for and against the bill.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I will say to the gentleman that of the requests for time received by me I intend to yield the overwhelming majority of the time to gentlemen who have advised me that they are opposed to the bill. So far as I know, everybody over here who is opposed to the bill is going to speak.

Mr. BRITTEN. I am sure the gentleman will be fair, but approximately how much time has been requested of the gentleman now?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Oh, about two weeks. [Laughter.]

Mr. BRITTEN. Where do those of us come in who have not yet requested time?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I do not know about gentlemen on that side of the House. I am going to do my best to take care of gentlemen on this side.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. Is there a request for unanimous consent pending?

The SPEAKER. No definite request has been made yet. Gentlemen are trying to arrange it.

Mr. GALLIVAN. There is no request for unanimous consent pending?

The SPEAKER. No.

Mr. GALLIVAN. May I ask what is the regular order?

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the attempt to agree upon time.

Mr. COCKRAN. Mr. Speaker, would it not be possible to reconcile all these conflicting ideas by letting the House itself determine when it will proceed to vote? I think there will be no difficulty about moving the previous question if the debate should ever be allowed to fall into what might be called ineptitude. I ask the gentleman from Michigan and the gentleman from South Carolina to let the debate proceed in the discretion of the House.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I have yet to learn how the previous question can be moved in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. COCKRAN. You can always move to close debate and to rise. I am glad that even at this late day I am able to inform the gentleman from Ohio of something that I supposed his previous parliamentary experience had already informed him.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman spoke about moving the previous question in Committee of the Whole, which was a novelty to me.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I feel quite sure that two days will be sufficient time so that everybody who desires to be heard on the bill can be heard.

Mr. COCKRAN. You can move to close debate. Why not let it go on?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I ask unanimous consent that general debate be confined to the bill.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. No. I ask unanimous consent that the time for general debate be two days, but not less than 12 hours altogether, and that the time be equally divided between the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] and myself.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would suggest that those two requests might be incompatible—two days, but not less than 12 hours.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. In case the two days should be taken up in roll calls or something of that kind——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that the general debate be limited to 12 hours.

Mr. TINKHAM. Reserving the right to object, I shall object——

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Speaker, I did not say that I objected. I was about to say that, reserving the right to object, I would object unless the honorable Representative from Michigan was willing to divide his time with those holding minority views.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I could not very well do that, because the gentleman is interested in one proposition alone. The bill carries hundreds of propositions. I shall be perfectly fair and perfectly generous with the gentleman. I have him down here on my list for all the time he has asked for, and if he wants more time, being a prominent Member of the House, I shall be glad to accommodate him.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Reserving the right to object, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I will.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I take it that in addition to being generous in time for general debate, the gentleman will also apply that to the debate under the five-minute rule.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. The gentleman is right. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say also, as suggested by the gentleman from Ohio, that when that paragraph in the bill is reached which relates to the personnel under the five-minute rule, I intend to be very generous with reference to debate upon that particular proposition. So there can be no possible ground for complaint anywhere. [Applause.] That ought to satisfy my distinguished friend from Massachusetts.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Speaker, from observations I have made, and I suppose from observations the gentleman from Michigan has made, it is evident that the great majority of the Members of the House are for the minority report on this bill. [Laughter.] That being true, of course they are entitled to recognition in time.

Mr. MANN. What do you want to debate it for, if that is true?

Mr. BRITTEN. I am willing to vote now.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that the debate on this bill be limited to 12 hours, one half to be controlled by himself and the other half by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES]. Is there objection?

Mr. TINKHAM. I object.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 11228, making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, pending that, would not the gentleman from Michigan make the request now that the time for general debate be controlled by himself and the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES]? It is in the interest of orderly procedure that that be done. Both gentlemen have promised to be entirely fair, and I know they will be fair, and that request will not limit the time for general debate.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I make that request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that the time for general debate be equally divided, one half to be controlled by him and the other half by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES]. Is there objection?

Mr. TINKHAM. I object.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Michigan that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 11228, the naval appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. TOWNER in the chair.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I should like to proceed for a little while without interruption, with the understanding that I will be very generous in yielding later on to anyone that desires information. This bill which the committee has reported carries a total of $233,247,008. It is $192,000,000, in round numbers, below the estimates submitted by the Bureau of the Budget. In that connection, however, I ought to say that the estimates submitted by the Bureau of the Budget were submitted before the Conference on the Limitation of Armaments. The bill carries $180,000,000 less than the current law. I want to take the time at this point to discuss how these enormous reductions have been brought about.

In the first place, it has been done in great part through the agreements reached by the Conference on the Limitation of Armament. That conference agreed to discontinue the building of the great 1916 program, so far as capital ships were concerned, with the exception of two ships which are to be finished. That means that 13 of the 16 capital ships are not to be completed. [Applause.] It also provides that all of the battleships of the predreadnought class should be scrapped. There are 15 of these vessels. So it provides for the discontinuance of 13 capital ships under construction, and for the elimination from the Navy of 15 other capital ships.

Last year we included in the bill, as you will recall, the sum of $90,000,000 for going forward with the building program. This bill carries no new appropriation for the continuation of the building program. [Applause.] There are a number of ships to be finished—10 scout cruisers, some submarines, and a few destroyers, but at the present time there is a balance of $71,000,000 to the credit of the construction fund. That sum will be sufficient to carry on the work on these ships that are to be completed for the balance of this year and also for next year. So that there is a cutting out at one stroke of $90,000,000 from the bill of last year on account of new construction. In addition to that saving of course there would be a heavy saving resulting from the destruction of the old ships. Those of this class that were kept in commission last year will no longer be in commission. The repairs and upkeep for them need not be provided for. There remains 18 capital ships in the Navy and some 900 other vessels, some of great military value and others practically worthless as instruments of defense.

The committee commenced its work by making an analysis of the ships of the Navy which we had left after the conference had reached these splendid agreements. We assumed, of course, that there should be maintained an 18-battleship fleet. We have never proceeded upon any other theory. [Applause.] An 18-battleship fleet, with all the necessary destroyers, submarines, tenders, oilers, tankers—everything that should go with them to make the fleet effective, a complete and rounded out fleet—and upon the proposition as to what it takes to make an 18-battleship fleet well rounded out and complete, the committee and the Navy Department are in accord. And I might say that that is about the only place I fear that we are in full accord. [Laughter.]

On that proposition we find ourselves in agreement. We took the Paymaster General's report of last year, which includes the list of all the vessels in the Navy, ship by ship, class by class, and went over them with the Navy Department. We went through the entire list from top to bottom and they struck out of their own accord such ships as in their judgment they did not desire to keep in commission. When that was done those that were not stricken off were put into a clean list, with all of the riffraff and the rubbish taken out, and that is the list which the committee has printed in its report. I do not know in my experience here of nine years when any committee before ever took such care to advise the House so particularly as this committee has done in printing in its report the names and the types of the ships which form the basis of this appropriation, and as I go forward I would like to have you have before you the report of the committee. There you will find the complete list of 18 capital ships and the name and type of ship which in the judgment of the Navy Department would give us the 18 capital-ship fleet, complete and fully rounded out, a full compliance with the treaty.

During the war we had need for a large number of craft of small tonnage. We went out and picked up pretty nearly everything that would float in order to use it to hunt submarines and for our coast protection. The Navy was increased in number of ships from something like 325 to 900, and a large part of that increase represents floating riffraff, yachts, tugs, subchasers, Eagle boats, and the other small craft, which, no matter how many men are put on them, or how many were in commission, would not add a featherweight to the defense of the country. [Applause.] It was the belief of the committee that the American people do not desire to spend tens of millions of dollars upon the upkeep of ships which do not contribute to American security. [Applause.] After having agreed upon the list of ships—and do not get away from that, because there is no dispute about what it takes to make up this 18-battleship fleet—then the question naturally arose as to how many men it would take to properly man them. Those of you who have been in Congress any length of time probably have had your attention called to the fact a number of times that no two officers of the Navy agree as to how many men it takes to man a ship. Those upon the Naval Committee particularly will recall that time after time officers of the Navy have come before the committee, and no two of them have agreed upon the number of men necessary for the ships. Sometimes that disagreement has reached as high as a hundred men on a ship.

Mr. BUTLER. That is the difference?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. Oh, yes; and as high as 400 men at times.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. This difference of opinion comes about in a good many ways. Suppose, for instance, you were called upon to determine the number of men necessary for a battleship, and some one said that it would take 100 men with spy glasses, as we had during the war, to watch for submarines. Should those hundred men be carried in peace time as the regular complement of the ship? Some naval officer might think them necessary and include them, but what person having anything to do with the national pursestrings would permit the expenditure of the money necessary to carry 100 men on a battleship for the purpose of watching for submarines in time of peace? [Applause.] And so, having in mind the diversity of opinion in the Navy itself as to how many men it takes to man a ship, the committee decided that the best way to find out how many it takes was to find out how many these fine, efficient officers of the Navy are carrying on these identical ships to-day, and therefore we proceeded to find that out. After having called the roll of all the ships that the Navy Department desires to keep in full commission and placing upon each ship the full number now being carried, the total number fell 2,000 short of the number that we have provided under this bill for the Navy afloat. [Applause.]

Why should we give more? Are the American people in such fine financial situation that we can pile up men on ships when the officers themselves, with tens of thousands of men at their disposal, do not put them on? We did not think so. Before the war we had 84 destroyers, and we now have 301. Over 200 of these destroyers were built for convoy purposes during the war and are not required to make a well-rounded fleet. The testimony of all of the naval officers during the time that I have been in Congress has been that we ought to have four destroyers for each battleship. Four times 18 would be 72. We allow in this bill all that the Navy Department asked to be kept in full commission—103. We allowed 93 men on board of each one, whereas they are now carrying but 87. How can they complain? They have only 65 destroyers in full commission now and have 236 destroyers in half commission, with 12,000 men on board those in half commission. Do you have the slightest idea in the world that if they had not enough men on the great capital ships, which they and everyone else recognize to be the very center and core of the Navy, they would not have gone to their surplus destroyers and taken off enough men to fill up the complements of the fighting ships, which they desired to keep in full commission?

Not only did they have those 12,000 men on the destroyers in reserve, but they also had on what is called the district craft some 3,352 men—3,352 men on yachts, motor boats, small stuff for district purposes, that we never had before the war. They created these district organizations during the war, dividing the coast up into districts, maintaining separate headquarters for these various districts, and then supplied the officers of those headquarters with these various craft, and upon such craft there were, as I say, 3,352 men. Then on odds and ends, which they scarcely know the names of—it took us days to find out what they were—small boats, some with four or five men on board, running up and down the coast. They had on board these 3,891 men more. That makes a total of 19,181 men on the surplus destroyers, on vessels most of which they intend to put out of commission next year, and on odds and ends of ships which are utterly and absolutely of no value as a means of defense to the country. Do you have any idea that our able officers permitted the vital ships of the Navy to go undermanned to such an extent as would destroy the effectiveness of our fighting ships when all complements could be filled up from the 19,181 men carried on vessels only half manned at best and on scores of nonmilitary craft? I have too good an opinion of our naval officers to believe any such thing.

I will say this, that if they had that reservoir of men from which they could have drawn and failed to do so, it convicts them either of having enough or else not properly administering the Navy. [Applause.] Our committee never took the position at any time that a particular number of men must satisfy the needs of the Navy. On the contrary, we insisted on first finding out what the Navy needed in order to maintain the 5-5-3 ratio, in order to keep up the treaty Navy, the 18-battleship fleet. We determined to find out the actual names of the ships that it was proposed to be kept in commission. We made a list of such ships and set opposite each ship the number of men now carried, and the clerk of the committee went to the adding machine with the figures and you have the result in this bill. We are giving all now carried and more. Why are not these sufficient? Are we so rich or our taxpayers in such fine situation that we should make provision for more men than the officers themselves have placed upon the ships of the fleet at a time when there are 96,000 men in the Navy? What seems to be desired is that the men who are taken off the surplus destroyers and worthless craft shall not be discharged but shall be piled up on the ships which are to be kept in commission. We did not believe that this should be done.

And so we allowed 50,000 men for the Navy afloat, which is 2,000 more than are carried to-day on the ships comprising the 18-battleship fleet, as set out in the committee report. I saw in the paper yesterday morning that 50,000 men afloat would destroy the treaty navy and endanger the peace not only of the Republic, but of the world! If that is true, then the peace of the Republic and the world is in danger already, because these ships constituting the treaty navy carry less than 50,000 men at this time when there are 96,000 men in the Navy. [Applause.] Now, about the shore stations.

Mr. MONDELL. That is rhetoric.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Probably so. Now, about the shore stations. There are at the present time 12,633 men assigned to various duties on shore; 4,981 are under training, and unassigned 7,833, making a total of 25,447. This appears not to be sufficient, as it is now claimed that over 32,000 should be on shore with only 12,633 assigned to any necessary employment. [Applause.] When have our people become so vastly rich that we can afford to pile up 18,000 or 20,000 men on shore not assigned to any work in navy yard or station? The 7,833 mentioned above and who are wholly unassigned amount to almost 8 per cent of the entire 100,000 men of the Navy. They are allowed to take the places of those who may be sick, about 2 per cent, a few in jail, and those who are unavailable for any particular duty in transit within the service going from ship to shore, from shore to ship, or from one ship to another.

Seven per cent has heretofore been the high-water mark allowed for these causes. But now it is proposed to make an allowance of approximately 15 per cent for this waste. The committee dismissed such a contention.

For next year we have made a reduction below the 12,633 which are assigned this year to particular posts on shore of only 2,500 men. In spite of the enormous shrinkage in business which is bound to come at these shore stations by the suspending of work under the treaty and by the scrapping of vessels, we have cut off only 2,500 men from the number that is now assigned. We have provided for 2,000 men for training. This will be ample, as there are less than 5,000 men now under training in a Navy of 96,000 men, and conditions as to training will not greatly change the coming year. The country is full of young men who have had sea service and who are anxious to get back to sea. They have been out of the service a little while, and now when the opportunity comes they will reenlist and go back to the ships direct and not into the training schools. Not only that but our officers learned during the war that the best way to train a man was to train him on the ship itself. So they took these boys and put them into training schools for three or four weeks, just long enough to be sure they were not going to come down with measles or mumps or some other contagious disease, which might spread to the fleet. Then they were put into the fleet, where they belong and where they can be trained most effectively. We have allowed 2,000 men for training.

We have allowed the full 8 per cent of the entire enlisted personnel for those who may be sick, for those who may be in prison, and for those who are in transit within the service. And while the department requires only 12,633 men for specific assignments with a 96,000-man establishment, we have provided nearly 10,000 men with an additional 7,000 unassigned, out of which the necessary number for training and replacements can be had. That makes a total of 67,000 enlisted men afloat and ashore. Why provide more? Where are they needed?

But it is said that this will not give the 5-5-3 Navy. I have noticed in the papers some very choice fiction as to what Great Britain is providing for her navy for the coming year. Here are the facts about the British Navy: The personnel of Great Britain's establishment for the coming year consists of 98,500 officers, marines, enlisted men, coast guard, and students in her naval academies—Britain's entire personnel—98,500, exclusive of colonial establishments and a few reserves operating colliers and aviation. We have provided for 3,400 men for aviation, all that the department asked for that purpose, which is a fair offset for the British Coast Guard—our Coast Guard being carried under the Treasury Department. So if you take the coast guard out of the British figures and take our aviation out of ours, the comparison is upon a fair basis between the two countries and gives almost identical figures—67,000 enlisted men plus 19,500 marines, plus 1,000 marine officers, plus 6,156 officers of the line and staff, plus 1,500 warrant officers, which are likewise included in the British figures, plus 2,500 boys in the Naval Academy, gives a total of 97,656 in the American Navy. The figures for the two countries are practically identical—98,000 men—thus the 5-5 ratio is kept with mathematical exactness. [Applause.]

But they say that the British Dominions have additional men. Oh, yes. Canada has one cruiser and two destroyers. New Zealand has a few, South Africa has a few, India a few, and Australia a few, a total of officers and men in the far-flung Dominions of the British Empire amounting to about 7,000. Why, the Naval Militia of the State of New York, which is maintained by the State of New York, has nearly 3,000 men. Then they say that the colliers are not manned by enlisted men while ours are. They are manned partly by enlisted men and partly by reserves. The best information I have been able to obtain is to the effect that less than 1,000 civilians or reserves are employed in the British Navy.

I have given you the comparative figures of the two countries. If we provide 100,000 enlisted men for our Navy, and 19,500 marines, and then add 8,656 commissioned and warrant and marine officers, and 2,500 students at the Naval Academy, we have come to a figure of 130,000 personnel for our Navy for the coming year, as against 98,500 for Great Britain. I do not believe that this Government is justified in going at this time beyond the 5-5 ratio fixed by the conference. [Applause.]

Mr. BRITTEN. I realize that my friend desires to be accurate always——

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Always.

Mr. BRITTEN. I am sure of that. He also knows that the British have no service like our marines.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I know that the British have almost as many marines as we have.

Mr. BRITTEN. Not at all; and no marines like ours.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I will say to the gentleman that there are no marines on the face of the earth like ours. [Applause.] In all the history of our Republic up to this glad hour they have added luster and glory to the name and fame of America. There are no marines like them. I admit it.

Mr. BRITTEN. The gentleman is twisting the subject. Our marines are land men and military. The British have a few of an entirely different character, and the gentleman knows it.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I will say this: That the marines are under the control of the Secretary of the Navy. He can assign them to any spot or place in this Government under his jurisdiction, and the gentleman knows that that is true. And not only that; he knows that at this very hour there are upon the battleships in the neighborhood of an additional 100 marines for each ship, and every marine saves an enlisted man. The Secretary of the Navy can assign to ships as many marines as he sees fit.

Mr. BRITTEN. How many marines are afloat to-day out of the 20,000?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. The gentleman has propounded to me a question which he should propound to the naval officers. I have been trying to find out with the greatest particularity how many men are afloat in the Navy, and thus far I have not been able to find out. They report 71,000 men afloat to a committee of Congress and they report 68,000 afloat as of the same date to the President of the United States. [Applause.] How can I tell which is correct?

I venture to say that what I have said about the personnel proposed by Great Britain for the coming year is as near accurate as it is possible to get it and it can be safely relied upon for purposes of comparison.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Chairman, will the honorable Representative yield for one question?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Very gladly.

Mr. TINKHAM. Did the gentleman obtain his information——

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Let me ask the gentleman first: When I get through will the gentleman withdraw his objection to an agreement as to the time for general debate?

Mr. TINKHAM. Yes.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Thank you very much.

Mr. TINKHAM. Now I would like this question answered, if you please: From what source of information did the gentleman obtain his knowledge in relation to the personnel of the English Navy and of the Japanese Navy?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Well, my dear Mr. TINKHAM, it is a matter of common knowledge, printed in all the newspapers of Great Britain, and when you read their journal, the Army and Navy Journal of Great Britain, if you did not know what navy you were reading about you would think you were reading the Army and Navy Journal of the United States. [Laughter.]

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINKHAM. Has the honorable Representative obtained it only by reading the English and Japanese newspapers?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I have not read the Japanese papers, but my distinguished friend from Massachusetts, I know, is a Japanese scholar, and I would be very glad to have him tell me in English what Japan proposes to do and then tell us how he knows that Great Britain has more than 98,500. Where did he get his information?

Mr. TINKHAM. I obtained the following figures——

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I ask you where? From the Navy Department?

Mr. TINKHAM. From the Intelligence Bureau of the Navy Department.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. I hold in my hand a portion of the London Times that will give full information to the gentleman from Massachusetts of the figures stated by my colleague.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Of course. To-morrow morning the action of the committee reporting this bill will be known everywhere in the United States and probably in other countries. When this Congress gets through with these appropriation bills there will not be an intelligent man who follows public affairs in any nation in the world who will not be able to tell you approximately what the United States has decided to do in the way of armies and navies. And let me say that I hope that what we decide to do will be an inspiration and a bow of promise and hope to all mankind. [Applause, the Members rising.]

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. I would like to ask my old friend a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. I have listened with very great care to the comparison he was making of the number of men proposed by the English and by the American navies. I do know where the gentleman got his information. He can not supply it. Will not the gentleman state to the House whether or not it was the very highest that could be obtained, absolutely official?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. As far as I could go.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for one more question?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. BRITTEN. Is the gentleman at liberty to tell us the substance of his conversation with the President last week as to the number of enlisted personnel that he desires for the Navy?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I have at various times since I have been a Member of the House been called in consultation with the President, but I have yet to go out on the street or come here and repeat what the President said, and I will not do it now. [Applause.] And I want to say further that to do so is a breach of faith and a violation of the simple rules of conduct which should guide Members of Congress in their dealings with the Executive [applause], and the gentleman from Illinois ought to withdraw the question, so that it will not appear in the RECORD.

Mr. BRITTEN. Now, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. BRITTEN. I think my question was put in polite language, at least, and I do not want the gentleman to violate any confidence; certainly not. But we have been told through the press on a number of occasions that the President and his administration stood for a certain fixed number of enlisted personnel in the Navy. Now, of course, if the President took the gentleman into his confidence and told him he would like a certain number of enlisted personnel for the Navy, and you could not transmit that confidence to the House, that is a different proposition. Then I will withdraw my question.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Oh, the President is a man who has upon his shoulders the weight of the world, almost, sir, and he has the confidence of America. But the President has something else to do besides going out and counting up the number of men required for the operation of the Navy. [Applause.] Of course, he does not know, and could not know, the number required, but he probably has been hounded by many persons to accept their figures. [Applause.] I am not sure even but what my good friend from Illinois may have been hounding him with the rest. [Applause.]

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. BRITTEN. I will say to the gentleman that his friend from Illinois has not hounded the President, but I am determined to find out whether the President, with the Navy General Board and all the expert advice he has at his disposal, is for enlisted personnel of a specific size?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I know that my friend from Illinois has been outside the jurisdiction of the United States a good deal of the time of late, but I did not know that he had forgotten the address of the President of the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. GALLIVAN. It was furthest from my mind to interrupt such a splendid presentation of his side of the case as the gentleman has been making. But I notice he has been willing to yield for interruptions. I have been sitting here hoping to learn more than I yet know about this question. I am on the committee with the gentleman, and I am the only Member on the democratic side of the House who has signed the minority report. I have listened with attention to the entire speech of the gentleman from Michigan; but before the gentleman gets away from his repeated statement that the Naval Establishment is piling up thousands of supernumeraries I want to know if he knows and can tell us who are the officials in the Naval Establishment who are piling up these men who are not needed in the Navy?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. My friend from Massachusetts [Mr. GALLIVAN] is one of the best-informed men in Congress, and I am sure I would be doing him an injustice if I thought it necessary to impart to him such fundamental knowledge as that which he now asks. [Laughter.]

Mr. GALLIVAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. GALLIVAN. When I get the floor I propose to tell the House what I know about the whole question, but I wanted the gentleman from Michigan to tell the House about this particular complaint he makes.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I knew the gentleman had the information which he sought from me. [Laughter.]

Mr. GALLIVAN. Will the gentleman yield for another question?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. GALLIVAN. If the Naval Establishment and the Navy Department are as inefficient as the gentleman would lead the House to believe, before he starts to scrap the Navy why not scrap the Naval Establishment from the Secretary of the Navy down? [Applause.]

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I think ordinarily we have all we can do at this end of the Avenue to take care of our own household. It is well for us to remember that our work is to make a success of the legislative branch of the Government. [Applause.]

Mr. YATES. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. YATES. I had the honor of being one of the very few men who voted against our dear friend, the Budget system. I should like to know if I am correct in understanding the gentleman as saying that the Budget pushed up this estimate $190,000,000?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. The gentleman has missed the essential thing.

Mr. YATES. When was it?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. The Budget estimates were made long before the international agreement was reached between the nations of the world. [Applause.]

Mr. YATES. That answers my question.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Now, about Japan, because I have noticed in the papers the statement that as soon as this bill passes we shall fall below Japan, and that would be serious if true.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Wait until I finish about Japan. After this scrapping is done Japan will have left 10 battleships, 62 destroyers, and 27 submarines. Remember that the Japanese Government has no marines, and the enlisted men of the Japanese Navy guard the naval stations and the yards. This is done in our Navy by the marines, which means a difference of thousands of men. Have you heard from those who compare our personnel with that of Japan that Japan has no marines? Japan will have 10 battleships, 62 destroyers, and 27 submarines. Japan next year will not have in her navy much, if any, in excess of one-half of the strength of the American Navy in 1916.

Mr. TINKHAM rose.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. This is information which I am especially urging upon my distinguished friend from Massachusetts, because I think my genial friend needs informing more than anybody that I have run across in a long time. [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may have 10 minutes in addition to my hour.

Mr. BRITTEN. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed until he finishes his argument.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I do not care for unlimited time.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Michigan be allowed to proceed until he has concluded his remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that the gentleman from Michigan may proceed indefinitely. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I thank the House. We had in our Navy in 1916, 11 of the same capital ships that we are going to retain under the treaty. Not only that, but we had 25 additional battleships at that time. In 1916, with only 50,000 enlisted men, we had a total on our battleships of 18,859 men, and the Navy Department to-day, with 96,000 men in the Navy, has only 18,250 men on our battleships. [Applause.] They try to say to Congress that whereas when they had 50,000 men in the Navy they could spare almost 19,000 for the battleships, now they can put upon the battleships only 14,400 men if we give them 67,000 men for the Navy.

Mr. TINKHAM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. In just a moment. Let me finish this. We had not only those battleships with all those men on board them in 1916, but we had 83 destroyers in commission, and next year we will have only 103 destroyers in full commission.

We had 40 submarines and 35 cruisers. Japan has 10 battleships for the next year, 62 destroyers against our 83 before the war, 27 submarines against our 40, and 13 light cruisers against 35 that we had before the war, many of ours being much larger and more powerful. Under such circumstances if we could keep in commission battleships enough to require 19,000 men before the war and had almost as many destroyers as we are going to keep next year, and then had only 50,000 men in our Navy, where are we going to put the rest of all these men that they are demanding for the Navy? [Applause.]

Mr. TINKHAM. I should like to ask the honorable Representative two questions.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. One at a time.

Mr. TINKHAM. The honorable Representative knows that men fight—not ships.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Oh, yes.

Mr. TINKHAM. Japan has announced officially that the enlisted strength of her navy for next year is to be 68,252 men, more than 1,000 more than our enlisted men as proposed in the committee bill.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Do not let people fool you. Japan has not announced how many men she will have on board any ship, and there is no officer in the American Navy who will be able to point out any positive information as to the intentions of Japan.

Mr. TINKHAM. If the honorable Representative will avail himself of the information from the Intelligence Bureau, he will find——

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Oh, I know all that they say, and when you have got all that they say you will find that "it is understood and generally believed and rather expected that that is what the Japanese will do next year." [Laughter.] That is all the information that the gentleman from Massachusetts has. What would they want them for? Ten battleships take only 12,000 men, 60 destroyers will take only 6,000 more, and that is 18,000, and 27 submarines will take only 900 more, and that is less than 20,000. In God's name, where would the Japanese put over 48,000 more? [Applause.]

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman has answered in a way the question I was going to ask, but not perhaps as clearly as he should. How many men does he figure the Japanese could place and use on the fleet they are entitled to under the treaty?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I will say that we had in our Navy before the war less than 50,000 men, and up as high as a maximum of 54,000, and we had in commission then 16 or 18 battleships in full commission, and 15 more at least in partial commission, and the Japanese next year will have only 10, I can not see how it would be possible for Japan to use more than one-half or three-quarters, all told, of the number that we had before the war. Forty thousand would give them men galore.

Mr. MONDELL. If it is claimed that Japan is to maintain more than 40,000 or 50,000 men at the outside, they having no marines, and giving them 10,000 for guarding purposes in the place of marines—if it is claimed that Japan should maintain approximately more than 50,000 men, that claim must be based on the belief that Japan is not going to keep faith under the treaty.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Of course, either not keeping faith under the treaty or put her down as supplying men for ships and stations for which they have no use, and whatever you may want to say of Japan, you can not put her in that class.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I will.

Mr. BUTLER. I notice the gentleman has a great deal of useful information, and I would like to ask him this question: Japan will have 10 battleships next year?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. That is right.

Mr. BUTLER. Suppose she puts 50,000 men on each ship, can she fight any better? [Laughter.]

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. No.

Mr. BUTLER. Does not it require men and ships to make a navy?

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. BRITTEN. There is no limit to the number of auxiliary ships that Japan can have.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Well, when Japan builds them it will be time enough to take account of it. Japan has not yet built them, and until she does why do you want to saddle the taxpayers of this country with the burdens, the necessity for which is only prospective, to say the least?

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman yield for one more question? The gentleman has during his entire discussion of the Japanese Navy compared it with our Navy in 1916; why does he not compare it with the Navy allowed under the treaty and its ratio, 5-5-3?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. The only purpose I had in comparing it to the 1916 Navy was to find some place where we could agree upon a premise. If we compared it with the present time, you and I would not be in accord as to what the present Navy requires. But there can be no question as to the number that we actually had in 1916.

Mr. BRITTEN. The gentleman can make a comparison on the ratio of 5-5-3.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I have done so. If Japan puts more than 40,000 men in the navy, I have no idea where she will put them.

Mr. BRITTEN. The gentleman is evading the question entirely.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. The gentleman knows how many we are proposing in this bill.

Mr. TINKHAM. Will the honorable Representative yield?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I will.

Mr. TINKHAM. On page 8 of the report of the committee it says:

> As to the shore stations, the committee found that on February 1, 1922, 12,633 men were distributed as follows.

And then, after stating how they are distributed, it states that the total is 12,633. Now, on page 297 of the hearings before the subcommittee the following colloquy occurred:

> Mr. KELLEY. Let us have the sheet showing that just for our use.
> Captain WILLIAMS. You may have this, sir.

And then it shows that the total afloat is 68,138, and that the total ashore is 32,861. What is the answer to that?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I am glad the gentleman has emphasized the thing that I want the House to know. He has called the attention of the House to that bit of testimony which shows that essential places on shore when they are all filled, when every man that is necessary for every navy yard and training school and hospital, and everything else, has been put in his place, they still had unassigned, performing no useful service to the Government, 20,000 men. The gentleman from Massachusetts is supposed to have some little regard for the Treasury of the United States, and does he think that we ought to pile upon this country the expense of 20,000 men who are performing no useful service? [Applause.]

If so, then I most respectfully invite those of you who believe that to be the correct policy to follow the leadership of the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts. [Applause.] Mr. Chairman, I shall have to stop now, because a good many of these things will come up under the five-minute rule, and they can be explained much more in detail then than now, and abundant opportunity will be given.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman closes will he yield to me for a question?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I want to see whether I have the gentleman's position correctly in mind. As I understand it from the statement made by the gentleman from Michigan, he claims that the personnel, the enlisted men, allowed is sufficient to man a battle fleet of 18 capital battleships and all the necessary accompanying ships which the Navy thinks ought to accompany them?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Absolutely.

Mr. MANN. And that in addition to that there will be personnel enough on shore to provide all that is necessary at receiving-ship barracks, shipyards, and so forth?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes; and give 7,000 additional men to take the places of those who may happen to be sick, under training, or in transit in the service.

Mr. MANN. And that it does not provide a large number of men simply in training, not being used for other purposes than training?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I would say to the gentleman from Illinois that it is even more favorable than his question intimates, because they do not have now a large number in training. All these men that the gentleman from Massachusetts has mentioned——

Mr. MANN. I am not speaking about the present conditions. So that if Japan or Great Britain is maintaining 25,000 or 50,000 men in training for the navy, that is up to them. We are not proposing to do that in this bill.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. That is true. I want to conclude now by reading this short statement from a speech which the President of the United States delivered at the conference, which he had favored as early as we, but which we suggested should be called, with a good deal of satisfaction and with entire unanimity. This is what the President said in addressing that great gathering of world statesmen:

> Out of the cataclysm of the World War came new fellowships, new convictions, new aspirations. It is ours to make the most of them. A world staggering with debt needs its burden lifted. Humanity, which has been shocked by wanton destruction, would minimize the agencies of that destruction. Contemplating the measureless cost of war and the continuing burden of armament, all thoughtful peoples wish for real limitation of armament and would like war outlawed. In soberest reflection the world's hundreds of millions who pay in peace and die in war wish their statesmen to turn the expenditures for destruction into means of construction, aimed at a higher state for those who live and follow after.

Let us translate into reality the hope of the President enunciated on that historic occasion. [Prolonged applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. TILSON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 11228, the naval appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill

H. R. 11228, and pending that I ask unanimous consent that general debate be limited to 12 hours, one-half to be controlled by myself and one-half by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES], including the time already used.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that general debate upon the bill, including the time already used, be limited to 12 hours, one-half to be controlled by the gentleman from Michigan and one-half by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES]. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Michigan that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the naval appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 11228, and Mr. TILSON resumed the chair as Chairman.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, as a Democrat, of course, I think it would be exceedingly unfortunate should the State of Michigan elect to the Senate a Republican; but if that fate should befall us, I am satisfied that the House will agree with me that no State would be better represented than Michigan should it be represented by the gentleman who has just taken his seat. [Applause.] At the same time there is to him one objection, which is common to most of the gentlemen of the majority on the Committee on Appropriations, and that is that they are very poor bookkeepers. The fact is that if the gentleman from Michigan was a better bookkeeper he could make out a much stronger case for himself to-day than he has, for, while gentlemen in the House and in the press create the impression that the Congress proposes to abandon the Navy, the fact is that by this bill the Congress proposed to make available for expenditure a sum much greater than is set forth in the report of the committee as the total of appropriations. While this bill provides a direct appropriation of $233,000,000 it carries a legislative provision which authorizes the Navy Department to spend during the next fiscal year upon battleships which are authorized to be completed by the treaty, and which it is the intention of the department to complete, all of the unexpended balances of the Navy Department under the head of increase of the Navy on July 1, which the Navy Department informs the committee will amount to $46,250,000. So that in addition to the $233,000,000 of direct appropriation the Navy Department will spend next year this $46,250,000; and then this bill, by a legislative provision, authorizes a bookkeeping transaction which enables them to use $1,800,000 of clothing. In order that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TINKHAM] and others may be somewhat reassured, they should know that the subcommittee has agreed upon incorporating into this bill at some time, either on the floor of this House or in conference, if the Senate shall add it, the amount of $7,806,575 for the construction of aircraft. The amount is not included in the bill because the House rules prohibit us authorizing the construction of airships and construction of buildings at aircraft stations, but the Naval Affairs Committee has approved a bill authorizing the appropriation of that amount, and this subcommittee will agree to it if it is offered in the House or, if it is not offered in the House, then when it is added by the Senate.

Again, we ought to be fair with ourselves and with the country and let them know that this bill provides for pay for the officers and men based upon the law that prevailed prior to 1920, because the law of 1920 expires on June 30 of this year. We know that before July 1 of this year this Congress will do one of two things. It will either pass a resolution continuing the pay of 1920, which will add $15,000,000 to this bill, or else it will pass the McKenzie pay bill, which will add only $10,000,000 to the bill. So that when you add these figures you will find that instead of $233,000,000 this bill practically commits the Government to an expenditure of $300,000,000. Then, in addition, it is proper to say that immediately after the passage of this bill it is proposed to bring into the House a separate bill providing for the costs incident to cancellation of contracts for ships, which the department estimates will amount to $60,000,000. So that you have in sight an expenditure for naval purposes of $360,000,000. And the Senate is yet to be heard from.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I will.

Mr. MANN. As I understood the gentleman his statement is that he expects if the bill becomes a law the total authorization of expenditure for the next fiscal year for the Navy—I am not speaking about claims—for the operation of the Navy will be about $300,000,000?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Providing the Senate does not add a dollar to it, it will amount to $300,000,000.

Mr. MANN. I thought the gentleman included various items which the Senate would add.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. With the exception of the two items I have referred to, and which the House Committee practically agrees to, the aircraft item which may be added in the House and the increase for pay of the personnel.

Mr. MANN. What does the gentleman figure will be the total probable appropriation for the operation of the Navy for the next fiscal year?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. It will be at least $300,000,000.

Mr. MANN. And in operation I include construction as a part of the operation.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Eliminating this separate bill which I referred to, it will be $300,000,000, providing the Senate does not add anything other than the items I have referred to, aircraft and pay, based upon the McKenzie bill or the present law.

Mr. MANN. Does that include increase in pay?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Including pay on the basis of the law to-day and including $7,000,000 for aircraft, it is a little over $300,000,000.

Mr. MANN. Then it is not so niggardly as some people seem to think.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. That is the purpose of my remarks so those gentlemen may be reassured. It is not so small in view of the supposed success of the Conference on the Limitation of Armament.

Mr. MONDELL. If the gentleman will permit, in order to emphasize what the gentleman has just stated, and I agree with his figures, the Navy that the committee proposes to be provided for under this bill without any increase whatever in size will cost us, with the necessary adjustment of pay and provision of aircraft that can be made and the construction for the current year, $300,000,000.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes; $300,000,000.

Mr. MONDELL. And any considerable increase in personnel above what is provided in this bill would give the Navy after the conference more than the Navy had before the conference?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes; I am going to call attention to some figures in order that we may understand exactly what it does mean. According to the Naval Yearbook of 1919 the total appropriations for the Navy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, the last year prior to the war, amounted to $141,050,643.53 as against the $300,000,000 we agree is to be appropriated for the current expenses for the next fiscal year.

In 1915, after the World War started, we passed a bill appropriating, for the fiscal year 1916, $149,763,563.45. In 1916, after the sinking of the Lusitania, when there was imminent danger of our being forced into the World War, when we had determined upon the great shipbuilding program of 1916, we enacted a bill appropriating only $312,888,060.25. And now to-day, after the ratification of the four-power pact and the agreement upon a 10-year naval holiday, it is certain that this Congress is going to authorize for current naval expenses $300,000,000, if the Senate does not add an item other than those two I have mentioned.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. As I understand the gentleman, he makes this statement: That looking at this matter from the standpoint of the House of Representatives, the total would be $300,000,000, which is about $70,000,000 in excess of the total footed in this report?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes. And every man in this House knows if we are to judge the future by the past, when this bill comes from the Senate it is going to be greatly increased. No matter what we appropriate here, we know it will be increased in the Senate. What the taxpayer wants to know is the total expenditures on account of the Navy, and in addition to this $300,000,000, we are going to provide in a separate bill $60,000,000, making $360,000,000. Of course, the $60,000,000 could be provided in this bill, but it would not permit gentlemen to show the great economy resulting from the peace conference. But it will have to be paid——

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. As I understand, this $60,000,000 simply takes care of the cancellation. It is not necessarily all the damages that we will have to pay.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. It will take care of the costs incident to the cancellation of contracts. Before I leave that I will say that there is another item that must not be overlooked, that in addition to $360,000,000 the Navy is going to have available for use in the construction of ships the material from the scrapped battleships and cruisers, and this will be no inconsiderable sum.

Mr. LINTHICUM. In consideration of the personnel provided in the bill, have those items been taken into consideration and are they necessary to pay the personnel provided in the bill?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. They have nothing to do with the personnel at all.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Suppose you have this enormous sum of money that you are describing, how will that affect the personnel of the Navy when you directly say that they may have so many men and no more?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. As the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY] has pointed out so forcibly, the total number of men they are authorized to have is exactly the number of men they had on the same ships the first of this year and 17,000 additional for shore stations.

Mr. LINTHICUM. They could not have any more than that, no matter how much money they have?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. They ought not to have any more than that. Now, some gentlemen would have the House to abdicate its functions and let the department determine the appropriation. When the Department of Agriculture comes here it does not say the House shall not determine the amount to be appropriated for its scientific bureaus for the next fiscal year. Nor does the War Department or any other department. But if you say that we should follow the views of the experts, I only want to know what expert. You can take the testimony of the experts of the Navy on the General Board, and they recommend for the next fiscal year 120,000 men; and if you provide those 120,000 men you will add $75,000,000 to this bill and will make your naval expenditures approximately $435,000,000.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I was not talking about the expert. What I was endeavoring to say was that under this bill you have provided for a certain number of the personnel of the Navy, and no matter how many extraneous items come in, it does not affect or increase it one bit?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Everybody knows that.

Mr. LAZARO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Not now. I first want to call your attention to some matters.

I fear gentlemen may be frightened by newspaper articles in criticism of the Congress or the subcommittee that prepared this bill. I trust gentlemen will inquire as to the statement of facts before agreeing to their conclusions. I read in the Washington Post, whose editor is very close to the administration, a double-column editorial in yesterday morning's issue, containing this statement:

> A few days ago it was proposed in Congress to dictate to the President in regard to the distribution of the Army. A few wiseacres contended that troops abroad should be brought home, and they proposed to compel the President to bring them back. But a little inquiry revealed that the President was still Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy, and the attempt to override the Constitution was abandoned before the lawmakers had made themselves wholly ridiculous. Now it is proposed to compel the President to send a certain number of men to sea and to keep a certain number ashore. Before the House covers itself with ridicule as being ignorant of the fundamental law it should strike out that provision.

Advising this House how not to make itself ridiculous. I ask you who makes himself ridiculous, when I tell you that there is no such provision in the bill, and it never was thought of by any Member in connection with the bill. Here is a double-column editorial representing to the country that the bill contains a provision dictating how the men of the Navy should be distributed, when there is no such provision and no man in the House ever dreamed of such a thing.

But some gentlemen do not think it proper that we should fail to follow the experts of the Navy. The minority members of the Appropriations Committee take that position. I want to call attention to what the experts say. The General Board says you ought to provide 120,000 enlisted men. Are you going to follow them? If you do, you will do what the Secretary of the Navy does not do, because he advocates only 96,000 men. Then the President, ignoring the experts of the General Board and the experts of the Secretary of the Navy, says that 86,000 are enough. Then the minority members of the Appropriations Committee charge that the subcommittee, ignoring the experts, are threatening to wreck the Navy, and they recommend 86,000, an amount that no expert has recommended.

Look at the statement of the experts, and tell me how many men should go on the battleships. The General Board says that on the 18 battleships you ought to have 22,492 enlisted men. What does the Secretary say? He has his own experts, and he says the experts of the General Board are all wrong; that you ought to have 21,158 men. And then they actually have on board those same 18 ships only 18,259 men. Whom are you going to follow among the experts? You can not even get accurate information as to the distribution of the personnel.

My friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER], the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, had the naval representatives before his committee, and in the statement I hold in my hand they told him in arriving at the total of 70,892 men reported on board vessels, that they had 3,352 men on district vessels.

The gentlemen have changed their minds about that. Here is a statement contained in a letter of the Secretary of the Navy setting forth the men on shore, enlisted men, making up this 32,000, and it includes men on district vessels, 3,352. Well, if they count them both ways, as part of the total on shore and then count them in the number of men on the sea, they can put up a list so large that the number recommended by the General Board would be entirely too small.

Mr. LAZARO. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. LAZARO. Do you agree with the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY] that 65,000 men will be sufficient to carry out our 5-5-3 agreement?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I will say to the gentleman from Louisiana that if I did not believe it I would not have voted to report the bill and I would not support it to-day.

Mr. LAZARO. I am asking the gentleman the question for information.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes. Because I do not believe it, and because I have examined this matter as carefully as a man could, taking not general statements, but analyzing it ship by ship and item by item, I could reach no conclusion other than the conclusion stated by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY], and that is that 67,000 men will provide all the men necessary to keep this treaty navy afloat, with all the ships they say they want to have afloat, and then leave them 17,000 men ashore, and that is as many men as they ought to have on shore. [Applause.]

Mr. LAZARO. One other question. Does the gentleman agree with the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY] that the number he gave for Great Britain and Japan is correct, according to his information?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Absolutely. I have some information along that line, but if the gentleman will let me I would like to go on and call attention to a few matters, so that the Members of the House may know how unsafe it would be to accept blindly the statements that are furnished us as to the distribution of personnel.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. In a moment. Let me show in this letter from the Secretary of the Navy to the President, on page 4, that they have assigned to communications on January 1, 1,288 men, and on page 5 of the same letter I read:

> The British do not include in their figures those men doing duty in the naval communication service. Our Navy has roughly 1,600 such men.

In one page that is a difference of 300 men, and I agree that it is speaking roughly. With 54,000 men in 1916, as the gentleman from Michigan has pointed out, the Navy could keep in commission more battleships than are authorized under the treaty. If with only 54,000 men they could find 18,854 for battleships, why is it that with 67,000 they say they will be unable to put but 14,244 on battleships? The Secretary says first in his letter to the committee, dated March 16, that if 65,000 men are provided he can keep but 12 ships in commission. Look at the hearings and you will see it. He furnished to the committee a statement that he could not keep in commission more than 12 ships. Now, Secretary Denby in yesterday's newspapers informs us that he will put out of commission 5 battleships, which would leave 13 ships in commission. He has raised one inside of three weeks, and I hope as the weeks go by he can come to see that he can keep 18 battleships in commission, as the committee believes he should do.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Chairman, will the honorable gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from South Carolina yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. TINKHAM. I read:

> Your subcommittee should answer, as a complement to the 18 battleships, 21,158 men.

Was not the subcommittee told by the Navy Department that it had determined the number to be 21,158 men?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes. The gentleman was out of the room when I said the General Board stated it ought to be 22,494 men, and the Secretary 21,158, and that the Secretary said he actually had on board on February 1 the 18,259. As the experts could not agree as to the number we should have, we based our figures on what they actually had.

Mr. TINKHAM. I want to ask the honorable Representative further——

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The honorable Representative awaits the question of the honorable Representative from Massachusetts.

Mr. TINKHAM. Did not the Secretary of the Navy in relation to this matter write a letter——

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I can not yield for the reading of a letter. I will say to the gentleman that I hold in my hand a report from Admiral Jones, the commander in chief of the Atlantic Fleet, and it is interesting to note his statements. He says:

In reply to reference (a), the vessels of the Atlantic Fleet had on board on January 1 about the following percentages of their complements: (a) Battleships, 80 per cent; (b) destroyers, active, 84 per cent; destroyers, reserve, less than 50 per cent; (c) other vessels, from 85 per cent to 100 per cent.

In other words, on battleships, which they say are the backbone of the fleet, they had on board on January 1, when they had in the Navy 95,000 men, only 80 per cent of their complement; on the destroyers they put 84 per cent.

Then when it came to the other vessels, which includes yachts, tugs, mine layers, and miscellaneous craft, from 85 to 100 per cent.

If it is now thought so necessary to have a full complement on the battleships, why was it not necessary on January 1, instead of reducing the complement of the battleships and retaining the complement of miscellaneous vessels. [Applause.]

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. Has the gentleman made a comparison of the number of men kept for the same ships in 1914 and 1921, and has the gentleman observed the increase of enlisted men upon those ships since 1916?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I have, although the gentleman from Pennsylvania is more familiar with it.

Mr. BUTLER. How the number had been increased; otherwise, if he would like to know definitely these figures, he will find a chart in my office showing the reason why they have increased the personnel on these fleets.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Chairman, will the honorable Member yield for another question?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. TINKHAM. Why should the subcommittee base the complement that should be on battleships at the figures at which they were on February 1 and January 1, when they were 80 per cent, 20 per cent below their standard, and on the reserve destroyers less than 50 per cent?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Why should the experts of the department put on the battleships only 80 per cent and on the destroyers only 84 per cent on January 1?

Mr. TINKHAM. Will the gentleman answer my question?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The Navy had 95,000 men on January 1, and the gentleman believes they know what they are doing, and evidently the Navy Department believed that number ought to be put on battleships, and they put that number there. When we sought to find out the number of men in order to supply these ships we did not select the date January 1. The date was agreed upon by the Naval Affairs Committee and the Navy Department and the statement furnished before we entered upon our hearings.

Now, I am willing to follow the judgment of the department as to the number of men they needed on this list of ships on January 1, when this question of personnel was not at issue. The gentleman from Massachusetts does not follow them in their judgment at that time nor does he do so now, because they now urge 96,000.

Mr. TINKHAM. But it shows 80 per cent on our battleships, which is less than the complement should be. Yet that is the date the committee have used to fix our fleet and to fix the naval personnel.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Well, if it was wrong, I think the President of the United States, as Commander in Chief of the Navy, ought to ask who is responsible for putting only 80 per cent on the battleships, as compared with 85 to 100 per cent on the other vessels of the Navy, when 95,000 men were in the Navy.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Why did you adopt 80 per cent, when you say that is not sufficient and that there ought to be 100 per cent of the complement on the battleships?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I do not say there should be 100 per cent complement in time of peace. We supplied them with 95,000 men, and if they thought they ought to have more on battleships, they could have taken them off these "other vessels"—yachts and tugs and small craft—and put them on the battleships. We did not restrict them. In preparing this bill we asked them to furnish us with the list of ships they intended to keep in commission, and we took the list they gave us.

Mr. LINTHICUM. We know what you did.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. And there is no question except as to the 23 destroyers they desired to keep in reserve and a few small craft not requiring many men.

In reading the British Army and Navy Journal I learn that because of the financial condition of the treasury the royal yacht Alexandria is to be put out of commission and that the yacht of the Admiralty is to be put out of commission. We do not ask that the yacht of the President be put out of commission or that the yacht of the Secretary of the Navy be put out of commission in order to save men. We include them in the list of the ships for which men are furnished and include the entire list determined upon by the department.

Mr. LINTHICUM. That does not answer the question. You say they ought to have a 100 per cent complement of men on the battleships, and yet you say there are only 80 per cent. Why do you say that?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I have not said that. I say if I were Secretary of the Navy and I had to make a distinction between battleships on the one hand and tugs and yachts on the other, I would rather put 100 per cent on the battleships and 80 per cent on the tugs and yachts.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Why not have 100 per cent on all of them?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Because it is not necessary; and if the Secretary says it is necessary, why did he not put them there?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I do not understand that any first-class power in time of peace carries the same complement as in time of war. Great Britain, which has a smaller complement on her ships than we have, has ordered it to be reduced 16 per cent.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Of course, they do not carry full complements. Now, gentlemen, take the navy of Japan. I hold in my hand the information from our intelligence office which was referred to by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TINKHAM] when he was questioning the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY]. He wanted to know why the gentleman from Michigan did not get the information from the intelligence office. I have it here, and I will read it to you to show you how definite it is.

The Japanese admiralty is said to be contemplating a reduction of 500 officers and 5,000 men.

Said by whom? By a Government official or a newspaper? The gentleman who gave that information did not come before any committee where he could be questioned in order to ascertain how reliable the information was. But he reports that it is "said" that they propose to reduce 5,000 men. In this statement from the intelligence department is a list of the Japanese ships to be scrapped. They say the ships to be scrapped under the treaty have on board at least 7,701 men and 278 officers. This is really only part of the complement. We have been told that all of the Japanese ships are properly manned and have their full complement. Then, if they have their full complement and there are 7,700 on the ships that are to be scrapped, they want you to believe that they are going to take those 7,700 men and stick them on the ships that already have their full complement. Do you believe that?

Let me read you another thing to show you how definite this information is. You know if anybody comes from the intelligence office to the honorable gentleman from Massachusetts and says, "I represent the intelligence office," he believes he has inside information, and to be relied upon, without any question as to its accuracy. Now, that may or may not be so. It depends on its accuracy. The statement contained in this intelligence office report is that on January 1, 1922, the total enlisted personnel of the Japanese Navy was 73,272. But where do they get those figures? They do not say. They may be accurate, but if they are as inaccurate as other figures I have called attention to they are not very reliable. Then he says:

Her proposed reduction of 5,000 men will make 68,252.

Having arrived at that figure, they communicated it to the gentleman from Massachusetts, and he springs it here as a state secret to surprise the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY]. In no place in that report is there a statement of the source of the information; and everybody knows that for the purpose of comparison here it is misleading in that it includes no marines. Japan has no marines, and everybody knows that in the marines we have 19,500 men, and 75 to 100 on each of our battleships, and no fair comparison can be made between these figures and ours.

Mr. BUTLER. Did my friend in his investigation discover how the Japanese use their sailor men in their navy yards? I have always endeavored to find that out, but I could not. If the Japanese sailors work in their navy yards, they will count differently Our sailors do not work in the navy yards at all. Has the gentleman discovered anything about that?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. No; because, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania knows, with his long experience, it is impossible to discover anything about it.

Mr. BUTLER. I have not been able to discover anything about it in 25 years.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The gentleman from Pennsylvania with his long service and interest in the subject has never been able to discover it, and other gentlemen who have endeavored to obtain the information have never been able to learn accurately the figures of the Japanese Navy.

Mr. LAZARO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I yield to the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. LAZARO. Why have an intelligence department in the Navy if they can not get any reliable information?

Mr. LAYTON. For fun!

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I think they get the best information they can; but suppose the gentleman requests me to get him some information, and I do the best I can. That is no reason why he should swear absolutely that my information is entirely correct. I may be mistaken. It depends on a man's opportunities to secure information.

Mr. LAZARO. What I am driving at is this: If they can not give any information that is reliable, it seems that some change ought to be made.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The opportunity for securing information may be limited. It always is as to Japan, and all they can do is to do the best they can. When the information is furnished we must determine how accurate it is.

Mr. LAYTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I will yield to the gentleman from Delaware.

Mr. LAYTON. It is believed that Congress is not so very full of information on questions that come to it for settlement. We are now doubting the information of the President of the United States, and, as far as I can gather from the discussion, we are absolutely throwing into the scrap heap the information of the Secretary of the Navy and that of the General Naval Board. It seems to me that in the midst of all this discussion there is not much left in the shape of general intelligence. [Laughter.]

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I may agree with the gentleman in part, but he does not exactly state the situation. The General Board recommended 120,000, and it is the Secretary of the Navy who refuses to follow the General Board and recommends 96,000. Now, we have good company in refusing to follow either of them because the President of the United States refuses to follow the General Board or the Secretary of the Navy and recommends only 86,000. The President throws into the scrap heap the information of the General Board and the Secretary just as much as we do.

Mr. LAYTON. It has occurred to me that where internal matters affect the United States on the one hand the Congress might use its own judgment alone; but this is a matter involving the fact that the President of the United States called a disarmament conference. If there is any man in America who ought to be informed, not only as to the obligations and honor involved in that conference but everything else as resulting consequences, it is the President. He knows what he guaranteed in that conference, and we do not. He knows the whole subject, and has recommended a Navy of a different strength from that recommended by the committee of the House.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The President, as I understand it, has assured the Senate that he made no guaranties other than those contained in the written agreements, and he does not profess to be a naval expert.

Mr. LAYTON. I am simply making the statement——

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Now, I can not yield further. I recommend this thought to my good friend from Delaware that the President of the United States does not profess to be an expert on naval subjects.

Mr. LAYTON. But he confers with the experts.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Who are the experts? The General Board and the Secretary of the Navy, and the President disagrees with them.

Mr. LAYTON. Congress says we have no experts except ourselves.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. This committee does not say it. This committee carefully listened to the statements made by the experts. We have the experts come before us and they are submitted to examination and cross-examination, and we analyze their statements; then, as men of common sense, having in mind the national defense and the National Treasury, we say what shall be done. What better demonstration of common sense could we have than that we recommend putting on the battleships not the number of men that the experts say should be there but what they actually put there themselves?

Mr. STEPHENS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS. All you had to do was to get the list of the vessels and add up the men needed, and that you have done; that does not require any particular expert.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Exactly; we had the figures of the experts as to what they actually put on them. We do not think there should be 32,000 men on shore. There may be some people in the coast cities who believe that the Navy should be maintained solely for the financial good of those cities, and that a large number of men should be put on shore duty because they contribute more to the welfare of the community than men on ships. I know that is not the view of the Chief of Operations of the Navy. And we think it more important that the men should be placed on the ships, and if the Navy Department will carry out the intention of the subcommittee they will put 50,000 men on the ships, and they will have enough to man every battleship and the auxiliaries. If I did not believe that, I would not support the bill.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I will.

Mr. GALLIVAN. The gentleman knows that I signed the minority report and that I signed it because I took some stock in the demonstration by the experts. Now, my friend from South Carolina, for whom I have a great affection, questions the authenticity of the intelligence office of the Navy. How does the subcommittee know that the entire intelligence office is not telling the truth?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. There is no question of truth, I will say to the gentleman. Nobody questions the veracity of the officials. They are splendid gentlemen, in my opinion. But they do not say in their statements that they have any personal knowledge; they simply say it is "said" that so many men will be in the Japanese Navy. "It is said," without any statement as to who made the statement. We question not the truth of these gentlemen but the accuracy, because we know, as I have endeavored to state frequently, that they now say in the intelligence office the Japanese ships are manned with full complements, and further they have set forth a list of ships that are to be scrapped, and the men on those ships, counting only a half complement, number 7,700 men. Now, apply common sense to that statement, and does anyone believe that the Japanese people, burdened with taxation, as are the American people, are going to take 7,700 men off these scrapped ships and carry them over and put them on the ships already fully manned? And yet that is the statement of the intelligence office.

Mr. GALLIVAN. The gentleman has answered my question. [Laughter.]

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield in order that I may make a statement?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. No; I yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. DUNBAR].

Mr. DUNBAR. Mr. Chairman, what would be the additional cost of increasing the personnel of the Navy from 67,000 men to 86,000 men?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Of course, I would have to speculate on that, and the clerk of the committee could make a much more accurate estimate; but my estimate is that it would amount to about $25,000,000 to $30,000,000, when you take into consideration pay, provisions, and the other appropriations that would be affected.

Mr. DUNBAR. Will the gentleman express his individual opinion as to how a personnel of 67,000 men will compare with the British Navy and the Japanese Navy?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The gentleman from Michigan has gone fully into that, and I agree entirely with his figures, which we carefully went over together. When we exclude from the English Navy the figures he excluded, the coast guard and other items, in order to make the figures fairly comparable, the number of men which the British Navy intends to keep in its navy during the next fiscal year will about equal the number of men that we provide in this bill—67,000. There will be very slight difference between the two.

Mr. DUNBAR. Then the gentleman makes the claim that if we provide for a personnel of 67,000 men, we can maintain our 5–5 ratio with Great Britain?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I maintain it absolutely, and it is capable of demonstration and I believe has been demonstrated conclusively by the gentleman from Michigan. Our regret is that we are not able to make the same careful comparison with respect to Japan, because of the absence of authoritative figures such as we have as to Great Britain. And when gentlemen argue that it will result in a 2½–5–3 navy, the United States being the 2½, they are arguing that we must double our 67,000 and provide 134,000, otherwise we would not have a 5 Navy according to their basis of calculation.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. LINTHICUM. The gentleman says that the figures have been based on 80 per cent on these battleships.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I say that is what Secretary Denby says.

Mr. LINTHICUM. That the bill carries it out. Do you not think that we ought to have a full complement in case of emergency?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes; in case of war. In case of emergency there are five thousand and some odd men in the active fleet reserve, and by this bill there will be 4,000 more in the active fleet reserve, and there are 200,000 volunteer reservists in this country, with experience in the Navy, who in case of emergency can be drawn on.

Mr. LINTHICUM. And is sufficient appropriation provided in this bill for that?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Oh, no; not for the Volunteer Reserves. In case of war, as always, deficiency bills must be brought in. Never does a Congress in time of peace appropriate for an army and a navy sufficient to prosecute a war; but if an emergency ever arises, if we have to go to war, this Congress will be in session before we go to war, and will as always provide the necessary funds.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield——

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. For a little supplemental statement in answer to the gentleman from Maryland? A great many people do not quite grasp the significance of the word "complement." They think that it is something fixed, something determined. It is nothing of the sort. The complement of a ship is what some officer thinks ought to be on it, and no two of them agree.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. They never have. It is difficult for those gentlemen who would have us turn the Treasury over to the military services of the Nation to realize the financial condition of the country. So far as I am concerned, I do not believe in allowing the representatives of the services, who are naturally enthusiastic as to their professions, to determine what the appropriation should be, nor do I believe with some people that we should have no navy and no army. Between these extremes there is common ground where men of common sense can meet to provide a sufficient navy and army to adequately maintain the security of this country.

I want now to talk to my friends on the Democratic side. My recollection is that our first effort to secure the limitation of naval armament took place in 1916, when we adopted the Hensley resolution and made it a part of the naval appropriation bill.

In the last Congress efforts were made on this floor by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MOORE] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] to provide for the calling of a conference to limit naval armament. The Republican majority disapproved of that, and the amendments were not adopted. The bill went to the Senate, and there the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] succeeded in having an amendment adopted providing for a conference between Great Britain, Japan, and the United States.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. The gentleman will recollect, perhaps, that when these amendments were under consideration the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] said that such a provision would be disrespectful to the President.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I, of course, disagreed with the gentleman from Wyoming. There was no disrespect in it to the President of the United States. But Mr. MONDELL opposed it. When the bill came back from the Senate with the amendment of Senator BORAH every man on the Democratic side of the House was in favor of the Borah amendment, and because of that fact the gentlemen on the Republican side of the House who were in favor of the amendment were able to force the leadership to agree to it. We believed then that we were expressing the sentiment of the country in favor of a limitation of armament. A conference has been had. A naval holiday has been agreed upon. The four-power pact has been agreed upon, and now the people of the country are told by the Secretary of the Navy, speaking, I assume, with the approval of the President, that next year we must spend for naval purposes $400,000,000. If left to them the conference will result only in an increase of naval expenditures during the next fiscal year. My hope is that Members on the Democratic side of the House will not lend themselves to an effort to deny to the people of America the relief from taxation for which they prayed. [Applause.]

The Secretary of the Navy is a great and a good man, and I like him very much; but when I read his statement that "arms have made and kept us a nation" I wished that he might have read the words of Henry Grady, who said:

> I went to Washington the other day, and as I stood on Capitol Hill, my heart beat quick as I looked at the towering marble of my country's Capitol, and the mist gathered in my eyes as I thought of its tremendous significance, and the armies, and the Treasury, and the judges, and the President, and the Congress, and the courts, and all that was gathered there. And I felt that the sun in all its course could not look down on a better sight than that majestic home of a Republic that had taught the world its best lessons of liberty.
> Two days afterwards I went to visit a friend in the country, a modest man, with a quiet country home. It was just a simple, unpretentious house, set about with great big trees, encircled in meadow and field rich with the promise of harvest. The fragrance of the pink and the hollyhock in the front yard was mingled with the aroma of the orchard and of the gardens, and resonant with the cluck of poultry and the hum of bees. Inside was quiet, cleanliness, thrift, and comfort. There was the old clock that had welcomed in steady measures every newcomer to the family, that had ticked the solemn requiem of the dead, and had kept company with the watcher at the bedside. There were the big restful beds and the old open fireplace and the old family Bible, thumbed with the fingers of hands long since still and wet with the tears of eyes long since closed, holding the simple annals of the family and the heart and the conscience of the home.
> Outside there stood my friend * * * master of his land and master of himself. There was his old father, an aged, trembling man, but happy in the heart and home of his son. And as they started to their home the hands of the old man went down on the young man's shoulders, laying there the unspeakable blessing of the honored and grateful father, and ennobling it with the knighthood of the Fifth Commandment. * * * And I saw the night come down on that house, falling gently as from the wings of the unseen dove. And the old man, while a startled bird called from the forest and the trees shrilled with the cricket's cry and the stars were swarming in the sky, got the family around him, and taking the old Bible from the table called them to their knees (the little baby hiding in the folds of its mother's dress), while he closed the record of that simple day by calling down God's benediction on that family and that home. And while I gazed the vision of that marble capitol faded. Forgotten were its treasures and its majesty, and I said: "Oh, surely here in the homes of the people are lodged at last the strength and the responsibility of this Government, the hope and the promise of this Republic."

He was right. And now these people from millions of American homes look to you to prove to them that this armament conference was not a mockery and a fraud. They read that the Treasury faces a deficit of $25,000,000; they know that this means additional taxation to a people who now stagger under the burden of taxation and they hope that the conference, for the success of which they prayed, is to result in decreased and not increased taxation. [Applause.]

Mr. DUNBAR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. No; I can not.

Mr. TINKHAM. Will the gentleman answer just one question?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. No; I have yielded the floor. The gentleman can talk the rest of the day.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TINKHAM].

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Chairman, in making the following statements I represent no one but myself and am alone responsible. [Applause.] The bill is proposed in the name of economy, yet nearly every member of the subcommittee and of the Appropriations Committee in favor of the bill voted in favor of a soldiers' bonus of from three to five billions of dollars against the advice of every financial agency of the Government and placed it upon an uncertain future. It does not lie in their mouth to talk economy. Allow me to say to this committee that it is not economy that has moved them. The bill is the product of propagandized pacifism and an unmanly conception of national defense. Adequate national defense should be one of the first concerns of true statesmanship. In the pacifistic propaganda has appeared the statement that 93 per cent of the national expenditures are for past and future wars. With all of congressional lack of foresight, Government mismanagement and graft, if this amount represents American liberty and freedom, is there one Member here, even the honorable Representatives from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY] and from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], who would subtract from it one dollar? The expense of war is the price of freedom. The reason for the present naval bill, with its great reduction in appropriations, is due to the treaty providing for the limitation of naval armament, an experiment to reduce the contingency of wars, but with no promise of their abolition. The essence of this treaty was a provision which established the so-called 5–5–3 ratio as applied to the United States, Great Britain, and Japan. Eighteen specified capital ships were allowed to the United States as the basis of her fleet. The naval advisers of the Secretary of the Navy believe that a well-balanced fleet with 18 capital ships as a basis would require at least 120,000 enlisted men, but the Secretary of the Navy, governed alone by the pressing and present need of economy, recommended 90,000 men and 6,000 apprentices for 1923. The Appropriations Committee has seen fit to reduce this number to 65,000 enlisted men and 2,000 apprentices. The following are some of the statements publicly made in reference to this number and its effect upon the Navy by the Secretary of the Navy only yesterday:

Should the bill just reported become law it would be a blow to the Navy and to the prestige of the United States. Whatever appropriations of men and money are allowed, the Navy will be administered by the department in an earnest and cheerful endeavor to keep it as effective as possible. I feel that I should be recreant to a plain duty, however, if I did not solemnly warn the American people that the proposed reduction negatives the results of the recent conference, is dangerous to the country's security, and, in my opinion, to the welfare of the world.

If this bill becomes a law it will mean that 5 battleships of the 18 provided for in the treaty must be put in ordinary with caretakers. It will mean that, having gathered the nations together and having conducted to a successful conclusion negotiations intended to establish the relative defensive sea armaments of the different powers, we, from the earnestly insisted upon position of equality with any nation in the world, drop to second or third place. I do not believe in making a mockery of the conference. I do not believe in throwing away our sea power.

We called the conference. We made the proposals. We should abide by the conclusions. Eighteen battleships with their necessary auxiliaries and shore bases were adopted for our defense. With the passage of this bill our international plan goes by the board. It is proposed to cast to the winds the advice of the men who represented us during the conference and made the agreements and the advice of the trained officers of the service.

This bill is a challenge to the common sense of our people. I do not believe it meets the approval of our people. I do not believe such ill-advised economy can have the support of the majority of Americans. Whatever arms may have cost, they have made and kept us a Nation. If the bill passes and we slip from the position of equality in sea power, we shall not again be able to secure support at home or abroad for another conference for world adjustments. If we would sit at the first table in the councils of the nations we must have sea power.

Will this committee follow the honorable Representative from Michigan and his opinion and his conclusions, will it follow the leadership of the honorable Representative from Wyoming, or will it believe that the Secretary of the Navy has stated the truth based upon the most complete expert knowledge and with a heart that beats with virile Americanism, and whose knowledge of his country's international necessities is most clear?

Mr. TINCHER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINKHAM. I do not like to, but I will. [Laughter.]

Mr. TINCHER. The gentleman should not refuse to yield.

Mr. TINKHAM. I yield.

Mr. TINCHER. Will the gentleman state any figures or give any figures as the basis for his statement that those ships will have to be abandoned?

Mr. TINKHAM. I will if the honorable Representative from Kansas will allow me to proceed.

Mr. TINCHER. I would rather have the gentleman state concrete facts rather than generalities.

Mr. TINKHAM. I will state those facts later.

Mr. STEPHENS. Will the gentleman yield for another question?

Mr. TINKHAM. I will.

Mr. STEPHENS. I would like to ask the gentleman if the chairman of the Subcommittee on Appropriations in charge of this bill, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY], has not had long years of experience on the Naval Affairs Committee and should know a great deal about the Navy?

Mr. TINKHAM. I do not challenge the knowledge of the honorable Representative from Michigan, but what I do challenge is the character of his philosophy in relation to American defense.

I desire at this point in my remarks to offer two tables prepared by the Navy Department. The first table shows ships that may be manned with enlisted personnel of 90,000 plus 6,000 apprentice seamen. The second table shows ships that may be manned with enlisted personnel of 65,000.

In the first table it will be noted that the fleet shall consist of 18 battleships, as prescribed by the 5–5–3 ratio. In the second table it will be noted that the fleet shall consist of 12 battleships, 6 less than prescribed by the 5–5–3 ratio. The meaning of this second table is that if 65,000 men are the limit allowed only 12 battleships with a rounded fleet can remain in commission.

Mr. TINCHER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINKHAM. I can not yield.

Mr. TINCHER. You are not going to give the figures, I suppose——

Mr. TINKHAM. I will be very glad to give the complete figures in this table, as the honorable Representative from Kansas has not seen them.

MARCH 18, 1922.

MEMORANDUM FOR THE DIRECTOR OF NAVAL INTELLIGENCE.

Below are shown the ships that may be manned under (1) an enlisted personnel of 90,000 plus 6,000 apprentice seamen and (2) an enlisted personnel of 65,000. Opposite each item is given the number of enlisted men required.

Ninety thousand enlisted strength plus 6,000 apprentice seamen.

1.	18 battleships (95 per cent comp.)	21,239
2.	5 cruisers, second line	3,300
3.	3 light cruisers, first line	1,257
4.	5 light cruisers, second line	1,452
5.	1 aircraft carrier, second line	339
6.	2 mine layers, second line	703
7.	103 destroyers, first line	10,506
8.	26 destroyers, first line (50 per cent comp.)	1,539
9.	10 light mine layers	950
10.	84 submarines, first line	2,579
11.	27 submarines, second line (two-thirds comp.)	430
12.	10 patrol vessels, gunboats	863
13.	5 patrol vessels	462
14.	7 destroyer tenders	3,209
15.	7 submarine tenders	1,882
16.	2 aircraft tenders	536
17.	2 repair ships	860
18.	3 store ships	645
19.	4 colliers	659
20.	10 oilers	1,007
21.	2 ammunition ships	354
22.	8 cargo vessels	756
23.	3 transports	833
24.	2 hospital ships	709
25.	8 tugs, including 6 station ships	340
26.	26 mine sweepers (10 fleet towing, 10 mine sweeping, 3 air tenders, 1 submarine salvage, 1 radio calibration, 1 Bureau of Ordnance, experiment purposes)	1,271
27.	6 auxiliaries, miscellaneous	589
28.	2 fish commission	125
29.	Flag complements	1,111
30.	Fleet aviation	1,100
	Total	61,608

Enlisted strength of 65,000.

1.	12 battleships, first line (95 per cent comp.)	14,244
2.	6 battleships, first line (in ordinary)	1,236
3.	4 cruisers, second line	2,596
4.	3 light cruisers, first line	1,257
5.	3 light cruisers, second line	876
6.	1 aircraft carrier, second line	339
7.	1 mine layer, second line	356
8.	65 destroyers, first line (90 per cent comp.)	6,630
9.	50 destroyers, first line (50 per cent comp.)	2,850
10.	4 light mine layers	380

15.	7 submarine tenders	1,882
16.	1 aircraft tender	286
17.	1 repair ship	430
18.	1 store ship	268
19.	2 colliers	328
20.	7 oilers	763
21.	2 ammunition ships	354
22.	5 cargo vessels	451
23.	3 transports	833
24.	1 hospital ship	361
25.	8 tugs (includes 6 station ships)	340
26.	10 mine sweepers (2 mine sweeping, 7 fleet towing, and 1 air tender)	477
27.	4 auxiliaries, miscellaneous	388
28.	Flag complements	791
29.	Fleet aviation	1,100
	Total	46,000

Mr. TINCHER. I asked you for some other figures.

Mr. TINKHAM. I will give those later.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINKHAM. I can not now. At the end of my remarks I will answer the question if I can.

The underlying principle on which in the future the strength of our Navy must be determined is its strength in relation to Great Britain and Japan, and that strength is not only measured by ships but by men. It is men that fight, and not ships.

The committee bill ignores this basic policy and principle, and bears no reference to the other powers whose strength must determine America's proportion in the fixed ratio of 5–5–3. The average enlisted strength of the British Navy, according to the latest figures obtained by the Naval Intelligence Bureau of the Navy Department, is approximately 110,000 enlisted men. This is 43,000 more than the committee bill provides for the United States Navy. According to Japanese published and confidential information—and I would say here to the honorable Representative from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] that the figure which appears here of 68,252 men in the Japanese enlisted personnel is found in a report in the Navy Department made by the American naval representative in Tokyo, and is official—this is over 1,000 men more than allowed our Navy under the committee bill, which, so far as enlisted man power is concerned, makes the United States third instead of equal to the first. Under the 5-5-3 ratio we should have 110,000 as compared with Great Britain, and 113,000 as compared with Japan. In expenditures the committee bill provides for a total expenditure for the Naval Establishment of $233,224,008. The British naval budget complete is approximately £75,605,866, and the Japanese budget is 393,662,576 yen. Translating these two sums into dollars at the prevalent rate of exchange will give a very much larger appropriation for both England and Japan than is represented by the 5-5-3 ratio. Even this does not give a correct comparison, because it is a well-known fact that a unit of work can be purchased more cheaply in either England or Japan than it can be purchased in the United States.

In reference to Japan's proposition for 68,282 men, our Navy Department officially says:

> This quota is sufficient to man every Japanese ship complete which she is permitted to retain under the treaty and to fully man every ship she can complete by July 1, 1922, and still leaves 35 per cent of the total personnel available for shore establishments, aviation, and training.

In relation to personnel a most serious error, which completely vitiates the report of the committee now before the House, has been made. The report states that on February 1, 1922, there were 12,633 men at shore stations. So far as this goes, it was true; but it told only a comparatively short part of the story. It would give the impression to the casual and uninitiated reader that there were only 12,633 men on shore, when as a matter of fact there were 32,681 men on shore. In other words, there were practically 20,000 men in the Navy not disclosed by the committee report.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Will the gentleman tell the House where the 20,000 were and what useful purpose they were serving? We have about $30,000,000 tied up there.

Mr. TINKHAM. I have a statement somewhere as to those facts.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I will say to the gentleman from Massachusetts, while he is looking for that, that these are hard times and it is quite an item of expense to have 20,000 men floating around if they are serving no useful purpose. I would like to know if the gentleman from Massachusetts can advise as to what the 20,000 men are doing?

Mr. TINKHAM. I believe that the 20,000 men should be kept if necessary to make a well-rounded fleet, in order to carry out the intent and purpose of the treaty, and if they are necessary, and the Navy Department says they are, that this House should provide for them.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I thought the gentleman said that these were on shore.

Mr. TINKHAM. They are interchangeable. The honorable Representative knows that they are at one moment on shore and at another moment afloat. Many of the men that are now on vessels that are afloat will be on shore perhaps within a week.

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman yield for a brief question?

Mr. TINKHAM. Will the honorable Representative in charge of the bill give me the necessary time to complete my statement if I yield?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I shall be very generous to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. TINKHAM. The number actually on shore was 32,861, as will be seen by a reference to page 297 of the hearings. Here are the details; they are furnished upon page 297 of the hearings before the subcommittee. They show a distribution as of January 1, 1922, as follows:

Distribution as of January 1, 1922.

Total afloat		68,138
Total ashore:
Operating force	11,392
General detail, under training, patients in hospitals, prisoners, and students in trade schools	11,172
Receiving ships—
Operating	1,241
General detail	1,642
District vessels	3,352
	28,799
In transit	4,062
		32,861

And yet I submit to this committee that if they will read the report of the subcommittee they would have no knowledge that there were those 20,000 men on shore in excess of the number indicated at shore stations, which is completely misleading.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINKHAM. I do not want to be unfair, but it seems they have been somewhat artfully reported in the committee bill as being at shore stations, without mention of the balance of about 20,000 men.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINKHAM. I will.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. On this list that the gentleman has read there are 4,062 men on their way home, being discharged.

Mr. TINKHAM. It says "in transit." It might be going away from home. [Laughter.]

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. All right. I was advised that they were on their way home, and that there are 3,352 which are assigned to district vessels and counted in the number afloat, so that that makes 7,422 who either had been counted in another place or had been discharged. Does the gentleman think that we ought to provide for those?

Mr. TINKHAM. It does not indicate here that they have been discharged.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Here is a letter from the Secretary, in which it is stated that it is estimated that that number of men, approximately 4,000, were on January 1, 1922, in transit to their homes for discharge. I am sure that that is the situation.

Mr. TINKHAM. That accounts in a small way for some of the 20,000 omitted from mention.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Over 7,000 men, I will say to the gentleman from Massachusetts, is no idle matter.

Mr. TINKHAM. The committee based its calculation for 67,000 upon the complements upon the ships on February 1, 1922. That date was a purely arbitrary date, the last date obtained by the committee before making its report or obtaining its evidence. There was nothing classic about that date or significant, and there was nothing about that date that properly fixed how the Navy should be properly manned if it was to be fully manned and if it was to be manned in accordance with the practice which should be initiated under the treaty recently made in Washington concerning the limitation of armaments.

Now, as a matter of fact, the statement is made by the Navy Department that the fleet at that time had far below its complement, in part due to the summary discharge before that date of over 6,000 men, made necessary in order to avoid a deficiency in the appropriation for "Pay of the Navy." I have mentioned the discrepancy of 20,000 men in relation to the men ashore. I now mention a difference of 6,000 men that are accounted for as being lacking from the fleet upon this arbitrary date, fixed and chosen by the committee to fix the personnel of our Naval Establishment.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINKHAM. Yes.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Does not that entirely explain the 4,000 then in transit; that they were being discharged because of the deficiency in the appropriation, and were going home on that account, and should be taken into account if you had an adequate appropriation?

Mr. TINKHAM. It seems to me so.

The commander in chief of the Atlantic Fleet officially reported that it was impossible to maintain the efficiency of the Navy with the men employed at that time. Does that statement have any influence with the committee as against the arbitrary date and the arbitrary number found present with the fleet on the 1st day of February? Let me read that letter and comment upon it. It has only been read in part by the honorable Representative from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES]. I read:

> UNITED STATES ATLANTIC FLEET,
> U. S. S. "MARYLAND," FLAGSHIP,
> Navy Yard, New York, N. Y., April 3, 1922.
> From: Commander in Chief.
> To: Secretary of the Navy.
> Subject: List of personnel required on board ships to maintain units ready for war.
> Reference: (a) Secnav dispatch 0003-1235 (April).
> 1. In reply to reference (a), the vessels of the Atlantic Fleet had on board on January 1 about the following percentages of their complements:
>
> (a) Battleships, 80 per cent.
> (b) Destroyers (active), 84 per cent; destroyers (reserve), less than 50 per cent.
> (c) Other vessels, 85 per cent to 100 per cent.
> 2. Soon after arrival in Cuban waters, when the personnel on board the battleships (exclusive of the Florida) had by additions received from the United States been brought up to about 89 per cent, the following conditions existed:
>
> (a) There were no loading crews for one entire broadside of the torpedo defense battery.

(b) There were insufficient men in handling rooms of turrets to keep up the shell supply.

(c) There were insufficient men in the magazines to comply with safety precautions as regards handling of powder and to provide the rapid flow of powder required in action or for the training necessary to insure this.

(d) Full speed was not possible for a period exceeding four hours, as there were not sufficient nonrated men in the engineers' force to run full power for two consecutive watches.

3. The repair force personnel afloat should be increased by 25 per cent in order to make ships self-sustaining. This in the interest of economy.

4. The number of men on board at this time was not regarded as sufficient to efficiently operate ships and keep them ready for war, but only a makeshift number, by which the Navy could operate partially satisfactorily and tide over until such time as more personnel would be available.

5. The personnel on board at this time made it necessary to so far modify target-practice rules that replacement of shell and powder was entirely done away with. Steaming speeds had to be reduced. Some men had to occupy two stations in the operation of the battery.

None of the above can be construed as enabling ships to be kept in readiness for war.

6. Battleships should have on board at all times at least 95 per cent of their full complements in order to operate satisfactorily and to be kept in a state of efficiency and readiness.

Destroyers should have on board at all times between 100 and 105 men, which would put their percentage at about 90.

All other vessels should have on board at all times 100 per cent of their present complements, as their complements have already been reduced to an absolute minimum for the work they are constantly performing; in addition, the repair ships and repair tenders should have the repair force of their complements increased by 25 per cent. Every endeavor has been made to make ships self-sustaining afloat, and to this end repair ships and tenders were assigned a tentative repair complement. Trial with this tentative complement has shown it to be inadequate for the demands on its services and an increase of 25 per cent is warranted by both economy and efficiency.

The above figures apply to the numbers actually on board and available for duty. To this number should be added 10 per cent to cover transfers and replacements.

This presupposes that complements are filled by ratings, as it is impossible to operate with lack of experienced rated men in the various branches.

7. The fleet was not ready for war at this time, and it can not be kept in efficient condition or ready if the number of men allowed are the same as were on board at this time.

H. P. JONES.

You will notice that under "(a) battleships," he gives 80 per cent. Therefore this bill, arbitrarily, absolutely in fixing the data for the personnel, does not make adequate provision, because it is shown from the letter of the commander in chief of the fleet that the battleships were only 80 per cent manned, or 20 per cent less than they should have been. Are Members of this House going to provide for only 80 per cent upon battleships, now that there is to be established permanently an American naval policy?

You will notice also that under "(b) destroyers, active," the figures given are 84 per cent. That is 16 per cent less than 100 per cent.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINKHAM. Yes.

Mr. OLIVER. Does the gentleman recognize any difference between a peace and war time complement on a ship?

Mr. TINKHAM. I think the American Navy should be prepared at all times for any eventuality, and I recognize within certain reasonable limits——

Mr. OLIVER. What are the limits, then, that the gentleman recognizes as the difference between peace and war complements?

Mr. TINKHAM. I am not sufficiently a naval expert to give you that per cent.

Mr. OLIVER. What, then, is the gentleman's reliable information as to what constitutes a war complement for the ships that the gentleman is now discussing?

Mr. TINKHAM. The only information that I have is what I have read.

Mr. OLIVER. So I see.

Mr. TINKHAM. That the commander in chief says the battleships were only 80 per cent manned.

Mr. OLIVER. That is rather an indefinite statement, is it not?

Mr. TINKHAM. From me or from the commander?

Mr. OLIVER. From you and the commander, one or the other, probably both. [Laughter.] Does the gentleman undertake to now say that there should be no difference between the complement carried on a ship in peace and in war?

Mr. TINKHAM. I believe that the American Navy, in accordance with the treaty recently fixing our proportions, should have a full complement, call it war complement or peace complement, as you will, because it is necessary to have a trained personnel; and if war should suddenly break out or occur there must be trained men, and 100 per cent, to man our ships.

Mr. OLIVER. In other words, then, the gentleman undertakes to say that we should have in peace the same complement that we have in war on our battleships?

Mr. TINKHAM. I say that we should have in our establishment a trained set of men large enough to fully man all of our vessels under the treaty.

Mr. OLIVER. Is the gentleman aware that practically all of the men that we now have in the enlisted personnel of the service are trained men, and that they are in the higher grades of the enlisted force, and that comparatively few are in the seventh or lowest grade, and that we have an oversupply, according to Admiral Washington, of highly trained men in all enlisted ratings above the second?

Mr. TINKHAM. To complement what the honorable Representative has said, I know these facts, that 84 per cent of our enlisted personnel changes each two or four years. I know that our enlistments are from two to four years, and that the British enlistments are for 12 years, and the Japanese enlistments are for 10 or 12 years, giving the Japanese and English fleets a personnel much more highly trained at any time than the American fleet.

Mr. OLIVER. The gentleman used the words "our enlisted personnel changes every few years." Does the gentleman use the word "changes" in the sense that the men are separated from the service?

Mr. TINKHAM. I have used the word in that sense.

Mr. OLIVER. The gentleman can read the hearings or obtain from the Bureau of Navigation information that when the word "changes" is applied to what has occurred in our enlisted force within the last two years it means many reenlistments. We provide gratuities for reenlistments, and for that reason we now have in the enlisted personnel a very large number—over and above the needs of the service—of highly trained men. Is the gentleman aware of that fact?

Mr. TINKHAM. Not of the detail as given by the honorable Representative from Alabama, but I think this question is not as vital as the honorable Representative from Alabama is trying to make it.

Mr. HUSTED. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINKHAM. I will yield to the honorable Representative from New York.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I will yield to the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. TINKHAM. I would like to finish my statement.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I will yield to the gentleman 10 minutes more, then.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized for 10 minutes more.

Mr. TINKHAM. I will yield to the gentleman from New York for a very short question.

Mr. HUSTED. Does not the gentleman think that the history of British and Japanese naval policy justifies the expectation that they will keep their navies as efficient as possible under the 5-5-3 ratio?

Mr. TINKHAM. Absolutely, without any question.

Mr. HUSTED. I want to follow that with another question. If we do not keep our Navy as efficient as possible under the 5-5-3 ratio, will not the effect really be to disestablish the ratio against the position given to the United States by the treaty arrangement?

Mr. TINKHAM. That is my theory, and I believe a certainty.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Will the gentleman yield for a very short question?

Mr. TINKHAM. Yes.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Is not this true obviously, that there will be reenlistments for short terms of service in this country in hard times, but that you can not expect reenlistments in normal times, because the men can get larger pay in civil employment?

Mr. TINKHAM. I think that is obviously so.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Is not that the answer to the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. TINKHAM. I think it is at least a partial answer.

This letter which I have quoted, dated April 3, contains the following final paragraph:

The fleet was not ready for war at this time, and it can not be kept in efficient condition or ready if the number of men allowed are the same as were on board at this time.

In 1916 the American pacifists imperiled America and would have brought the world to the brink of destruction had their policies been followed. To-day they are imperiling America and may yet destroy her. Mixed to-day with American pacifism is Japanese propaganda that America may disarm.

Had America not had the power to build the greatest fleet in the world, and had she not had a powerful and efficient Navy in 1922, she could not have dealt with England and Japan at the council table as she did, almost as a dictator. When the treaty for the limitation of naval armament may cease, her influence will approximate the strength of her fleet, and no more.

Present world uncertainty shows the need of national defense, to meet force with force if necessary.

The Washington conference did not abolish war nor pretend to. It produced a written agreement, and under the paper of that agreement there must be something to lean upon, something potent and powerful.

Under the treaty for the limitation of naval armament no country is restricted as to the number of destroyers and submarines which may be constructed. And so great navies can be built by other powers with these most powerful weapons.

Colonel Amery, parliamentarian and financial secretary of the British Admiralty, in presenting the navy budget to Parliament a few weeks ago, said:

> We agreed at Washington to accept terms of equality in navy power with the one nation with which above all others we wish to live on terms of friendship. We regard that equality as not one of competition but of cooperation for maintaining the peace of the world. But even for purposes of that cooperation we, with our traditions and responsibility for the peace of the world, can not afford to be less than an equal. That is the meaning of these estimates.

America has her traditions. America has her Monroe doctrine, her new merchant marine, her new commitments in the Caribbean Sea, and new commitments in China, the Panama Canal, Hawaii, and the Philippines.

American interests require at least a maximum fleet. American sea power must enforce national rights, protect national possessions and preserve peace and order. Even national peace or international peace and security are not alone maintained by a treaty. As I have said, the Washington conference did not abolish war nor pretend to. No paper agreement can change human nature. No contract can control the waxing of strength of one nation and the decadence of another. Pacifists and idealists attempt to deal with the world as it should be. Responsible statesmen have to deal with the world as it is and with actualities.

Other nations support their navies fully under the Washington agreement, and adequate defense is demanded by the American people. America shall not become the third naval power, inferior to England and Japan, when treaty commitments allow her to be one of the two first naval powers, and her position and interests but for the treaty commitments would make her the first naval power in the world.

Men fight, not ships, and the American Navy unmanned is a national liability, not a national asset. We Americans who believe in performing treaty obligations in the spirit they were made, who believe that history teaches lessons which should be followed, say to the pacifists of America, "You shall not pass." [Applause.] Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield one hour to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT].

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, in view of the importance of the question now before the House, I desire to lay before you in a calm and a dispassionate manner what I consider to be the facts that will establish that the Navy is to-day in a crisis. I might even go further and say that under the bill that is reported and now before the House for consideration it is in a strangulation struggle for existence.

At the close of the Civil War, measured by the standard of those days we had a good Navy, and by inattention and indifference it continued to go to waste until it was revived in the administration of Mr. Whitney in the eighties. At the close of the Spanish War we had a good Navy measured by the standards of those days, but by lack of attention it did not progress until we stood number 3. With the program built and building, in military value and efficiency we had a Navy No. 1 in the standard of the naval world. The question of limitation of armament was presented in 1916, and as chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs I had the privilege as well as the pleasure of reporting a provision authorizing the President to invite the nations of the world to a conference and arrive at a basis of agreement for the limitation of competitive construction and to arrive at a standard navy. But the war being in progress, the opportunity did not offer, and during the last year a provision was added by the Senate authorizing the President to call a conference, which I cheerfully supported and voted for. The conference acted, agreed upon a standard, and I want to be entirely frank and honest to the House and to the country, while I was in favor of an international agreement fixing a limitation and establishing a standard, I did not indorse all of the details of the agreement arrived at. I believed that there should be a standard fixed, but to arrive at that standard we should have maintained our best ships until we reached that standard, and to scrap from the bottom instead of scrapping the best ships, retaining the medium, and then scrapping at the bottom.

However, when the agreement was reached I accepted it in good faith, and I stand before you to-day advocating that the standard agreed upon in the conference should be accepted in absolute good faith, living up to it as such, and in that I mean not only that we should not exceed it but that we should live up to it in maintaining the standard agreed upon. I believe that whatever Navy we have, whatever Navy we are permitted to keep and maintain under the conference agreement, should be kept up to the highest pitch of naval efficiency and military value. [Applause.]

Now, that presents the issue that is now before the House. I want to say to you that in my honest judgment the bill as reported not only fails to maintain that standard but will bring the Navy of the United States from a position of five to a position not exceeding three. [Applause.] We may just as well recognize it. I want us to have an American Navy equal in value and in efficiency to the best navy in the world. [Applause.] Now let us deal with this question according to that standard. If we are not going to keep the ships that are permitted to us in proper condition of efficiency, it would be better to sink them, it would be better to dispense with them altogether and keep whatever we are going to keep at a high point of efficiency rather than to keep all of them in a half-way condition. [Applause.]

Now, the question before the House, the crucial question is, will 67,000 men allotted to the Navy accomplish that purpose? I say not. Now, why do I say so? In the first place, gentlemen, the Secretary of the Navy, who is charged with the duty, upon whom rests the responsibility, says to us as emphatically and as positively as it is possible to express it in words, that it will not. Are we not to give any credit, are we not to give any credence to the man upon whom we shall place the responsibility of discharging the trust? Are we to ignore and pay no regard whatever to the Secretary of the Navy? I am sure that I can not be accredited with partisanship when I come before you and say that it is, in my judgment, the duty of this Congress to weigh carefully, considerately, and well the deliberately expressed judgment and opinion of the Secretary of the Navy.

If we can not do so, the alternative, it seems to me, would be for the administration to place in that office a man in whom the Congress could place reliance and rest upon his judgment. Again, every competent and responsible naval officer, without exception, stated solemnly, seriously, earnestly as any language in the possession of human tongue can express it, that 67,000 men will destroy the efficiency of the American Navy, and will leave us on a bare equality with Japan. I ask the same question—are you going to pay no regard whatever to the judgment and the opinion of these men? Is there anything in their past conduct, is there anything that would justify this House in discrediting their opinion deliberately and carefully and intelligently expressed? Let us not be carried away with hysteria. The issue is too great, the result is too important, the consequences are too tremendous for us ruthlessly to ignore the opinions of these men. Have we trusted them in other important matters? Have we not intrusted to them the very honor and the good name and the preservation and safety of the Republic and the country and of its institutions, and yet will we here disregard their judgment upon the cold facts that are presented as to what this will do? Are they not competent to determine these questions? Shall I say that my judgment of how many men are needed upon a ship, how many men are needed upon this type and that type and the other type, is better than theirs? Let us lay aside our prejudices and our predilections, and deal with this matter upon its merits, and rely upon the evidence and testimony as we would in the other affairs of life.

Another thing to which I wish to direct attention is a comparison with other countries. England and the United States under this treaty are to maintain a basis of 5–5, a basis of equality, and what is England doing? How many men does she have, and from what has been said to-day there arises a controversy and a dispute as to the facts.

The evidence which I have here is of date March 25, 1922. The present British Navy, including the officers, men, and marines, 121,400; for colonial navies, 7,289; one-third of the aviation personnel, 11,969; making a total of 140,658. I shall give what is contemplated for next year in a moment. Bear in mind that England's aviation forces are not counted as a part of her navy personnel, but as a matter of fact that about one-third of her aviation forces are operated with and constitute a part of the navy personnel.

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. That amounts to about 10,000 men, does it not?

Mr. PADGETT. Eleven thousand nine hundred and sixty-nine. The active British Navy, marine and personnel, not including reserves, proposed by March 31, 1923—that is the next fiscal year——

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield before he leaves the aviation item?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Assuming for the sake of argument that they do have 30,000 men in aviation in Great Britain as a separate establishment, and assuming as correct that the arbitrary assignment of 11,000, which some officer in our Navy has assigned to the Navy of Great Britain, is that any reason why we should allow 10,000 extra men for the ships of our Navy when we give all of the aviation personnel that is asked for by the Navy Department?

Mr. PADGETT. The statement that the gentleman is giving all that they desire is incorrect.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. For aviation.

Mr. PADGETT. I have a letter here from Admiral Moffat, that I shall call attention to, stating that you are giving but about one-half of what is required. [Applause.] The department has stated here—and you have it in the hearings—that they can allot but 1,100 instead of 6,200 men, on basis of 65,000 enlisted men.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I do not quite understand what the gentleman means.

Mr. PADGETT. The department submitted an estimate in the distribution of the 65,000 men, but they could only set apart 1,100 for aviation.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. That is all they asked for.

Mr. PADGETT. And yet Admiral Moffat says they demand six thousand two hundred and something.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. But the department did not give it to them, and such request came to Congress.

Mr. PADGETT. They had 3,400 this year.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. They will have next year. The men allowed for aviation ashore, plus what we have allowed for the airplane carriers and for the fleet, total every man the Navy Department asked.

Mr. PADGETT. No; they say here they want more than 6,200.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. If you exclude aviation personnel from the British figures and also exclude it from ours, your comparison is fair, but if you take it as a fact that a mere estimate of some naval officer in our department that 10,000 men should be assigned to aviation in Great Britain and then because of that ask for 10,000 men extra for ships, of course you can roll your figures up anywhere you like.

Mr. PADGETT. No; but we are giving the total of the British Navy of enlisted men and of the American Navy, and each should include the enlisted men used for aviation.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Exclusive of aviation, which in Great Britain is separate from both army and navy.

Mr. PADGETT. But when you give it for the United States you include aviation, and it should also be included for the British Navy.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Oh, no; I specifically excluded aviation in my comparison from figures used for both countries.

Mr. PADGETT. Oh, no; they are included in the 67,000 men. You have not given a man above the 67,000.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. The gentleman does not want to misrepresent me. I stated on the floor as clearly as I knew how that the figures given for the United States included aviation and those for Great Britain did not.

Mr. PADGETT. I know; and that is what I am saying; but for Great Britain they did not include aviation, but should be included to make the comparison fair.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. If you exclude the number which we carry for aviation and exclude the number that the British figures carry for the Coast Guard, you have a fair comparison. You are attempting now to bring in 10,000 extra men that you say ought to be assigned to the Navy for aviation, and because of that fact insist that we ought to have 10,000 extra for our ships.

Mr. PADGETT. I am not asking for 10,000 on the sea. I am saying there should be 6,226 on the sea and on shore together; and against that, England has 11,969; and that you do not calculate those in the English Navy.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Where does the gentleman get the 11,969?

Mr. PADGETT. Here they are.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Who gave the gentleman the figures? Who segregated from the 30,000 which he says there are in aviation in Great Britain and allotted the 11,000 for the navy?

Mr. PADGETT. The Secretary of the Navy——

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Of the United States?

Mr. PADGETT. The Secretary of the Navy furnished them to me on information that was received on the 25th of March.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. But he might just as well have made it 15,000 as 10,000. The allotment for 10,000 is purely arbitrary.

Mr. PADGETT. Oh, no; I have more confidence in the Secretary of the Navy than that. [Laughter.] The 11,969 men assigned to the British Navy is the correct number used in the British Navy for aviation duty purposes and is not an arbitrary statement and is an addition to the 98,500 enlisted men. Just here I insert the letter of Admiral Moffett, Chief Bureau of Aeronautics. This letter clearly demonstrates that this proposed bill utterly fails to meet the aviation requirements, a new and very important naval activity:

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
BUREAU OF AERONAUTICS,
Washington, April 8, 1922.

MY DEAR MR. PADGETT: May I draw your attention to the fact that the naval appropriation bill as now drawn up and reported out of the House Appropriations Committee allows only for enlisted personnel to carry on aviation activities on a very reduced scale.

Below is shown the effect of this bill on naval aviation personnel situation:

(A) REQUIRED.

	Men.
There are required to carry on aviation activities on a small scale for the next year	5,262
Of this number there are required ashore	2,655
Of the total there are required afloat	2,607

Of the number required for aviation afloat 1,186 men are required to man the ships needed for aviation duty and also 1,421 men to man the aircraft needed by the fleet.

(B) ALLOWED FOR BY BILL.

The bill as now reported allows for 3,234 men for aviation purposes.

Of this number the bill provides for 2,100 men for aviation shore activities.

Of the total allowed, only 1,134 men are allowed for aviation afloat.

Of the total allowed afloat, only 632 are provided to man aircraft.

Of the total allowed afloat, only 502 men are allowed to man aviation ships (two are allowed for).

(C) ON HAND.

There were on hand February 1, 1922, employed on aviation duty:

	Men.
Total	4,343
Ashore	2,806
Afloat	1,537

This number was short on requirements, as follows:

	Men.
Total	919
Ashore	151
Afloat	1,070

(D) REDUCTION.

As provided by the bill (House Appropriations Committee report on bill), there will be a shortage of aviation enlisted men, as follows:

	Men.
Total	2,028
Ashore	555
Afloat	1,473

(E) EFFECT.

The effect of such drastic reduction of the number of aviation enlisted personnel will be to cripple naval aviation to such an extent that very little can be done for the fleets.

It will not allow even sufficient men to handle the aircraft for which funds are being provided in the same bill.

I can not bring to your attention too forcibly the above situation, and hope that some action will be taken to provide for the number of men required for aviation duties, as laid down in the conservative estimate noted above.

I consider it vital to point out at this time that the British Navy allowance of aviation personnel for the coming year is 11,969, and that Japan, besides proposing a personnel sufficient to man every ship she is allowed to keep under the treaty and every ship she can complete by July 1, 1922, is also providing for 35 per cent of her total naval personnel to man shore establishments, including aviation duty and for training.

Sincerely yours,

W. A. MOFFETT,
Rear Admiral, United States Navy.

Hon. L. P. PADGETT,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Now the British Navy and marine personnel, not including reserves, for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1923, officers and men, 98,500; colonial navies, 7,289; also one-third of the aviation personnel were cooperating with and constituted a part of the naval personnel, 11,969; making a total of 117,758. There is no information of the number of men in the naval communication service, naval recruiting service, or the Royal Indian Marines.

They are not counted in the 117,758. I want to call attention to another matter. England had a reserve on January 1, 1922, officers, 10,332; men, 38,808; making a total of 49,130. They are not counted in the figures I gave a moment ago. And yet, what? They operate 35 oilers, 1 repair ship, and 1 supply ship. In other words those reserves operate 37 ships and are not counted in their 117,758. Add the 38,808 to your 117,758 and you have got 156,556 men in the British Navy available to operate their ships. And yet they come before this Congress and say that with our 67,000 that may be provided by this bill and our 19,500 marines we have got as many as the British have, but you can not make the figures tell any such tale as that. [Applause.] Now, you might as well meet the facts face to face right here.

Mr. YATES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. I will.

Mr. YATES. Will the gentleman please give the source of his information?

Mr. PADGETT. The Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. YATES. I thought that is what the gentleman said.

Mr. PADGETT. I did say that. I have his figures and letter here with his signature to it.

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. I will.

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. Is it not true the Royal Marines serve entirely on board ship, whereas ours serve also on the land?

Mr. PADGETT. I want to call attention to this: There is a very small percentage of the marines of the United States who serve on ships. Perhaps 10 or 15 per cent of them serve on ships and the others serve on land and on expeditionary parties. For instance, we have about 3,000 to-day in Haiti and San Domingo, we have some in China, we have some in South America, and in various countries. They are kind of an international police force, but they are not really a part of the enlisted personnel of the Navy. But count them, if you please; take your 67,000 and take your 19,500 marines and add them together, and it will not add up to the 156,556 that the British Navy has. I will say more than that, my friends——

Mr. NEWTON of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. I will.

Mr. NEWTON of Missouri. If we provide for the 67,000 men, how will our Navy compare in man power with the navy of Japan?

Mr. PADGETT. It is a little bit less. I can give them to you here. Japanese Navy, date January 1, 1922, enlisted personnel, 73,252, and they propose to reduce it to 68,253. In other words, they would have 1,252 more than ours.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir.

Mr. STAFFORD. If we had the same complement of men that we had in 1916 on the various ships that are allowed us under the armament conference and as proposed by the Navy Department, what would be the total enlisted strength of the men on those ships?

Mr. PADGETT. I have not it here, but it would be an entirely insufficient and inadequate number, because since 1916 there have been numerous and multitudinous activities and functions, such as aviation, antiaircraft, submarine, fire control, and various things that will require——

Mr. STAFFORD. Do those additional activities which the gentleman indicates attach to our 18 battleships?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir; that is exactly what they do attach to.

Mr. STAFFORD. May I ask this further question: What was the percentage of the full complement of the force in 1916, when the gentleman was chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, as then manned and the total strength as a fighting unit?

Mr. PADGETT. The officers of the Navy said that it was undermanned.

Mr. STAFFORD. What did the gentleman, as chairman of the committee, recommend as the percentage of the manning of those ships in 1916, when the war was on?

Mr. PADGETT. I do not remember the details.

Mr. STAFFORD. In 1916, when the gentleman had charge, I remember the claim was made on this side against the gentleman that the ships were undermanned, and the gentleman from Tennessee defended it, and he said it was not necessary to have a sufficient number to fill the complement to fighting strength.

Mr. PADGETT. Now, let us get the definition of fighting strength and also of what complement means. A statement was made awhile ago to convey to the House the meaning of the word "complement." It does not mean what this officer or that one may designate, but there are certain duties to be performed, certain functions, certain activities, and it takes so many men to do this and to do that. In other words, there are certain stations upon a battleship, and it requires a given number of men, and a battleship is constructed with a view of having that number of men assigned to it. Now, then, what is known as the complement——

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. In a moment. What is known as the complement of the ship is what is required to properly, fully, and adequately perform the duties that are required of that ship. Now, in time of war, to cover emergencies, they have adopted in a general way the proposition that they would add 10 per cent to that number in order to constitute a reserve for casualties. That is called the "war complement." But the peace complement is the number that is required to perform properly and efficiently the different functions and activities upon the ship.

Mr. STAFFORD. Did we have that full complement in 1916 when the gentleman was chairman of the committee?

Mr. PADGETT. We did not.

Mr. STAFFORD. What percentage did we have?

Mr. PADGETT. Perhaps about 90 per cent.

Mr. STAFFORD. Was it not under that?

Mr. PADGETT. I do not remember exactly.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think the charge was made on the floor that it was much under that.

Mr. PADGETT. It may have been. I do not remember. If it was wrong then, is there any reason why we should not profit by it? [Applause.]

Mr. STAFFORD. We were threatened with war then, and we are not so threatened to-day. We have entered into a peace treaty.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. When I first came to the House it was my good fortune and pleasure to serve with the gentleman——

Mr. PADGETT. My association with the gentleman officially, personally, and in every way, has been delightful.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I reciprocate the feeling. I was about to say to the gentleman that one of the earliest things that I heard about when I went on the Naval Committee was the controversy relative to the proper complement for ships. As I remember it at that time, Admiral Blue was chief of the Bureau of Navigation, and he had a very different opinion of what a ship's quota ought to be from that held by other officers of the Navy. It was very much lower than the quotas fixed by the General Board of the Navy.

Mr. PADGETT. That is correct.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. The gentleman from Tennessee always agreed with Admiral Blue——

Mr. PADGETT. In many things I did.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. And defended the numbers which he placed upon the ships.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. And I remember that the question of accommodating all that some of the officers wanted to put on a ship arose; that there was no place for them to sleep; and Admiral Blue said he did not know, and the gentleman from Tennessee acquiesced and said that he did not know either.

Mr. PADGETT. I do not know about the sleeping part of it. It is true that Admiral Blue advocated a smaller number than the General Board of the Navy. And we had before it Admiral Fletcher, and Admiral Fletcher testified to a larger number than Admiral Blue, and after he had gone back to the fleet he wrote me a letter, a copy of which I have here, and which is also in the hearings, in which he called my attention to the fact that he had wholly underestimated the number that were required upon the Atlantic Fleet at that time—some more than 5,000 men that should be added.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Was it not also true that the Secretary of the Navy, because of this wide diversity of opinion as to the proper complement of ships, appointed a committee of naval officers to see if they could not get together on the matter?

Mr. PADGETT. A board.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. A board; to somehow determine how many men it did take to man one of these ships. Successive captains on the same ship were often wide apart as to the number of men required.

Mr. PADGETT. The Secretary appointed a board known as the Mayo Board, and that board officially reported and said that there was a necessity for and a use for the larger number of men.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Another board, made up of other officers, might easily arrive at a different conclusion. The question of quota is a matter of opinion.

Mr. PADGETT. It is not. It is a matter of duty to be performed on board a ship.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Why do they not all arrive at the same conclusion?

Mr. PADGETT. Because one may have a different idea from another of duties that men may perform. But let me call attention to another fact, which is that since 1916 there have been multiplied activities which have arisen. The submarine question has developed during this last war; the aviation question, with all of its responsibilities and all of its duties, has developed and multiplied enormously; and then there is the radio and communications, control of gunfire, and all that.

Mr. ROGERS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. ROGERS. The gentleman was perhaps diverted when he was discussing the size of the enlisted personnel of the British Navy. I understand that within the next year there are to be reductions.

Mr. PADGETT. I called attention to that. I gave first about 140,000 that they have now. They have——

Mr. ROGERS. If the gentleman gave them, I did not catch the 1923 figures.

Mr. PADGETT. The 1922 figures are 140,658, and they propose to reduce them to 117,758.

That does not, I say, include the reserve of 38,000 that I called attention to, and these reserves operate 35 oilers and 2 other ships, making 37 all told.

Mr. ROGERS. The gentleman thinks it is not fair to compare those with the 117,000 to which the British Navy was to be reduced a year hence?

Mr. PADGETT. That is what I called attention to, the character of the enlisted personnel.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. As to the question of quotas, I am not able to follow the gentleman in his statement that it is a settled thing. I think the gentleman has proven that it is not. But I wanted to know whether or not the gentleman does not think that after all it is a question of opinion among naval officers?

Mr. PADGETT. It is a question of the duties to be assigned to the men to be performed on a ship. For instance, here is a ship that may have radio on it.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. They all have it.

Mr. PADGETT. Some may not. The quota may vary. That is just what it is doing. In 1916 they did not have radio; now they do have it.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Then they had only eight hundred and odd men on a ship; now we have an average of over 1,000 to a battleship, besides the marines.

Mr. PADGETT. They had a little over 800.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes; and now these ships have an average of over a thousand. Does not the gentleman think that fairly recognizes the new duties?

Mr. PADGETT. No; I do not.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. And would not the 100 additional marines help out?

Mr. PADGETT. Right here I have a statement showing the number of men for each ship. The Delaware had, in 1916, 830. Now she is allowed 1,116. The North Dakata had 830. Now she has 1,116, and the hearings show the number required by each battleship and also the other types of ships.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is that the fighting strength?

Mr. PADGETT. Here is the Tennessee; allowed 1,208.

Mr. STAFFORD. Do the numbers just given represent the fighting strength?

Mr. PADGETT. That is the number given to perform the actual duties of the ship.

Mr. STAFFORD. That is the full complement?

Mr. PADGETT. That is the full complement; but if we were in war, they would add not less than 10 per cent to that to meet casualties, because in a battle or in trouble they might have need, and likely would have need, for more men.

Mr. STAFFORD. Can the gentleman give the quotas of 1916 in accordance with the quotas arranged by the Bureau of Navigation at that time?

Mr. PADGETT. I have not the figures. They were published at that time. They were, as I say, smaller than they are now, because the activities were fewer.

Now, let me call attention, if I may, to another matter that I have here, and that in reference to the enlisted personnel, the character of the enlisted personnel. Out of 119,205 enlisted men in our Navy at the end of the last fiscal year, ending June 30, 1921, 99,401 had less than four years' experience in the Navy, and 87,291 were under 24 years of age.

Now, then, compare that with the personnel of other navies. This means that the United States Navy is largely composed of boys in comparison with the more seasoned personnel of Great Britain and Japan.

In comparison with this, Great Britain had 68,361 men serving a 12-year period of enlistment and 21,000 more with service experience of between 12 and 24 years. Now, then, my friends, we have the great body of our enlisted men with less than four years' experience going in to man the ships in comparison with the trained, seasoned, developed men in the Japanese and in the British Navies.

Now, I want to call your attention to another thing, gentlemen. It just occurs to me. I had intended to speak of it a little bit earlier. We established the 5-5-3 basis alone, absolutely and exclusively, on the tonnage basis of battleships. We left out altogether the question of speed and the question of gun power. No consideration whatever was given, if you please, to the reserve power of those countries in their maritime conditions and relations. All of that was ignored, and we placed the basis alone upon tonnage. Now, wait and just see a little interesting matter that I have right here somewhere.

Mr. OLIVER. Will the gentleman elaborate that thought, so as to give us the opinion that he holds, that the power operates to the disadvantage of America?

Mr. PADGETT. The United States will be outclassed in the treaty navy, for the table contains the names of 14 vessels in the British Navy with a speed exceeding 21 knots, while the entire list of capital ships of the Japanese Navy have a speed in excess of 21 knots. In the matter of gun power the United States Navy has now but one ship, the Maryland, with 16-inch guns, which will be increased to three when the Colorado and the West Virginia are completed. All the remaining vessels in the United States have 14-inch guns or less. The British have 15 vessels with 15-inch guns and the Japanese have 2 with 16-inch guns.

Now, my friends, I call your attention to that for this purpose——

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Will the gentleman state the speed of the ships of the British Navy?

Mr. PADGETT. It is in excess of ours.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. A great deal in excess?

Mr. PADGETT. A knot and a fraction, or a fraction of a knot.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman say that the officers of our Navy, when they said we were getting an equal quota with the British or Japanese navy, were mistaken?

Mr. PADGETT. No; I do not mean that.

Mr. MANN. If their ships are faster and better armed than ours, what is the meaning of that?

Mr. PADGETT. Those are the facts. I understand in talking with naval officers in private conversation they do not agree with all the things that are done.

Mr. MANN. The officers you talked with did not agree, but the Navy did agree, and it was done upon their recommendation.

Mr. PADGETT. I was just telling the facts.

Mr. MANN. I was wondering whether we could rely upon the facts they gave.

Mr. PADGETT. We agreed on the 5-5-3 basis on tonnage. With these facts before us, can we assume the responsibility of cutting down the personnel, in addition to these other things that I have called attention to? These other considerations emphasize the necessity and importance of keeping the ships of our Navy well manned and in an efficient condition.

Mr. SWING. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. SWING. Responding to the inquiry of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], my understanding was not that we had actually attained the 5-5-3 ratio at the present time but that at the end of the 10-year period we would have come along to the 5-5-3 ratio in ships.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. LAZARO. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. PADGETT. I yield to the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. LAZARO. In comparing the navies of Great Britain and the United States we should take into consideration also the trained seamen that they have on their merchant ships, who can be used in the Navy in case of emergency.

Mr. PADGETT. I called attention to that when I referred to their maritime conditions and circumstances.

Mr. OLIVER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. OLIVER. My understanding is that the General Board whom the gentleman has quoted are of the opinion that we should now have 120,000 men in the Navy in order properly to man the ships so as to maintain this parity of 5-5-3. Does the gentleman share that opinion?

Mr. PADGETT. I do not know as to the 120,000, but I will state that in my opinion the number asked for by the Secretary of the Navy, 90,000 enlisted men and 6,000 apprentice seamen, will not fully man the Hughes Navy, as we refer to the Navy that is permitted under the conference agreement.

Mr. OLIVER. So if the General Board have in fact recommended 120,000 men as the minimum number who should man these ships, I assume that the gentleman's opinion would be that we should have that number.

Mr. PADGETT. No; I do not necessarily say that, because there are some minor ships that we can afford to put in ordinary or put out of commission under caretakers.

The Secretary of the Navy stated that he needed 106,000 men properly to man the Hughes navy, but that by strict economy and reductions here and there he had cut out 10,000 men, and that he could operate with 96,000 men, but that he would have to tie up some of the less important ships.

Mr. OLIVER. Just one further question. The gentleman made a very interesting statement in the opening, in which he said that since we have now discarded a number of our finest ships it is of the utmost importance that we efficiently man all that we have left.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. OLIVER. So that then, if that statement of the gentleman be correct, and he insists on that being correct, surely he would not be in favor of cutting down from 106,000 to 96,000?

Mr. PADGETT. I might do it reluctantly, facing conditions——

Mr. OLIVER. You would not sufficiently man the Navy if you should cut down the personnel 10,000 men?

Mr. PADGETT. There are a number of torpedo boats that would be laid aside in ordinary and in reserve. There are some submarines and other minor craft that would be laid aside. But when you cut to 67,000 men you have got to lay aside five or six of your capital ships that go right to the very heart and essence and being of the American Navy. [Applause.]

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. In 1916 the gentleman had charge of the appropriation bills for the Navy?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; I had charge of them until the people went wrong. [Laughter.]

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. The number of the naval personnel appropriated for them was sometimes 45,000, sometimes 50,000, sometimes as high as 54,000. At that time the Navy Department had on board our battleships almost 19,000 men. They have on board battleships now less than that number with 96,000 men in the Navy. Why does the gentleman think that with a Navy of 54,000 or less we could keep 19,000 men on the battleships, and with 67,000 men in the Navy we could keep only 14,000 men on the battleships?

Mr. PADGETT. The Navy Department want 21,158 men on the 18 battleships.

Mr. OLIVER. But the gentleman said that if we cut the personnel down to 67,000 men you have got to lay up five battleships?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. That reduces the number to 13. If you have 1,200 men on a ship that would be about 15,000 men. But in the days when the gentleman was chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs and the personnel of the Navy was 50,000, we had 19,000 men on battleships, and we had 86 destroyers and the usual complement of other ships, which we have not increased very much if any since that time.

Mr. PADGETT. We have increased the number of ships very much.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. They are asking for only 103 destroyers.

Mr. PADGETT. They are asking for 103 and 23——

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Twenty-three in half commission.

Mr. PADGETT. And then are asking for those simply as a last extremity to meet your wishes as far as they can.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I wonder if my good friend, the former chairman of the committee, gets my question. I wonder why it is that when he was chairman of the Naval Committee, and provided for 50,000 men in the Navy, the Navy Department could find 19,000 men for the battleships, but when it is proposed to give them 67,000 men they say they can find only 13,000 or 14,000 men for battleships.

Mr. PADGETT. Oh, you have got a great many more ships now.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. The difference between 86 and 103 destroyers is not great in personnel.

Mr. PADGETT. I do not remember how many; but there are so many others; and, as I stated before, the battleships now have so many more activities.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. But we had so many more battleships then that we were keeping in commission. We had 11 of the same 18 we are to keep under the treaty at that time.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; but the gentleman is forgetting that instead of the Navy being reduced by this process the battleships and other ships actually increase the Navy over the 1916 program in the number of ships. On page 7 of the committee report it appears that July 1, 1916, there were in the Navy 47 destroyers instead of 86, and that we now have in the Navy 301 destroyers.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. No; I have stated the number—86 destroyers—and the difference between that and 103 is not great. They kept 19,000 men on the battleships with that small personnel. And yet the gentleman says with 67,000 they can keep but 14,000 or 15,000 men on the battleships.

Mr. PADGETT. I gave it according to the figures of the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. The gentleman is even better informed than the Secretary of the Navy, who has only had one year as Secretary. The gentleman is one of the best informed men in the country on the Navy, and I would like his opinion as to why it is that with 67,000 men in the Navy they can not put more than 14,000 on the battleships when in his day they put 19,000 on the battleships with only 50,000 men in the Navy.

Mr. PADGETT. We had then a considerable number of battleships that had a reduced complement, and the Secretary of the Navy is providing for adequate complement to meet the new conditions that have arisen, the new duties to be performed, and it requires a larger number of men on the battleships than it did then. On the 18 battleships it requires 21,158, and then upon your cruisers—here is a detailed tabulated statement that you have had printed in your hearings, in which the Secretary has gone into details and given you every ship by name, the type, and shown you the duties that that ship is to perform, the number of men that are required; and yet when the Secretary of the Navy gives you that detailed information and the chiefs of the bureaus and the Chief of Navigation, and all the responsible officers come to you with their experience, with all their knowledge and information, giving you the details of it, you absolutely ignore it and print in your committee report a tabulated statement of the number of men at a time when they had been reduced to the minimum by a discharge of more than 6,000 men.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Four thousand men.

Mr. PADGETT. They tell me that it was reduced by 6,000. Here is the whole position of the committee as taken—and I do not mean it in any way except the most pleasant—you have taken a short yardstick to measure the cloth, and then you are insisting that the result of your measurement is correct and that the total is accurate. It can not be, because you have ignored the duties and functions and activities of the ship, the responsibilities that rest upon it and the duties it has to perform, all of which are essential and needed.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I am sorry to interrupt the gentleman again, and I have taken more of his time than perhaps I should, but I will give him more time. If the Navy Department with 96,000 men or 100,000 men found it necessary for one reason or another to discharge 4,000, reduce it to 96,000, does the gentleman think that any management of the Navy such as is likely to exist there, with these high-class naval officers in active charge, would go to the picked fighting ships of the fleet and take out these 4,000 men and pass by the tugs and yachts and shore stations where there were tens of thousands of men less valuably placed? Does the gentleman think that they went into the line of the Navy and took out 4,000 men and depleted the fighting ships rather than select out men on shore? Does the gentleman indict the Navy management that way?

Mr. PADGETT. There is no indictment of the Navy Department.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I understood the gentleman to say that the reason for what he calls an insufficient number on the ships of the fleet was because they had discharged 4,000 men before their terms expired.

Mr. PADGETT. I did not say before their terms expired.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. That was the fact, and therefore that they went and pulled them out of the battleships and destroyers and left the minor vessels and shore stations untouched.

Mr. PADGETT. What I said was that the Navy had been reduced by 6,000 in its enlisted personnel.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I will correct the gentleman; it was 4,000. I am asking the gentleman this plain question: I understood him to say that the figures showed that the personnel on board these ships was lower than it should have been because the Navy Department had discharged 4,000 men out of 100,000, and that they had been taken off the fighting ships. Does the gentleman believe for a single moment that any intelligent management of the Navy, if it had to reduce the Navy 4,000 men would take them out of these ships, the backbone of the Navy, to make that reduction, or does he think that they would take them from shore stations where they were performing less useful service?

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. I will.

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. The minority in the report say that it was 6,000 men and that their discharge was made necessary to avoid a deficiency in the appropriation to pay the Navy.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. The order was to take out 6,000 but they took out only 4,000, according to the Secretary's letter dated March 29, 1922, in which he said that it was estimated that the reduction in the number of men was approximately 4,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee 10 minutes more. The letter of January 21, 1922, from the Secretary says that it is estimated that approximately 4,000 on January 1, 1922, were in transit to their homes for discharge.

Mr. PADGETT. The Navy was reduced. Just where the men came from I do not know, but I know that at that particular time battleships were short several thousand in their complements that were needed, and the committee has reported a short complement instead of a full complement.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I omitted to read the last sentence of the Secretary's letter, and if you will pardon me I will put that in, because it will make the record complete.

The reports of the actual number of these men had not been received in the department at the time of the compilation of January 1, 1922, so that there were no deductions made from the tables as of that date.

The reports had not come into the Navy Department until after that time, so there were no deductions made in the numbers carried on the ships by reason of this discharge of 4,000.

Mr. PADGETT. I wish to call attention to another matter: The total number of ships of the Navy reserved and permitted to the United States under the conference agreement, known as the Hughes Navy, is 812. The total first cost of those ships is $1,139,341,000. Under this bill as it is reported the number of ships that will not be laid up under the bill is 277, representing a total cost of $598,206,000. The number of ships that will be laid up under the provisions of this bill, if it is enacted with only 67,000 men, is 535, representing a total original cost of $541,135,000. In other words, we are to retain 277 ships and lay up 535 ships, and those that we lay up represent an initial cost of $541,135,000. Is that economy? I need not amplify that. You gentlemen know that if you shut up a house, though you may lock the doors and close the window blinds, yet there is deterioration that is an alarming feature. How much more is it in these great, complicated, delicate implements, with their machinery adapted to steam and electricity, burning coal and oil, with all of the delicate machinery that these ships contain?

Gentlemen, I appeal to your better judgment, to all that is hallowed in our country, let us be considerate and not be swept off our feet by a cry of hysteria that may prevail, which will cost us untold and multiplied millions and millions of dollars. Let us remember that it has taken generation after generation, effort after effort, to build up this American Navy. It did not come in a night. Its morale, its traditions, its history—all of the esprit de corps and all of the honor and the glory and the grandeur and the achievements are proud possessions of the American people, and they represent struggle and trial and effort on the part of the people. Let us hesitate and not with one fell swoop wipe it out. I appeal to you and to your superior judgment, to your intelligence, to your patriotism, to your sense of economy, to preserve for the benefits of our country and our people and our Government what is represented in the American Navy. Only a year or two ago every man in this House and all men and women in the country were singing the praises of the grandeur and the glory of the American Navy and its achievements and its accomplishments. That was all deserved, and yet in a few short months there has come before us a proposal that we shall shut our eyes to all the past, that we shall close our eyes to the future, and put a strangle hold upon the very life and being of the morale, the personnel, and the matériel of the American Navy. Gentlemen, I appeal to you, I beg of you, do not do it. [Applause.]

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, we are considering a naval bill under conditions that ought to be fortunate. In times past there has been ground for very wide difference of opinion as to the proper size of our Naval Establishment. We have had no real logical established rule or guide, and a man's judgment as to the size and the cost of the Navy was largely from his viewpoint of the interest he had in the Naval Establishment. Someone once asked Abraham Lincoln how long a man's legs should be, and he replied that they ought to be long enough to reach from his body to the ground—a perfect rule; but you could not very well reduce it to inches until you saw the man. Fortunately we now have a rule, a yardstick. The President, responding to the almost universal desire and opinion of the country, called a conference upon the limitation of armaments. That conference fortunately was able to reach a helpful conclusion with regard to the naval establishments of the great powers. The subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations, having charge of this bill, approached the subject before them, as I understand it, with the idea of providing for such a Navy as we were authorized and justified in maintaining under the treaty. In some remarks I made a few days ago I said they had, as I understood it, two major objectives in view, first, that of bringing the Navy expenditures so far as they properly could within a reasonable limit of economy, and second, to abundantly provide for the Navy we are authorized in maintaining under the treaty and for its maintenance in fighting trim, and in providing for it to emphasize, to visualize the fact that there had been a conference on the limitation of armaments, and that that conference had reached a decision reducing navies and their cost, which it was the duty of the committee to present to the country in sums of appropriation that carried unquestioned, irrefutable evidence of those reduced establishments and expenditures.

We all agree, as I understand it, that the Navy we desire to maintain is the treaty Navy, and, that being true, the problem before us should be a comparatively simple one. Certainly it is a problem that we can discuss and settle in the utmost good nature and without hysteria or exaggeration, and, that being true, I have been somewhat surprised at the somewhat hysterical character of the so-called appeals that have emanated from high stations relative to what the committee has proposed. One would imagine that in reporting this bill all was lost, including honor, and that the committee proposed not only to scuttle the ships that are to be sunk or otherwise disposed of under the treaty but to abandon the entire establishment. Among the very remarkable statements that have been made in high quarters is one that particularly challenges my attention. It is stated, and stated solemnly, that this bill, if adopted, would leave us not the 5 establishment, as compared with the 5-3 of Great Britain and Japan, but a 2½, as compared with a British 5 and a Japanese 3 navy. If this bill only gives a 2½ instead of a 5 Navy, then the increase in the personnel can not be discussed in matters of a few thousand. We must double it. The Navy personnel must be not 67,000 but 134,000 men, and these gentlemen of the minority and of the department that are declaring that this is a 2½ Navy are certainly not very logical, when in trying to cure a 2½ Navy they are willing to take a 2⅘ Navy, or a 3.1 Navy, or something of that sort, because that is what it would in their philosophy amount to with the enlargements and increases that they propose. If they really believe what they say and if their deliberate pronouncements are entitled to credence anywhere, they are curiously illogical in not having the courage of their convictions and demanding not an increase of ten, fifteen, or twenty thousand in the personnel but of 65,000 or 70,000, so as to have a Navy for which they say they stand.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I will.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Would the gentleman mind saying who these parties are he is talking about? We would like to know.

Mr. MONDELL. Well, the gentleman is a reader of the newspapers, and I suppose he knows who the folks are who are demanding these increases.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. The gentleman does not refer to the Secretary of the Navy, I hope?

Mr. MONDELL. The fact is that so far as a fighting Navy afloat is concerned, there is very little difference of opinion between the committee and others, even those who demand the largest number of men and the largest appropriations. At the utmost two or three thousand measures the difference between the figures of the committee and the figures of the Naval Establishment relative to the men afloat.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. The real trouble comes as to the number of men we need ashore, in the snug harbors; just how large a dry and well-anchored Navy we may need. I will yield to the gentleman if he will be brief.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. The gentleman did not have this situation in mind the other day when he made his speech on Executive and congressional harmony, did he?

Mr. MONDELL. I am glad the gentleman asked that question, because it reminds me that among the statements in the minority report is a very extraordinary one, in which the minority has assumed to quote the President of the United States. So far as I can recall, it is about the first instance in which a committee has sought to bolster up its plan and purpose by assuming to quote the President or to give his view and opinion, and, if I may say so without giving offense, I would suggest that in the future in writing reports, either of the minority or the majority, it would be much better to follow the ordinary and time-honored custom in the Republic of giving our views and our opinion as to what should be done, rather than to urge views and opinions which, if known, should not be quoted. Our responsibility can not be shifted to any individual or any other body. It is for us to determine, in the light of all the facts, what in our opinion should be done.

Mr. VARE. I suggest that the gentleman from Wyoming might confine himself in the future, then, to the practice of not using names.

Mr. MONDELL. The "gentleman from Wyoming" has so far as he can recall never quoted the President on the floor of the House, and he will not find himself falling into that error in the future. If I were to say anything in regard to that matter, it would be that so far as I know the President of the United States does not have any desire or purpose to say to the Congress of the United States just the number of men that are necessary in the enlisted personnel of the Navy. No one can know as to that until they have carefully considered the facts of the case.

Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming has five minutes remaining.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, an official, widely quoted by the newspapers as not pleased with this bill, has said that we desire and must have in full fighting strength an efficient Navy of the strength fixed by the conference and that it is our duty to sustain the action of the Conference on the Limitation of Armament. With that I agree whole-heartedly. But, unfortunately, some of the gentlemen who claim to take that view would if they had their way provide a Navy personnel and Navy appropriations which would not by a man or a dollar reflect any reduction due to the conference. Gentlemen who are claiming to be in sympathy with that great gathering would, nevertheless, retain as many men and spend as much money as though the conference never met. For one, I feel a tremendous responsibility touching the decisions of the Conference on the Limitation of Armament. I feel that it is the duty of this House, representing the American people, to give to the world visible evidence of the wonderful and triumphant and glorious outcome of that conference. We can only do it by legislation and appropriations that make it clear beyond peradventure that the President called the nations together to reduce naval burdens, that the conference met and unanimously determined on a reduction in size and cost of naval establishments, and it is our duty to proclaim the work of that conference, the glorious consummation of its labors, in reductions carried in this bill. [Applause.]

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I had intended to ask the committee to rise at 5 o'clock, but there are two gentlemen on this side who want to get away to-night, and the time allotted to them is 30 minutes, 20 for one and 10 for the other. So I am going to ask the indulgence of the committee to sit until 5.30, in order that they may be accommodated.

I yield, first, 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. HUSTED].

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, I pretend to no intimate knowledge of naval matters, and consequently can not speak technically on this subject. It would be presumptuous on my part even to attempt to do so. But I do want to discuss this question very briefly from a common-sense standpoint.

It is a case where we have to decide between the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations, on the one hand, and the President of the United States, the Secretary of the Navy, the Assistant Secretary of the Navy, the General Board of the Navy, and every expert in our Naval Establishment, on the other hand, as to a technical question, a question which is peculiarly within the knowledge of the naval experts. That question is as to how many men are needed to man our Navy granted to us under the terms of the treaty at the highest point of efficiency. While I dislike to disagree with the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations, I must say that on a question of this kind, which is a technical one, I am constrained to accept the judgment of the men who have been educated and trained to answer a question of this kind intelligently and correctly.

And especially am I constrained to do so when I find what I believe to be weak spots in the case of the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations. The first weak spot is disclosed in a statement contained in the majority report, which is as follows:

> It was finally decided to ascertain the number of men carried on these identical ships on some recent available date and to be guided largely in providing personnel by the number actually carried upon the ships on the date selected. The Committee on Naval Affairs had gone into this matter of personnel quite extensively only a few weeks ago and had obtained the information, which this committee desired, as of February 1, 1922. The committee, therefore, accepted the figures of that date given to the Naval Committee by the Navy Department.

Now, there is nothing particularly significant about February 1, 1922. It is an arbitrary date, and this subcommittee based all of its calculations on the number of men on the ships on that date. It is obvious, therefore, that if that basis is incorrect the whole calculation is thrown out and is valueless as a guide to this Congress.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUSTED. Certainly.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman know how many men they had in the Navy on that date? There were 96,000 men in the Navy on that date, and if they had not men enough on the ships on that date with the 96,000 men in the Navy they had the men sufficient to put on the ships and did not put them on.

Mr. HUSTED. That is the argument made by the chairman of the subcommittee [Mr. KELLEY], and that is the argument made by the ranking member of the minority of the subcommittee [Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina], and there is no force whatever in the argument. They say if they did not have them on the ships on that date they should have had them on the ships. That is not an argument. The fact is they were not there and that is all that counts. Admiral Jones, the admiral of the fleet, says they were not on the ships on that date. He says there were not enough men on that date to man more than one-half of our broadside guns, and the Secretary of the Navy says that if we use that number as the basis of our calculations we shall have to throw 5 ships allowed by the conference agreement out of commission if the remaining 13 battleships are to be kept at the highest point of efficiency.

The second weak spot is involved in the comparison of naval estimates. The British and Japanese estimates are used as the basis of comparison for next year. It appears that the estimate given by the British is about the same as our estimate, but everybody knows that Great Britain with the same amount of money can employ three times as many men as we can, so that the estimate is not significant at all. And then, in addition to that, we are the Nation that puts our cards upon the table, and they do not. There is not anything in the history of British and Japanese naval policy to justify any other expectation than this—that those nations will maintain their fleets at the very highest point of efficiency under the quota allowed by the limitation armament treaty.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. HUSTED. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman think the conference on disarmament increased the cost of the Navy or decreased it?

Mr. HUSTED. Of course, it decreases it under any suggested plan, and if the plan for 86,000 enlisted men is adopted, it would still decrease it, and it would decrease it very substantially.

Mr. MADDEN. I will say to the gentleman that if the plan he is now advocating is adopted, it will be increased over what it is to-day.

Mr. HUSTED. No; the gentleman is mistaken. The gentleman is very much mistaken. And the statement made by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] is inaccurate, because he says if we double the efficiency we necessarily double the personnel. That is not true at all, because there are two men used at sea for every man used on land, so that you can double the efficiency of your ships without doubling your personnel in the Naval Establishment.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. HUSTED. I do.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I understand the gentleman is advocating a plan which he says is indorsed by the President of the United States.

Mr. HUSTED. Quite correct, as I understand it.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. And I understand the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] says that if that plan be adopted, then the disarmament conference did not reduce expenditures in that direction.

Mr. HUSTED. Well, I do not think that statement, with all the respect that I have for the great chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, is justified. I do not believe that if we provided for 86,000 men, as the President is said to recommend, it would increase the appropriations for the Naval Establishment over what they are at the present time. I believe that they would be substantially decreased. But whether they are increased or decreased, it is the plain duty of the American people to maintain our Navy at the highest point of efficiency under the quota arranged by the treaty. [Applause.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUSTED. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman continues to quote the President, and continues to quote the President very definitely as in favor of 86,000 men. I can not believe that the gentleman has any justification for quoting the President and quoting him definitely.

Mr. HUSTED. It has been stated over and over again in the public press, and——

Mr. MONDELL. Is that all the gentleman has got?

Mr. HUSTED. Well, I have had other indirect information from gentlemen of responsibility and truth.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Does not the gentleman think that when he goes to the extent of quoting the President of the United States he ought first to have heard the President, and in the next place, he ought to have the consent of the President?

Mr. HUSTED. I am only quoting what I have heard, what is published in the newspapers, and what has come to me indirectly. I think any man is justified in doing that, and I am using the figure 86,000 not particularly because the President of the United States is using it, but because the figure 86,000 is what I believe to be the irreducible minimum.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. The gentleman does not say that the President told him that was what he stood for?

Mr. HUSTED. The President has not told me anything about it, but I understand from the newspapers that that is what the President desires.

Mr. VARE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUSTED. Yes.

Mr. VARE. The word of the gentleman from New York has indirectly been questioned.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Oh, no; the word of the gentleman from New York has not been indirectly questioned. The gentleman says he has not any information at all from the President as to his position except what he has read in the newspapers.

Mr. VARE. And what he had reliable authority for. If the gentleman wants to know——

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I would like to know.

Mr. VARE. If the distinguished chairman of this subcommittee wants to know, and if the leader of the House wants to know, I want to say to the gentleman from New York [Mr. HUSTED] that he is stating the absolute facts.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. How does the gentleman know?

Mr. VARE. I am stating that upon my responsibility as a Member of this House. I say so on the responsibility of my membership in this House.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Who told the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the President was in favor of 86,000 men?

Mr. VARE. I repeat to the gentleman that I say that on the responsibility of my membership in this House.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Does the gentleman quote the President of the United States?

Mr. VARE. I repeat again, that I make that statement upon my responsibility as a Member of this House, that the statement which the gentleman from New York makes is correct.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Did the President of the United States tell the gentleman from Pennsylvania that he favored 86,000 men for the Navy? And did the President authorize him to give out his views?

Mr. DEMPSEY. The gentleman is at liberty to answer, but the gentleman from Michigan can not catechize him.

Mr. VARE. I repeat again that I say to the Members of this House upon my responsibility as a Member of Congress that the statement of the gentleman from New York is a true statement of the facts.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. VARE].

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield a moment?

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Chairman, I desire unanimous consent to ask the honorable Representative from Michigan a question.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield to me one minute?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. With the consent of the gentleman from Pennsylvania I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee two minutes.

Mr. VARE. I will yield for that purpose.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. In view of the fact that this very delicate question has been raised, will some gentleman tell us what naval strength the President of the United States stands for?

A MEMBER. Not what he has stood for, but what he stands for to-day.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. VARE] has the floor. Perhaps he can answer the gentleman. He seems to have more information than any of the rest of us on this subject.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Can the gentleman from Michigan tell us whether there is a difference of opinion between the President and the Secretary of the Navy upon this subject?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I do not know anything about that, and if I did I would not say so, unless I had the consent of the President to say it.

Mr. TINKHAM. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. VARE] yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TINKHAM]?

Mr. VARE. Not at this time.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I have yielded 20 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. VARE].

Mr. VARE. Mr. Chairman, if this was not such a serious matter one might consider it amusing. Only a short time ago Members on both sides of the aisle day after day were continually praising the work of the Navy, praising the gallantry of its officers. Yet here to-day we find the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee on appropriations making the statement on the floor of this House that thousands and thousands of men in the employ of the Navy are somewhere and nobody knows where they are. I for one do not believe that is a correct statement of facts.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Perhaps the gentleman can tell us where they are.

Mr. VARE. I do not know. I am not a naval expert. If I was I would be very glad to inform and enlighten the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Very well.

Mr. VARE. This question was discussed more or less in the meeting of the Appropriations Committee on last Saturday. My recollection was that there were only two points in dispute. There did not seem to be any dispute as to the advisability of scrapping numerous worn-out ships—ships that would not be useful in accordance with the future program of the Navy. There was no dispute about that. The only question that seemed to arise was what was an adequate and sufficient number of men to man the ships and shore stations. On the one hand we had the information from the subcommittee, who no doubt, according to their judgment, used their best information. They saw it from their viewpoint. On the other hand we had information from the Secretary of the Navy, the officer who is charged with the management of the Navy. So it is that as a member of this committee who does not claim to be an expert on these naval matters, if I am compelled to choose between these two sources of information, there is only one for me to choose, and that is to follow the advice of the constituted authority who has the responsibility of managing the Navy. I as a member of the Committee on Appropriations am not willing to assume that responsibility. Consequently, when I am in doubt on a question affecting our naval policy, particularly in view of these international agreements which have been so recently entered into, I follow the recommendations of the officer who has the responsibility of managing the Navy.

The United States has gone on record, through the ratification of the agreements reached at the Conference on the Limitation of Armament, as being willing in the eyes of the world to support a Navy of certain strength, not only for its own protection but to help maintain a world police force on the sea, which the best minds of the great naval powers have declared adequate.

We have before us a bill which aims to defeat the very purpose of the conference findings; it aims to decrease the efficiency of the United States naval force to a point where it will stand only equal if not below Japan among the great fleets of the world, instead of maintaining its rank equal to Great Britain as the armament conferees deemed wise.

I base this statement on actual figures. Japan contemplates an enlisted strength for next year of 68,252 men while this bill provides but 67,000 men for the great United States Navy. What Member of Congress wants this condition to exist?

Economy has become necessary that the people of this country might not be burdened with taxes, the result of which is the stifling of business and individual effort. The House Appropriations Committee has practiced economy throughout its deliberations since the beginning of the present Congress. The record made under the direction of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], chairman of the committee, is to be commended. There is such a thing, however, of economy being carried too far. There is a danger point, and that point is reached in this bill.

In short, the provisions made in this bill as reported from the committee are based on a Navy of 67,000 men, including 2,000 apprentices, while the estimates of experts place the necessary figure at 113,000 men that the Navy might be manned in accordance with the arms parley agreement.

In the interest of economy and prompted by a willingness to reduce the Nation's expenses the Secretary of the Navy recommended to this Congress that a force of 90,000 men and 6,000 apprentices be provided. This number would man enough ships and shore stations to provide a well-balanced fleet. The President, in turn, upon the advice of naval experts, has let it be known that he feels any number less than 80,000 men and 6,000 apprentices will be insufficient to maintain a proper force.

There has been practically no concerted opposition to the fundamental aims of the arms conference program. Unfortunately, many persons wish to carry a good thing too far. I fear that the influence of the pacifists has been greater than the influence of the practical man in this matter. It must be remembered that the wonderful results obtained at the arms conference were made possible by the fact that the United States was ready to go any nation of the world just a step better in the construction of navies if the other nations had not been willing to talk terms. It was not our weakness that counted nor could a weak United States have named terms. It was because we were strong and growing stronger.

Secretary Hughes, upon the advice of experts, named the strength of our Navy at the figure agreed upon. Are we going to reduce this strength to a point where the 70,000 trained men the Japanese will have on their vessels will be a far greater strength than our few men and larger number of ships? Are we going to say to the world that we asked for more than we wanted? Are we going to tell the world that we did not mean it when we promised to maintain an adequate naval strength to uphold our part of this international agreement?

The United States is not situated as are the other two great naval powers. We do not have a full quota of trained men in our Navy. To operate on a minimum force we should have a greater number of trained men enlisted. Our Navy at the end of the last fiscal year had 82,849 men who were serving their first enlistment. Another 16,552 had less than four years' experience. This was at a time when there were 119,205 men in the service. Since that time the Navy has been greatly reduced. There were at the close of the last calendar year about 98,000 men in the service, and that has been reduced April 1 by 1,000.

If we are to have a skeleton Navy and are not to be permitted to have a force adequate to man our ships, legislation should be passed which will keep the trained man in the Navy, that the small number some wish us to have will be the most efficient. This would involve further expense in many ways, although in the ultimate result would be less expensive. We are not here, however, to plan for such changes, but to provide an adequate force with the material we have at hand.

The reduction of the naval force would entail losses in material and deterioration of ships which would fastly overcome the slight monetary savings some feel this proposed cut would make. Brought down to hard figures, the economy we observe in this bill is so slight that we must consider the losses in national safety which we must suffer. Our Federal tax to-day is about $40 per capita. The tax necessary to support the Navy is about $4. The reduction in the Navy planned by the Navy Department would lower this figure to about $3. Then a further reduction, which would make our Navy next to useless as a fighting machine and inefficient as an adjunct to the merchant marine, for which we are planning a subsidy, would save about 25 cents per capita for the people of the United States. Is it worth it?

The 5–5–3 agreement places us on a par with the other great navy of the world—that of Great Britain. Great Britain and the United States control the merchant fleets of the world to-day. The reduction planned in this bill, together with the plans of Japan for an increased personnel, would change this ratio to 5–3–3. We should maintain a naval fleet to protect our merchant marine as great as any fleet in the world. The United States exports about $8,000,000,000 worth of American products each year. We can carry a great bulk of this in our own ships if the merchant marine is to be encouraged by a navy for protection in the background.

In all, a Navy of less than 86,000 men is unsafe, not economical in any sense, and would not be authorized with the sanction or approval of those in charge with the administration of the Government, both in its national and international activities. Let us support the administration at this time, when both domestic and foreign problems are acute and there are visions of better understandings.

I have before me a statement issued by Secretary of the Navy Denby commenting on the report of the committee on this bill which I wish to read:

> Should the bill just reported become law it would be a blow to the Navy and to the prestige of the United States. Whatever appropriations of men and money are allowed the Navy will be administered by the department in an earnest and cheerful endeavor to keep it as effective as possible. I feel that I should be recreant to a plain duty, however, if I did not solemnly warn the American people that the proposed reduction negatives the results of the recent conference, is dangerous to the country's security, and, in my opinion, to the welfare of the world.
> If this bill becomes a law, it will mean that 5 battleships of the 18 provided for in the treaty must be put in ordinary, with caretakers. It will mean that, having gathered the nations together and having conducted to a successful conclusion negotiations intended to establish the relative defensive sea armaments of the different powers, we, from the earnestly insisted upon position of equality with any nation in the world, drop to second or third place. I do not believe in making a mockery of the conference. I do not believe in throwing away our sea power.
>
> We called the conference. We made the proposals. We should abide by the conclusions. Eighteen battleships with their necessary auxiliaries and shore bases were adopted for our defense. With the passage of this bill our international plan goes by the board. It is proposed to cast to the winds the advice of the men who represented us during the conference and made the agreements and the advice of the trained officers of the service.
>
> The Navy does not belong to the Navy Department. It does not belong to Congress. It belongs to the American people. My duty to warn against undue reduction in our defensive armament is as sacred a trust as any man can hold. If the people had wanted this Navy so far below the standard agreed upon in the treaty, they should have said so long ago. There would then have been no need for the conference, and we would have been better off without one. What would the people and Congress have said if the conference had proposed by treaty to reduce the number of men in the American Navy to approximately two-thirds of the number in the British Navy and less than the number in the navy of Japan?
> This bill is a challenge to the common sense of our people. I do not believe it meets the approval of our people. I do not believe such ill-advised economy can have the support of the majority of Americans. Whatever arms may have cost, they have made and kept us a nation. If the bill passes, and we slip from the position of equality in sea power, we shall not again be able to secure support at home or abroad for another conference for world adjustments. If we would sit at the first table in the councils of the nations, we must have sea power.

It is on the President's figures, the lowest possible estimate, that I wish to base my contentions. To maintain this force and to provide for repairs of ships and the proper conduct of our navy yards and stations, increased appropriations for other items in this bill will be necessary. The present appropriations provided for in the bill are inadequate for the maintenance of a trained repair force at our navy yards. This force must be maintained for times of emergency.

In speaking of maintenance of navy yards I know whereof I speak. I was born and raised within a mile of the Philadelphia Navy Yard and have made a close study of navy-yard activities all my life. I have watched the Philadelphia Navy Yard grow from a small navy station in its earliest days to one of the greatest industrial plants of the world. Within its gates are building and repair units adequate to care for the Navy's needs in time of peace or war. It has maintained an efficient organization.

This bill, with its skeleton force of men and its reduced appropriations for the conduct of the navy yards, would destroy the efficiency of this great plant. The employees would be forced to other fields—would be forced to seek employment in other plants, and in time of stress would find the yard lacking in both the economy and efficiency of operation it now enjoys.

When this bill is considered under the five-minute rule I intend to present an amendment which will provide for an adequate Navy of 80,000 men and 6,000 apprentices as is desired by the President, and I hope the House will see the wisdom of approving such appropriations. [Applause.]

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. TOWNER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 11228, the naval appropriation bill, and had instructed him to report that they had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVES OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. WALSH, for one week, on account of death in his family.

To Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee, indefinitely, on account of official business.

To Mr. HERRICK, for two days beginning Tuesday morning, in order to attend to pressing private business.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, April 11, 1922, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

586. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report on preliminary examination of Morattico Creek, Lancaster County, Va.; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

587. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a tentative draft of a bill to validate an agreement between the Secretary of War, acting on behalf of the United States, and the Washington Gas Light Co.; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. VOLSTEAD: Committee on the Judiciary. H. Con. Res. 53. A concurrent resolution to create a joint committee of the Senate and House of Representatives to determine what employment can be furnished Federal prisoners, and for other purposes; with amendments (Rept. No. 890). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. VOLSTEAD: Committee on the Judiciary. H. R. 10768. A bill to amend an act entitled "An act to punish the unlawful breaking of seals of railroad cars containing interstate or foreign shipments, the unlawful entering of such cars, the stealing of freight and express packages or baggage or articles in process of transportation in interstate shipment, and the felonious asportation of such freight or express packages or baggage or articles therefrom into another district of the United States, and the felonious possession or reception of the same," approved February 13, 1913 (37 Stat., p. 670); without amendment (Rept. No. 891). Referred to the House Calendar.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. HUSTED: A bill (H. R. 11243) to designate a building site for the National Conservatory of Music of America; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. OLDFIELD: A bill (H. R. 11244) authorizing the construction of a bridge across White River in the State of Arkansas; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. PARKS of Arkansas: A bill (H. R. 11245) to continue the land office at Camden, in the State of Arkansas, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. RAKER: A bill (H. R. 11246) to rebuild the school building of the Indian school near Greenville, Calif.; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. BLAND of Virginia: A bill (H. R. 11247) to authorize the Secretary of War to sell real property at Fort Monroe, Va., formerly deeded to the Government by James A. J. Bradford; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. COLLIER: A bill (H. R. 11248) to amend section 90 of the Judicial Code of the United States, approved March 3, 1911, so as to change the time of holding certain terms of the district court of Mississippi; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. RAKER: A bill (H. R. 11249) to provide for the establishment and maintenance of a forest experiment station in cooperation with the University of California; to the Committee on Appropriations.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11250) to provide for the establishment and maintenance of a forest experiment station in cooperation with the University of California; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. MILLS: A bill (H. R. 11251) for the taxation and registration of motor vehicles; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. HUDSPETH: A bill (H. R. 11252) to amend the War Finance Corporation act, approved April 5, 1918, as amended; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. COLE of Ohio: A bill (H. R. 11253) granting an increase of pension to Sarah Rice; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois: A bill (H. R. 11254) granting an increase of pension to Ira Howell; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. KING: A bill (H. R. 11255) granting a pension to Jane Ritchie; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LEHLBACH: A bill (H. R. 11256) for the relief of Alexander H. Robertson; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. MOORE of Illinois: A bill (H. R. 11257) granting an increase of pension to Mary A. Anderson; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. PURNELL: A bill (H. R. 11258) granting an increase of pension to Lucinda Brown; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. REAVIS: A bill (H. R. 11259) for the relief of Roy M. Cleveland; to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. SEARS: A bill (H. R. 11260) granting a pension to Susan M. Worthing; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SNELL: A bill (H. R. 11261) granting a pension to Elsie M. Pool; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SNYDER: A bill (H. R. 11262) to cancel an allotment made to Mary Crane, deceased, embracing lands on the Winnebago Reservation in Nebraska; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. THOMAS: A bill (H. R. 11263) granting an increase of pension to Mattie Roberts; to the Committee on Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

5028. By the SPEAKER (by request): Resolution adopted by the city council of the city of Boston, protesting against the closing of the Charlestown (Mass.) Navy Yard; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

5029. By Mr. CAREW: Resolution unanimously adopted by the Rotary Club of New York City, relative to the reestablishment of the pneumatic mail tube service in the city of New York; to the Commitee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

5030. By Mr. CRAGO: Resolutions adopted by the Pennsylvania State College, of State College, Pa., urging that Congress authorize and empower the Secretary of War or the Secretary of Commerce to make such investigations as may be necessary to determine what substance of whatever nature are thrown or deposited into the navigable waters of the United States or any tributaries thereof in such manner as to endanger or interfere with navigation, commerce, or fisheries; to the Committee on Rules.

5031. By Mr. FROTHINGHAM: Resolution from the Boston City Council, of Boston, Mass., protesting against the closing of the navy yard at Charlestown, Mass.; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

5032. Also, resolution adopted by Dorchester (Mass.) Board of Trade, urging passage of House bill 7400, relative to the quality of domestic anthracite coal; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

5033. By Mr. HADLEY: Petition of certain citizens of Bellingham, Wash., opposing the passage of House bill 9753, and other Sunday bills; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

5034. By Mr. LAMPERT: Resolution of the Citizens' Civil Council of Milwaukee County, Wis., indorsing the St. Lawrence River project; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

5035. By Mr. LUCE: Petition of Rose Standish Council, No. 12, Daughters of Liberty, urging passage of the education bill; to the Committee on Education.

5036. By Mr. SNYDER: Resolution of the Rome (N. Y.) Chamber of Commerce, deprecating any lowering of the efficiency of the Army or Navy or the effectiveness of the reserves; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, April 11, 1922.

(Legislative day of Monday, April 10, 1922.)

The Senate met in executive session at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess. After 2 hours and 20 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

WORLD WAR FOREIGN DEBT COMMISSION.

In executive session this day, following the confirmations of Senator REED SMOOT and Representative THEODORE E. BURTON to be members of the World War Foreign Debt Commission, on request of Mr. WALSH of Montana, and by unanimous consent, the injunction of secrecy was removed from the vote by which Senator SMOOT and Representative BURTON were confirmed.

The vote on confirmation resulted—yeas 47, nays 25, as follows:

YEAS—47.

Ball	France	McCumber	Poindexter
Broussard	Frelinghuysen	McKinley	Rawson
Bursum	Gooding	McNary	Shortridge
Calder	Hale	Moses	Spencer
Cameron	Harreld	Nelson	Sterling
Capper	Jones, Wash.	New	Sutherland
Colt	Kellogg	Newberry	Townsend
Cummins	Kendrick	Nicholson	Wadsworth
Curtis	Keyes	Norbeck	Warren
Dillingham	Lenroot	Oddie	Watson, Ind.
Edge	Lodge	Page	Willis
Fernald	McCormick	Pepper

NAYS—25.

Ashurst	Harrison	Overman	Underwood
Borah	Heflin	Owen	Walsh, Mont.
Caraway	Hitchcock	Pomerene	Watson, Ga.
Dial	Jones, N. Mex.	Sheppard	Williams
Fletcher	La Follette	Simmons
Glass	Myers	Swanson
Harris	Norris	Trammell

NOT VOTING—24.

Brandegee	Gerry	Phipps	Smith
Crow	Johnson	Pittman	Smoot
Culberson	King	Ransdell	Stanfield
du Pont	Ladd	Reed	Stanley
Elkins	McKellar	Robinson	Walsh, Mass.
Ernst	McLean	Shields	Weller

So Senator REED SMOOT and Representative THEODORE E. BURTON were confirmed as members of the World War Foreign Debt Commission.

Mr. DIAL, when his name was called, announced his pair with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PHIPPS], transferred the same to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], and voted "nay."

Mr. HARRISON transferred his pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] to the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] and voted "nay."

Mr. McCUMBER transferred his pair with the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] to the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LADD] and voted "yea."

Mr. MYERS transferred his pair with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLEAN] to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] and voted "nay."

Mr. NEW transferred his pair with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] to the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CROW] and voted "yea."

Mr. STERLING transferred his pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] to the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WELLER] and voted "yea."

Mr. SUTHERLAND transferred his pair with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] to the Senator from Oregon [Mr. STANFIELD] and voted "yea."

Mr. CURTIS announced that the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] was paired in favor of confirmation with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], who was opposed, and the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. ERNST] was paired in favor of confirmation with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY], who was opposed.

On motion of Mr. WALSH of Montana, Senate Report No. 563, relative to the question of the eligibility of Hon. REED SMOOT and Hon. THEODORE E. BURTON to membership on the World War Foreign Debt Commission, was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[Senate Report No. 563, Sixty-seventh Congress, second session.]

ELIGIBILITY OF HON. REED SMOOT AND HON. THEODORE E. BURTON TO MEMBERSHIP ON THE WORLD WAR FOREIGN DEBT COMMISSION.

Mr. WALSH of Montana, from the Committee on the Judiciary, submitted the following report to accompany Senate Resolution 244:

The Committee on the Judiciary, to which was submitted by Senate Resolution 244 the question of the eligibility of Hon. REED SMOOT and Hon. THEODORE E. BURTON to membership on the commission created under the act of Congress approved February 9, 1922, in view of the fact that at the time of the passage of the act the former was, as he still is, a Member of the Senate and the latter was, and he still is, a Member of the House of Representatives, respectfully reports that, having referred the question so submitted to a subcommittee, consisting of Senators CUMMINS, BRANDEGEE, STERLING, OVERMAN, and WALSH, it reported that, having investigated the question, the conclusion was reached that the gentlemen named are ineligible, Senators BRANDEGEE, OVERMAN, and WALSH concurring in the report and Senators CUMMINS and STERLING dissenting; that upon the incoming of the said report your committee canvassed the question and now reports that it is its opinion the gentlemen mentioned are not, nor is either of them, eligible to membership on the said commission for which they have been nominated by the President of the United States.

In its labors the committee had the assistance of a discussion of the question presented by Senator WALSH, copy of which is hereto appended, supporting the view that the gentlemen named are not eligible, and in support of the contrary view discussion by Senators CUMMINS and NELSON and an opinion by the Attorney General which, it is understood, will be made a part of a report to be submitted by the minority of the committee.

In the opinion of the Attorney General reference is made to an earlier opinion of his department, copy of which, with some comments thereon by Senator WALSH, is attached hereto.

Respectfully submitted.

T. J. WALSH.	WM. E. BORAH.
FRANK B. BRANDEGEE.	C. A. CULBERSON.
G. W. NORRIS.	JAS. A. REED.
LEE S. OVERMAN.	JNO. K. SHIELDS.
HENRY F. ASHURST.

On February 9, 1922, the President approved the bill, theretofore passed by Congress, providing for the appointment of a commission authorized, subject to the approval of the President, to refund, convert, and extend the obligations due to the United States from foreign governments, arising out of loans made to them during the war and other transactions incident thereto, amounting to approximately $11,000,000,000. By the terms of the act, a copy of which is appended hereto, the commission is to consist of five members, including the Secretary of the Treasury, the other four of whom are to be nominated by the President and confirmed by the Senate. Pursuant to that law, the President, on February 21, 1922, transmitted to the Senate a communication advising it that he had nominated as members of the commission Hon. Charles E. Hughes, Hon. Herbert C. Hoover, Hon. Reed Smoot, and Hon. Theodore E. Burton. At the time of the passage of the act Mr. Smoot was a Member of the Senate and Mr. Burton a Member of the House of Representatives. Pending action on those nominations by the Senate, it directed the Committee on the Judiciary to inquire into the eligibility of the gentlemen last named for the positions for which they were thus nominated, its aid being invoked by the following resolution adopted February 24, 1922:

"Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be, and it is hereby, directed to inquire into and report to the Senate, not later than Tuesday next (February 28, 1922), touching the eligibility of Hon. REED SMOOT and Hon. THEODORE E. BURTON to membership on the commission created by the act of Congress approved February 9, 1922, entitled 'An act to create a commission authorized to refund or convert obligations of foreign governments held by the United States of America, and for other purposes,' reference being made to section 6 of Article I of the Constitution of the United States as follows:

"'No Senator or Representative shall, during the time for which he was elected, be appointed to any civil office under the authority of the United States, which shall have been created or the emoluments whereof shall have been increased during such time.'"

Whatever doubt may exist or be raised on the question submitted hinges upon the significance to be given to the word "office" in the language of the Constitution quoted in the resolution. Do the members of the commission in question hold "any civil office under the authority of the United States"? Less technically stated, the question is whether the positions in question are among those appointment to which is fraught with the danger or likely to introduce the evils to avert which the wise framers of our fundamental law incorporated in it the provision under consideration. What that danger is, what evils were to be guarded against, if not sufficiently obvious, is made perfectly clear by a reference to the debates in the convention. A few brief extracts from them will be sufficient for the present purpose. A delegate, Mr. Gorham, having moved to strike out the prohibitory clause, the record states:

"Mr. Butler opposed it. This precaution against intrigue was necessary. He appealed to the example of Great Britain, where men get into Parliament that they might get offices for themselves or their friends. This was the source of the corruption that ruined their Government.

"Colonel Mason was for shutting the door at all events against corruption. He enlarged on the venality and abuses in this particular in Great Britain and alluded to the multiplicity of foreign embassies by Congress. This disqualification he regarded as a corner stone in the fabric. (Elliott's Debates, p. 229.)

"Mr. Sherman was for entirely incapacitating members of the legislature. He thought their eligibility to offices would give too much influence to the Executive. He said the incapacity ought at least to be extended to cases where salaries should be increased as well as created during the term of the Member. He mentioned also the expedient by which the restriction could be evaded, to wit, an existing officer might be translated to an office created and a member of the legislature be then put into the office vacated." (Elliott's Debates, p. 505.)

For those who desire to pursue the subject further there is appended a copy of the review of the discussion on this feature of the Constitution appearing in Watson on the Constitution, evidently deemed at the time to be of very great consequence, however lightly it may be regarded now.

There were, as disclosed by the quotations above, a dual purpose in the provision under review, first, to remove the temptation from Members to multiply offices to which they might be appointed, either to their honor or their profit, and, second, and perhaps more important, as viewed by the fathers, to deprive the Executive, with whom was to rest the power of appointment, of the opportunity to constrain Members of Congress to conform to his desires concerning legislation by holding out to them the hope of appointment to offices which they were to create or render more attractive by an increase of salary. In other words, to remove, in part at least, the corrupting power of the patronage of the Executive. However fanciful such a danger may seem to us, it was notorious in their day that the King of Great Britain, or at least his ministers, often secured from Parliament legislation favored by them by a liberal distribution of offices, pensions, peerages, and even of cold cash.

It would be startling to the wise and prudent fathers of the Constitution to be told that though they had guarded against the corrupting influence of the appointment of a Member of Congress to the position of a fourth-class postmaster in a frontier town, they had neglected to remove the temptation offered or the opportunity afforded by membership on a commission empowered to adjust claims against the Government aggregating $11,000,000,000, a sum so vast they could have had no accurate conception of it, however we may, with more abundant occasion for comparison, feebly appreciate its bigness.

In what has been said in a casual way on the subject since the discussion was precipitated in connection with the legislation for funding the foreign debt, reference has been made to the frequency with which Members of Congress have been appointed as commissioners to draft treaties, a practice which, though denounced from time to time by able statesmen, dates from the early days of the Republic and was recently followed by President Harding in naming Senators LODGE and UNDERWOOD on the American delegation to the Washing Conference on Disarmament. But no justification can be found in these precedents for the appointment under consideration. The positions so filled were not created by any law of Congress. The Constitution reposes in the President of the United States the power and authority to negotiate treaties. He may act in person, as President Wilson did at Versailles, or he may designate some one to act for him, pursuing the course usually followed. It is not necessary that the appointment of persons so designated should be confirmed by the Senate. Out of abundance of caution, and perhaps from a considerate regard for the sensibilities of Senators, such appointments were, in our early history, with some frequency submitted to the Senate, and that course has been occasionally followed in modern times, but it can scarcely be contended longer that it is essential that it be.

Another class of cases, quite similar in character, includes appointments on commissions to settle international disputes, like boundary commissions or other arbitration commissions, the members of which are appointed pursuant not to an act of Congress but to a treaty. Such officers, if they may be so denominated, do not come under the operation of the clause of the Constitution under consideration which was intended to exclude Members of Congress only from such offices as they had as such a part in creating or in making more desirable by increasing the emoluments attached to it. The provision in question was one of the compromises of which not a few are found in the Constitution. The more skeptical wished to make Members ineligible to appointment to any office, and not only for the term of the Member but as well for a year after its expiration. Others objected to any restriction on the appointing power in that regard. It was finally agreed that the safety of the Republic would be sufficiently assured if the temptation were removed only with respect to such offices as the Members respectively participated in creating or making more inviting in the manner indicated. So, admitting that the members of commissions such as those last referred to are officers and that they act under the authority of the United States, rather than under a joint authority of our country and the other party to the treaty, the offices they hold are not of that class the makers of the Constitution had in mind when they framed the clause in question; that is, though they may be within its letter, they are not within its spirit.

A third class of commissions to which Members of Congress have frequently been appointed are such as are authorized and empowered to investigate and report to Congress for its information, as a basis for legislation, which it may or may not subsequently enact. An act creating such a commission gave rise to an investigation by the Judiciary Committees of both Houses of the whole subject now being considered, action having been taken in the Senate on the motion of Senator Hoar, of Massachusetts, the chairman of its Committee on the Judiciary. Under the act involved, President McKinley appointed as members of a commission to propose legislation for the government of the Hawaiian Islands, among others, Senators Cullom and Morgan and Representative Hitt. The House committee, through its chairman, Hon. David B. Henderson, once Speaker, made an elaborate report, copy of which is appended hereto, in which the eligibility of Members of Congress to appointment on such a commission was upheld. The Senate committee made no report, but the views of the committee in disapprobation of the practice of appointing Members of Congress to such positions were conveyed to the President by the distinguished lawyer who was then chairman of the committee, and the Senate declined to confirm the nominations of the gentlemen named against whom no objection was made except that they were Members of Congress. We are, accordingly, without any direct determination either by the Senate or its Committee on the Judiciary on the question here discussed.

Later, however, the general subject was again canvassed in the Senate in connection with a bill for the creation of a commission to investigate and report to Congress, which the Senate amended so that the appointment of Members of Congress to membership on it was forbidden.

Speaking to the amendment referred to, Senator Hoar detailed the proceedings had in connection with the Hawaiian bill, as herein recited, denounced the policy of appointing Members of Congress on such commissions, asserted that the well-nigh unanimous opinion of the Senate was against it, and that he and many other Senators were convinced that it was in contravention of the Constitution. A copy of his remarks on that occasion are appended hereto.

The position taken by Speaker Henderson, which, bear in mind, was not accepted by Senator Hoar, was that inasmuch as the commission considered by him could recommend only and had no power either to make a law, to execute a law, or to construe a law, it discharged neither legislative, executive, nor judicial functions; it exercised no part of the sovereign power of government; and therefore its members held no "office," were not "officers."

Congress might, it was pointed out, disregard utterly any report or recommendation such a commission might submit and either omit or refuse to do anything on the subject to which it relates, or it might, in the usual way, initiate legislation of a wholly different character from that recommended. It might even anticipate the report of the committee and take action in the premises entirely at variance with any views entertained by the members of the commission.

The principle announced in the report of Speaker Henderson is believed by some members of the committee to lead to the conclusion that the members of the Foreign Debt Funding Commission hold no "office" within the meaning of the term as it is applied in section 6 of Article I of the Constitution. It is said, in support of that view, that the commission has no powers, because whatever arrangement it may make with any foreign Government is subject to the approval of the President; that in consequence of that provision the authority to make the composition is vested in the President and that the commission merely gathers information for his enlightenment, makes recommendations to him, upon which he is to make the final and binding agreement. But that contention is plainly at war with the perfectly clear language of the act. By its terms it is to the commission, not to the President, that the authority is given to conduct the negotiations and to enter into the agreements. He has what may be denominated with substantial accuracy a veto power, and a veto power only. If their work should be unsatisfactory to him he has no power, under the act, to initiate new negotiations or to conduct them. He might undoubtedly, under the authority to make treaties conferred upon him by the Constitution, undertake the task, but whatever agreements he might make so acting would not be final, as is provided in the act, but would be subject to ratification by the Senate. But in the event supposed he would be powerless, so far as the funding act is concerned. The fact that what the commission does is subject to the approval of the President can not be said to be inconsistent with the idea that they exercise a part of the sovereign power of the Government, or, in other words, hold office. The President is empowered by the Constitution to make treaties subject to the approval of the Senate. Can it be said that the treaty-making power is vested in the Senate, the President having power only to recommend, that he acts on what he does in that behalf simply as a collector of information for the Senate and not as an officer of the Government? The Congress can enact no law except with the approval of the President. Is it true, accordingly, that all legislative power is vested in the President, the Congress existing merely for the purpose of recommending legislation to him? The Constitution itself declares that all legislative power is vested in Congress.

It may be said that the case is not parallel, because Congress may enact a law by overriding the President's veto. But is that a difference of consequence? It is the theory of the English Government that the King has an absolute veto. It is true that he has not exercised it for some few hundred years, but that he may exercise it consistently with the English constitution will, perhaps, not be disputed. Is the Parliament of Great Britain consequently without legislative powers and are all such reposed in the King, or were they so reposed when he was accustomed from time to time to exercise his right of veto?

It would do violence to the whole theory of our Government to assert that Congress exercises legislative powers only when it passes a law over the President's veto.

So nothing that one House of Congress may do in the way of legislation has any force unless approved by the other House. Is the Senate but the handmaid of the House or the House simply the servant of the Senate? Do the Members of neither body hold an office because its work to be effective must be approved by the other?

The general argument by which the conclusion is arrived at that men who fill positions created by law, in which they are called upon to perform important functions in the interest of the general public, in which they assume grave responsibilities by reason of which they attain both influence and distinction, if not emolument or other profit, positions that are in consequence eagerly sought after, are not offices is attenuated at best, but it fades to the vanishing point when every strand is gone save that the work accomplished is subject to the approval of another functionary.

It has been pointed out that the President is powerless in the premises under the act, except to appprove or disapprove the work of the commission, the importance of which can not be overestimated. It is understood that Austria is asking for an extension of 20 years in respect to the debt owing by her on account of food supplies furnished her starving population by our Government; that is to say, that we arrange with her so that she shall not be required to pay any part of the debt earlier than 20 years hence. It is asserted that the weal or woe of her 7,000,000 people depends upon the grant of this concession to her, the other nations to which she is bound on account of her treaty obligations having signified their willingness to extend the time of payment of their claims if the United States would do likewise. The President of the United States may be perfectly willing to accord her the accommodation she is asking, but she can not get it unless this commission can be prevailed upon to yield to her desires. On the other hand, there is an insistent demand in this country for prompt payment, that our own people may be relieved from the heavy burden of taxation they are carrying, or that they may exhibit in a material way their gratitude to the men who responded to the call of their country in its hour of peril occasioned by the great World War. Men of great sagacity, experts in international finance, not a few in number, insist that the exaction of prompt payment of even the accumulated interest on our foreign debt would operate to precipitate a crisis in business circles, the disastrous effects of which would extend around the globe and be felt not less by our own people than by those called upon to make the payment. Such a view was expressed on the floor of the Senate by the distinguished Member of that body who has been named a member of the commission.

Ignoring the adjudications of the courts as to what is or what is not technically an "office," many of them irreconcilable and hinging upon particular statutes, let us try to solve the question before us by the application of fundamental rules. Is the term "office," as ordinarily used, broad enough to include the positions in question; and if it is, are they such positions as the framers of the Constitution intended should fall under the ban of the language they used?

It will be admitted that if the word "office" can, under no reasonable definition, be expanded so as to include the positions in question, it is immaterial that they are affected with the danger against which the clause in question was intended to safeguard the Republic. But is that the situation? It is a cardinal rule of construction, particularly of constitutions, that "words are to be taken in their natural and obvious sense and not in a sense unreasonably restricted or enlarged." (Martin v. Hunter's Lessee, 1 Wheat. 326.)

It is frequently asserted that they are to be taken in their ordinary and usual sense.

"In general, statutes are presumed to use words in their popular sense; uti loquitur vulgus. (Endlich on Interpretation of Statutes 76.)

"Indeed, it is probably not inaccurate to say that, as between two meanings of a word, the ordinary and popular meaning is, in general, to be preferred and is most frequently in harmony with the subject matter and object of the enactment." (Id. 78.)

To ascertain the usual and ordinary sense of words, we have recourse to the dictionary. The Century Dictionary defines "office" as follows:

"A position of authority under a government; as a man in office; to accept office. In law: (a) The right and duty conferred on an individual to perform any part of the functions of government and receive such compensation, if any, as the law may affix to the service; more specifically called public office. It implies authority to exercise some part of the power of the State, a tenure of right therein, some continuous duration, and usually emoluments. It is often defined simply as a public charge or employment; but there are many instances of public charge or employment which are not in law deemed offices, such as the service of a janitor, or that of a person designated by special act to buy goods for public use. In early English law office was regarded as a right and could be conferred on a man or his heirs. In United States law it is a duty or agency conferred for public benefit; and, although the tenure is to some extent matter of right, the compensation is subject to change by the legislature unless constitutionally fixed."

Webster contributes the following:

"Office; 1. A particular duty, charge, or trust, as one conferred by public authority and for a public purpose; an employment undertaken by commission or authority; a post or position held by an official or functionary; specifically, a position of trust or authority under a government, as the office of a premier. 2. Law: (1) A legal right to exercise a public function or employment and to take its lawful emoluments. (2) In a more general sense, administrative or executive rights, powers, or duties, as in semipublic or private capacities, constituting established and legally recognized functions, as the office of trustee."

Though mention is made here of emoluments as being a feature generally of an office, it has been determined judicially that, while common, such a feature is not essential. (In re Corliss, 11 R. I. 638.)

That case held that members of a commission created by act of Congress to prepare and superintend the execution of a plan for holding the Centennial Exposition hold an "office" under the United States.

Undeniably a member of the Funding Commission holds an office under the dictionary definition, but if there were any doubt about it, or if the term is sometimes used in a more narrow sense, and it is essential to inquire whether in the case before us it is to be given the narrower significance, attention may, yea, by a rule both ancient and universal, must be paid to the mischief which the law was to guard against and the purpose which was to be subserved in its enactment, and such a construction must be given to the language assumed to be of doubtful import as will effectuate and not defeat the purpose of the authors of the statute. That rule, applicable alike to the statutes, constitutions, and treaties, is the subject of the following comment by Vattel, as quoted by Sedgwick (235, 236):

"The reason of the law or of the treaty—that is to say, of the motive which led to the making of it and the object in contemplation at the time—is the most certain clue to lead us to the discovery of its true meaning; and great attention should be paid to the circumstance whenever there is question either of explaining an obscure, ambiguous, indeterminate passage in a law or treaty, or of applying it to a particular case. When once we certainly know the reason which alone has determined the will of the person speaking, we ought to interpret and apply his words in a manner suitable to that reason alone. * * *

"The consideration of the reason of a law or promise not only serves to explain the obscure or ambiguous expressions which occur in the piece, but also to extend or restrict its several provisions independently of the expressions and in conformity to the intention and views of the legislature or the contracting parties rather than to their words, for, according to the remark of Cicero, the language invented to explain the will ought not to hinder its effect. When the sufficient and only reason of a provision, either in a law or a promise, is perfectly certain and well understood, we extend that provision to cases to which the same reason is applicable, although they be not comprised within the signification of the terms. This is what is called interpretation. It is commonly said that we ought to adhere rather to the spirit than to the letter. Thus the Mohammedans justly extend the prohibition of wine in the Koran to all intoxicating liquors, that dangerous quality being the only reason that could induce their legislator to prohibit the use of wine."

Much the same thought was expressed by Judge Sanborn in Stevens v. Nave-McCord Mercantile Co. (150 Fed. 75), as follows:

"Cardinal rules for the construction of a statute are that the intention of the legislative body which enacted it should be ascertained and given effect, if possible, regardless of technical rules of construction and the dry words of the enactment; that that intention must be deduced not from a part but from the entire law; that the object which the enacting body sought to attain and the evil which it was endeavoring to remedy may always be considered for the purpose of ascertaining its intention; that the statute must be given a rational, sensible construction; and that, if this be consonant with its terms, it must have an interpretation which will advance the remedy and repress the wrong." (United States v. Ninety-nine Diamonds (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 139 Fed. 961, 965; 72 C. C. A. 9; 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 185.)

The positions under consideration being easily within the meaning of the word "office" as it is popularly understood and being undeniably of the character the framers of the Constitution intended should not be open to Members of Congress in the creation of which they participated, however faultily they may have expressed that intention, it must be held that such Members are ineligible under the Constitution.

But it is not necessary to insist upon an enlarged definition of the word as it is used in the law. Cases can be found in which an exceedingly restricted significance has been given to it. As a rule they have not presented for consideration either the particular provision here under consideration or any of similar import. So much importance is attached to one of these (Bunn v. People, 45 Ill. 397) as to justify a brief review.

It considered the validity of an act of the legislature creating a commission to supervise the construction of a State capitol, the members being named in the act, though the constitution provided that the governor should nominate and by and with the advice of the senate appoint all officers whose offices were established by the constitution or created by law. It was held that such commissioners were not officers, because it was asserted "no tenure of office is fixed by the act, no permanency is attached to it," and "the appointees are to perform a duty single in itself." It was remarked that "no power is given to levy taxes," though perhaps few would contend that that feature is of consequence.

In the first place the discussion was by a divided court, consisting of three members, one of whom filed a vigorous and persuasive dissenting opinion in which a number of cases were cited, including State v. Kennon (7 Ohio Stat. 456), a case quite like the one before the Illinois court, which held directly to the contrary. It might be added that Bunn v. People is flatly opposed by In re Corliss, elsewhere herein referred to.

In the second place the decision was so generally disapproved by the people of Illinois that three years afterwards, when they framed a new constitution in 1870, they inserted therein a provision to neutralize for the future the obnoxious judgment in Bunn v. People, as follows:

"An office is a public position created by the constitution or law, continuing during the pleasure of the appointing power or for a fixed term, with a successor elected or appointed. An employment is an agency for a temporary purpose which ceases when that purpose is accomplished."

That this provision of the Illinois constitution owes its origin to the decision in Bunn v. People is asserted in People v. Loeffler (175 Ill. 585, 602–603), and in Ratton v. Board of Health (127 Calif. 388, 396–397).

The definition of "office" as set out in the Illinois constitution conforms quite accurately to that assigned to it very generally by the courts. In most cases in which the subject is considered they are called upon to differentiate between an office and a mere employment, the one resting upon a statute and being impersonal in character, the other founded on contract. The outstanding characteristic of the office is that if the incumbent dies or resigns the appointing power fills the vacancy.

Among other cases upon which Judge Walker founded his dissent in Bunn v. People was United States v. Maurice (2 Brock. 96), in which the opinion was written by Chief Justice Marshall who therein stated:

"An office is defined to be a 'public charge or employment,' and he who performs the duties of the office is an officer. * * * Although an office is 'an employment,' it does not follow that every employment is an office. A man may certainly be employed under a contract, express or implied, to do an act or perform a service without becoming an officer. But if the duty be a continuing one, which is defined by rules prescribed by the Government, and not by contract, which an individual is appointed by Government to perform, who enters on the duties appertaining to the station without any contract defining them, if those duties continue, though the person be changed—it seems very difficult to distinguish such a charge or employment from an office, or the person who performs the duties from an officer.

The opinion in the California case cited, after quoting from Marshall, continues:

"Judge Cooley distinguished the 'officer' from the 'employee' in the 'greater importance, dignity, and independence of his position, in being required to take an official oath, and perhaps to give an official bond, in the liability to be called to account as a public offender for misfeasance or nonfeasance in office and usually, though not necessarily, in the tenure of the position.' (Throop v. Langdon, 40 Mich. 673.) But it has been held that an oath of office is not a necessary criterion, nor is a salary. These are but incidents and form no part of the office, though they may aid in determining the nature of the position. Duration or continuance have been said to be embraced in the term 'office,' and Chief Justice Marshall, in the case cited, spoke of the duty being a continuing one as an important element. But Chief Justice Pearson, in the North Carolina case cited, said 'that it made no difference whether there be but one act or a series of acts to be done, whether the office expires as soon as the one act is done or is to be held for years or during good behavior,' the service being performed for the State. Our court at an early day, in Vaughn v. English (8 Calif. 40), held that the clerks in the offices of secretary of state and controller and treasurer of state were officers within the meaning of the act of April 21, 1856. (Stats. 1856, p. 224.) It was there said: 'The term "officer," in its common acceptation, is sufficiently comprehensive to include all persons in any public station or employment conferred by Government.' The definition given in 4 Jacob's Law Dictionary, 433, was quoted as follows: 'It is said every man is a public officer who hath any duty concerning the public, and he is not the less a public officer where his authority is confined to narrow limits, because it is the duty of his office and the nature of that duty which makes him a public officer, and not the extent of his authority.' The opinion continues: 'The respondent was appointed by Government; the duties which he is to perform concern the public, and he is paid out of the Public Treasury; he is, therefore, a public officer.' It was held that because there was no definite term of the office could not be urged as an objection, for the clerks are appointed for the term of the officer making the appointment, subject to the power of removal."

How valueless many of the cases defining the word in question are may be judged from the fact that the Supreme Court of the United States held in United States v. Mouat (124 U. S. 303) that a paymaster's clerk is not an "officer" of the Navy, and in the case next reported in the same volume, United States v. Hendee, that he is an "officer" of the Navy, the court having under consideration a different statute in each case, and attempting in each to give effect to the intention of Congress.

The appropriate use of the term in the law is accordingly to be gathered rather from the law dictionaries and from a general review of the authorities than from specific cases. From these it is to be concluded that anyone who exercises a portion of the sovereign power of the State is an officer. Bouvier has the following:

"Public office in the Constitution means a permanent public trust or employment, not merely transient, occasional, or incidental; In re Hathaway (71 N. Y. 238). The term embraces the ideas of tenure, duration, emoluments, and duties; United States v. Hartwell (6 Wall., U. S. 385, 18 L. ed. 830); but it has been held that duration and salary are not of the essence of public office and that the duty of acting for and on behalf of the State constitutes an office; People v. Bledsoe (68 N. C. 457); even though it expires as soon as a single act is done; State v. Stanley (60 N. C. 59, 8 Am. Rep. 488). The true test is that it is a parcel of the administration of Government; Eliason v. Coleman (86 N. C. 241); though it is a clerkship in a department and the duties are confined within narrow limits; Vaughn v. English (8 Calif. 39). * * *

"A public officer is one who renders a public service—a service in which the general public is interested; Schmitt v. Dooling (145 Ky. 240, 140 S. W. 197, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 881, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 1078). One who exercises some portion of the sovereign power of the State, either in making, adminstering, or executing the laws."

In an elaborate note to Groves v. Barden (Ann. Cas. 1917D, pp. 320 and 321) the author concludes, citing many cases, that:

"To constitute an office it is essential that the position shall be created by the constitution or statutes of the sovereignty, or that the sovereign power shall have delegated to an inferior body the right to create the position in question. * * *

"An indispensable element of a public office as distinguished from an employment is that the duties of the incumbent of an office shall involve an exercise of some portion of the sovereign power."

The concluding portion of the note advances the view, amply supported, that though the term "office" may embrace the idea of tenure, bond, oath, and compensation, none of those features are essential.

The conclusion that the positions in question fall under the operation of section 6 of Article I of the Constitution is enforced by a consideration of other provisions of the Constitution in which the words "office" and "officer" are used. The President is by it to nominate and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate to "appoint ambassadors, other public ministers and consuls, judges of the Supreme Court, and all other officers of the United States whose appointments are not herein otherwise provided for and which shall be established by law." Obviously Congress was of the opinion in enacting the law in question that the members of the commission are officers of the United States, for it is therein expressly provided that they should be nominated by the President and confirmed by the Senate, a circumstance which affords cogent proof of the fact that, as the term is popularly understood, the members of the commission hold "office." But it is said that this conclusion is at least weakened by the fact that the act provides that the Secretary of the Treasury shall be a member of the commission, leading to the inference that Congress could not have deemed that the members would be officers of the United States, since Congress has no power to appoint such, the Constitution having reposed such authority in the President subject to the approval of the Senate. That argument, however, is not sound. The act simply, so far as the Secretary of the Treasury is concerned, adds to the duties imposed upon him by law. Statutes creating boards composed of State officers for the better administration of State laws are common and universally upheld upon the principle stated. (State v. Porterfield, 47 S. C. 75.)

Congressional acts of like character are numerous, the statutes creating the Council of National Defense and the Water Power Commission being representative.

By another provision of the Constitution no "person holding an office of trust or profit under the United States shall be appointed an elector" of President and Vice President. It was this clause that was under consideration in In re Corliss, in which the Supreme Court of Rhode Island held that a member of the Centennial Exposition Commission holds an office under the United States. This provision likewise had its origin in a widespread apprehension that under the system being devised the Executive, in whom was reposed an enormous patronage, would use it to further his own purpose and ambitions. The electors it was assumed would be at liberty to exercise some independent judgment, and it was feared that an appointee of the President, eligible for reelection, would or might be constrained by a sense of interest or of gratitude to vote for him or at his direction or in conformity with his desires.

Let any Senator inquire of himself whether the framers of the Constitution intended that a citizen appointed to the high place occupied by members of the Funding Commission should, notwithstanding the ties which bind him to the Executive, be eligible as an elector of President and Vice President.

Still another provision of the Constitution is to the effect that "all civil officers of the United States shall be removed from office on impeachment for and conviction of treason, bribery, or other high crimes and misdemeanors. Are the members of the commission exempt from impeachment for bribery or other dereliction in connnection with the discharge of their duties? If so, how can they be removed? The President may, of course, remove them, having the power to appoint. But is Congress powerless in the premises? Is it true that the Constitution makers reserved to Congress the right to remove by impeachment every petty officer of the United States, but surrendered it in the case of these high functionaries?

It is required by Article VI of the Constitution that all executive and judicial officers, both of the United States and of the several States, shall be bound by oath or affirmation to support the Constitution. Is it conceivable that the authors of our fundamental law prescribed that a town constable or a poundmaster should take the oath, but that such important public servants as those under consideration should be exempt from that requirement?

Another particularly pertinent provision of the Constitution deserves notice, namely, that which prescribes that "No title of nobility shall be granted by the United States; and no person holding any office of profit or trust under them shall, without the consent of Congress, accept of any present, emolument, office, or title of any kind whatever from any king, prince, or foreign State. Comment is unnecessary.

The places for which Senator SMOOT and Representative BURTON have been nominated are offices within the meaning of section 6 of Article I, and they are ineligible thereto.

APPENDIX A.

[PUBLIC—NO. 139—67TH CONGRESS.]

An act (H. R. 8762) to create a commission authorized under cretain conditions to refund or convert obligations of foreign Governments held by the United States of America, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That a World War Foreign Debt Commission is hereby created consisting of five members, one of whom shall be the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall serve as chairman, and four of whom shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

SEC. 2. That, subject to the approval of the President, the commission created by section 1 is hereby authorized to refund or convert, and to extend the time of payment of the principal or the interest, or both, of any obligation of any foreign Government now held by the United States of America, or any obligation of any foreign Government hereafter received by the United States of America (including obligations held by the United States Grain Corporation, the War Department, the Navy Department, or the American Relief Administration), arising out of the World War, into bonds or other obligations of such foreign Government in substitution for the bonds or other obligations of such Government now or hereafter held by the United States of America, in such form and of such terms, conditions, date or dates of maturity, and rate or rates of interest, and with such security, if any, as shall be deemed for the best interests of the United States of America: Provided, That nothing contained in this act shall be construed to authorize or empower the commission to extend the time of maturity of any such bonds or other obligations due the United States of America by any foreign Government beyond June 15, 1947, or to fix the rate of interest at less than 4½ per cent per annum: Provided further, That when the bond or other obligation of any such Government has been refunded or converted as herein provided, the authority of the commission over such refunded or converted bond or other obligation shall cease.

SEC. 3. That this act shall not be construed to authorize the exchange of bonds or other obligations of any foreign Government for those of any other foreign Government, or cancellations of any part of such indebtedness except through payment thereof.

SEC. 4. That the authority granted by this act shall cease and determine at the end of three years from the date of the passage of this act.

SEC. 5. That the annual report of this commission shall be included in the annual report of the Secretary of the Treasury on the state of the finances, but said commission shall immediately transmit to the Congress copies of any refunding agreements entered into, with the approval of the President, by each foreign Government upon the completion of the authority granted under this act.

Approved, February 9, 1922.

APPENDIX B.

REPORT OF SENATOR HOAR.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I have taken very great interest in the question raised by the proposed amendment of the Senator from South Carolina, and I hope he will take an opportunity, or that some other Senator will—if nobody else does, I shall, if I can get one—to bring up this question of the appointment by the President of Senators and Representatives in the other House for important public functions under circumstances where it can be carefully and thoughtfully dealt with as we should deal with a proposed amendment to the Constitution, or as we should have dealt with it if we had been in the Constitutional Convention in the beginning.

It is evident that it can not be so dealt with to-day. There is no time for a full discussion. It comes up on a measure to which it is hardly germane after the statements of gentlemen who are likely to know what is expected, that there is no thought or probability—the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. Aldrich] corrects me by saying "possibility"—of individuals being taken from either House of Congress for this commission. So I hope the matter will be brought up at some time when it is not entangled in the least by personal considerations in regard to our colleagues or gentlemen in the other House who may have been asked to do such service, and will be dealt with solely as a broad general principle for the future.

Mr. President, a great many years ago a President of the United States—I am not sure whether it was in President Hayes's time or General Grant's, or a little later—was called upon to make up a commission to go to Europe to deal with the silver question, and he appointed on that commission—if I may be permitted to say so—the one man in the country who was fitted for that duty. That was the Senator from Iowa [Mr. Allison], now chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. I took the liberty then of expressing my feeling of anxiety that that act might grow into a precedent and be the occasion of public complaint.

Later, in President McKinley's time, there were some eight or ten appointments made from this body of a like character, and they were, I suppose, appointments that the whole country regarded as most admirable for the public service. They were men who had studied the subjects with which they were to deal, men of great capacity, and that they were men of the highest quality of personal integrity it is unnecessary to say.

But I have no doubt it seemed to a large majority of the Senate, on reflection, that the practice had better not go further, and two measures were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, one a general law, the other a resolve of the Senate. The committee carefully considered them. It happened that there were three members of the committee at that time who had been among those who had been selected for such functions. The committee almost unanimously agreed to a resolution disapproving of this practice. One or two of the members thought the President ought not to be restricted in his resources for that branch of the public service. However, the committee thought such a resolution might be construed into some discourtesy to the gentlemen who had acted in such places. One of the men who was then acting as a commissioner under such an appointment was one of the most zealous and emphatic in favor of the resolution. He said he had accepted the place hastily, and he agreed that the practice ought not to go further.

But the committee thought it was not best, under the circumstances, to report the matter at that time, and instructed me to call upon the President and tell him what had happened and say to him that the committee hoped the practice would not be continued. I suppose there is no indelicacy in my reporting what happened. President McKinley said he was aware of the objections; that he had come to feel them very strongly; and while he did not say in terms that he would not make another appointment of the same kind, he conveyed to me, and I am sure meant to convey to me, an assurance that it would not occur again. But he said it was impossible to understand how few people there were in this country who were out of the Senate and the House who were qualified for important diplomatic service of that kind; that we had to contend with the trained diplomats of Europe, men who had studied the subject all their lives. He went over some of the difficulties he had encounted in making selections of ministers abroad for some very important matters that were expected to be dealt with. Our people come from entirely other service and conditions. He might have added what is an additional strong consideration, that we have to deal with nations who can wait, while in general our political conditions and diplomatic conditions are such that we can not wait.

The American people want to have a question settled and have it over. Great Britain says to us: "Well, if you do not come to my terms I will be here 50 years hence, and my minister of foreign relations very likely will be here 20 years hence, and we will wait. We are in no hurry."

But at the same time, in spite of all those considerations, it seems to me it is a violation of the sound principles of the Constitution as enunciated in the clause read by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. Bacon]. The Constitution says the President shall not have patronage enough at his command to give a Senator, during his senatorial term, a $20 a year post office in his county seat, where perhaps he is the only man who resides there receiving letters. During the term for which a Senator is elected he can not be appointed to any place which has been created or the salary of which has been increased by sixpence during the whole six years.

So careful were the framers of the Constitution of Executive influence and control. And yet if the practice is to go on the President must come into the Senate, pick out a half dozen of our Members and send them to Europe, where they spend the summer in the most honorable positions on the face of the earth, meeting the society of foreign capitals, and then he can pay them out of the contingent fund at his disposal a sum three times greater than our salary. Now, does anybody suppose the framers of the Constitution would have approved of that? It is the question of the relation between the legislative power and the Executive power. There were two things of which our fathers, when they framed the Constitution, were especially afraid. One was corruption in office—and that was provided for by impeachment—and the other an Executive influence over legislation.

Mr. President, it seems to me at some convenient time we must have this matter out and have it settled so far as an act of Congress can settle it. At the same time I wish to say there is not, in my judgment, the smallest criticism to be made of the purity of purpose and patriotism of the gentlemen who in the past have been selected by the Executive for these various offices.

Take the late Senator from Minnesota, now unhappily withdrawn from the sphere of public service. It would be difficult for me to put into words an expression of higher esteem for the senatorial character as exemplified by any man with whom I have ever served than by that intelligent, brave, patriotic, and courteous man, so accomplished and delightful in every relation of life, a great citizen, a great soldier, a great Senator.

It is only when the President is forced to say, "The Senator I want to employ is the fittest man in the world for the service and I can not find anybody else," that it will be done this year or has been done last year or will be done next year. But if the practice is once established, it will be done as matter of course. Senators can not accept an office, but they can do something which has ten times the power and the distinction and the compensation of an office, and a measure can be carried through, if we ever have an unscrupulous Executive, by the knowledge that Senators are to be appointed to discharge the functions. It seems to me that hardly a more dangerous practice can be conceived of than this one.

I hope the question as to what the Senate think on this subject, or what they seem to think by their votes, will not be determined on a mere amendment coming in at the close of a session, when we can have no extended debate upon it, and on a bill which is not especially germane and to which it practically has no relation.

APPENDIX C.

While it may be admitted that all of the commissions, examining boards, regents, etc., considered by the committee do differ in many particulars as to their duties, still the legal principles involved in the consideration of this class of public servants apply to all of them, and therefore they will be considered together in discussing the law in respect to them.

It can not be contended that every position held by a Member of Congress is an office within the meaning of the Constitution, even though the term office may usually be applied to many of these positions. We are therefore led to an analysis and discussion of the word "office."

The chairman of a committee of Congress is in one sense an officer holding a position different from other members of the committee. Marks of honor and distinction are given to Members of Congress in many ways, but all incident to or growing out of their position as a Member of Congress. It is a mark of distinction to be selected as members of escorts to those of our number who die; designations are made of committees to notify the Senate and the President of certain matters. The mind will readily run over a list of many positions of trust and honor that are conferred upon Members of Congress where no pretense will be made that they are offices within the meaning of the Constitution.

In United States v. Hartwell (6 Wall. 393) it is laid down that "an office is a public station or employment conferred by the appointment of Government. The term embraces the ideas of tenure, duration, emolument, and duties."

Elsewhere it is held that an office is "an employment on behalf of the Government, in any station or public trust, not merely transient, occasional, or incidental." (20 John. Rept. 492, 7 Ohio State 536.)

A careful consideration of all of the positions above referred to will show that they are merely transient, occasional, or incidental in their nature, and none of them possess the elements of duration, tenure, or emolument.

All of these appointees were but instruments to procure detailed information for the better information and guidance of Congress and are wholly lacking in the essential elements of an office within the meaning of the Constitution.

"A public office is the right, authority, and duty, created and conferred by law by which for a given period, either fixed by law or enduring at the pleasure of the creating power, an individual is invested with some portion of the sovereign functions of the Government to be exercised by him for the benefit of the public." (Mechem's Public Offices and Officers, sec. 1; Matter of Hathaway, 71 N. Y. 238–243, 3 Greenleaf (Me.), 481; Public Officers, Throop, sec. 6; Olmstead v. The Mayor, etc., 42 N. Y. Sup. Ct. 481.)

It has been held that these functions must be either legislative, executive, or judicial, and that to constitute the person an officer he must have conferred upon him either legislative, executive, or judicial powers. (Mechem's Public Offices, etc., sec. 4, and cases cited.)

Says the author:

"SEC. 4. Office involves delegation of sovereign functions. The most important characteristic which distinguishes an office from an employment or contract is that the creation and conferring of an office involves a delegation to the individual of some of the sovereign functions of government, to be exercised by him for the benefit of the public; that some portion of the sovereignty of the country, either legislative, executive, or judicial, attaches, for the time being, to be exercised for the public benefit. Unless the power conferred are of this nature, the individual is not a public officer."

This involves necessarily the power (1) to legislate, or (2) execute law, or (3) hear and determine judicially questions submitted.

Therefore mere power to investigate some particular subject and report thereon or to negotiate a treaty of peace, or on some commercial subject, a report without power to make binding on the Government, does not constitute a person an officer.

"It (public office) implies a delegation of a portion of the sovereign power to, and the possession of it by, the person filling the office; and the exercise of such power within legal limits constitutes the correct discharge of the duties of such office." (3 Greenleaf (Me.) 481; Mechem's Public Offices, etc., sec. 2; Olmstead v. The Mayor, 42 N. Y. Sup. Ct. 481; Public Officers, Throop, sec. 6.)

Again, the employment must not be merely transient, occasional, or incidental.

In United States v. Hartwell (6 Wall. 385) the court held that the term "public office" embraces the idea of tenure, duration, emolument, and duties, and that the duties were continuing and permanent, not occasional or temporary.

In United States v. Germaine (99 U. S. Sup. Ct. 508) the question of who is or who is not a public officer was again up, and the court said:

"If we look to the nature of defendant's employment, we think it equally clear that he is not an officer. In that case (referring to United States v. Hartwell) the court said the term embraces the ideas of tenure, duration, emolument, and duties, and that the latter were continuing and permanent, not occasional or temporary. In the case before us the duties are not continuing and permanent, and they are occasional and intermittent. * * * He is required to keep no place of business for the public use. He gives no bond and takes no oath, unless by some order of the Commissioner of Pensions of which we are not advised. * * * He is but an agent of the commissioner, appointed by him, and removable by him at his pleasure, to procure information needed to aid in the performance of his own official duties. * * * There is no penalty for his absence from duty or refusal to perform, except his loss of the fee in the given case."

The duties of the commissioners appointed under the statutes—to which attention will be called—are not continuing or permanent; they have no place of business for the public use, or even for their own use; they give no bond and take no oath. In fact, they are mere agents appointed by direction of Congress for the purpose of gathering information and making recommendations for its use if the Congress sees fit to avail itself of the labors of the commission. The commissioners appointed under these statutes or resolutions can not be compelled to attend or act, and in the broadest sense they are mere agents of the Congress. These commissioners are not to execute any standing laws which are the rules of action and the guardians of rights, nor have they the right or power to make any such law, nor can they interpret or enforce any existing law.

Under a statute of Maine the governor was authorized "to appoint one or more agents for the preservation of timber on the public lands, and for other purposes," and the judges held that these agents were not a civil office of profit under the State, although they were entitled to compensation. (See 3 Greenleaf Reports (Me.), p. 481.)

In United States v. Hendee (124 U. S. 309) it was held that a paymaster's clerk in the Navy is an officer of the Navy, and in United States v. Mouat (124 U. S. 303) it was held that such paymaster's clerk, appointed by a paymaster in the Navy, with the approval of the Secretary of the Navy, is not an officer of the Navy in the sense that he is an officer of the United States.

The constitution of the State of New York, 1846, article 6, section 8, prohibits the judges of the court of appeals and justices of the supreme court from exercising any power of appointment to public office.

Section 16, chapter 280, Laws of 1847, conferred upon the chancellor power to issue a commission to some person, empowering him to act as a surrogate in a particular case when by reason of statutory disqualifications the officers designated to act could not do so. It was contended that such person when designated to act as surrogate became a public officer, inasmuch as for the time being and in the matter before whom he was to act as a judicial officer with full power to hear, try, and determine the particular case, but the court of appeals In matter of Hathaway (71 N. Y. 238) held:

"The term 'public office,' as used in the Constitution, has respect to a permanent public trust or employment, to be exercised generally and in all proper cases. It does not include the appointment, to meet special exigencies, of an individual to perform transient, occasional, or incidental duties, such as are ordinarily performed by public officers; as to such appointments the legislature is left untrammeled and at liberty to invest the courts with power to make them." (Church, Ch. J., Andrews and Miller, JJ., dissenting.)

In Hall v. State (39 Wis. 79, ch. 40, laws of 1857) (the law) appointed certain-named persons "commissioners to make a geological, mineralogical, and agricultural survey of the State," and provided that such commissioners should arrange and distribute the functions of such survey by mutual agreement. The law provided a salary and provided for filling vacancies, and gave the governor authority to remove any member for incompetency or neglect of duty. The court held that these commissioners were officers. The court said:

"The geological survey commissioners were appointed directly by legislature; no specific term of office was fixed (except by the governor, whose power to do so may well be doubted); provision was made by law for removing them for cause and for filling vacancies; their salaries were paid out of the State treasury, and their functions were not of merely private, local, or temporary concern, but related to the material and permanent interests of the whole State. The duty imposed upon them was an important public trust, to be exercised for the benefit of all the people of the State, and could only be discharged properly by gentlemen of high attainments in physical science. * * * It may safely be asserted that any person charged by law with the performance of public functions affecting the general interests of society, especially if he be elected thereto by the people, or appointed directly by the legislature, and who receives his compensation out of the public treasury, is a public officer, and as such can have no vested right in his office, unless secured by the constitution. * * * It may be difficult to draw the exact line between an officer and a mere service or employment; but, as already observed, when public functions are conferred by law upon certain persons elected by the people or appointed by the legislature, if those functions concern the general interests of the State, and are not of a nature merely local or temporary, such persons are public officers, especially if they are paid a salary for their services out of the public treasury."

In re Corliss (11 R. I. 638) the question was up whether the office of a commissioner of the United States Centennial Commission is an office of trust under Article II, section 1, of the Constitution of the United States, and it was held that he was such an officer. The law creating that commission provided "for the holding of an exhibition of American and foreign arts, products, and manufactures, under the auspices of the Government of the United States," and the functions of such commissioners were to continue until the close of the exhibition, and their duties were "to prepare and superintend the execution of a plan for holding the exhibition." By the act of Congress approved June 1, 1872, the duties and functions of the commission were further increased and defined, and a corporation was created called "The Centennial Board of Finance," to cooperate with the commission and to raise and disburse the funds. It was to be organized under the direction of the commission. The commission was also to adopt plans for the erection of buildings, and the corporation created was to erect them in accordance with these plans.

The act also provided that the commission should "have power to control, change, or revoke all such grants, and shall appoint all judges and examiners and award all premiums." The commission was also

"to supervise the closing up of the affairs of said corporation, to audit its accounts, and submit in a report to the President of the United States the financial results of the centennial exhibition." The act also provided "no compensation for services shall be paid to the commissioners or other officers provided by this act from the Treasury of the United States." The only other officers provided for by the act were alternates to serve as commissioners when the commissioners were unable to attend.

The court properly held that these commissioners were officers of the United States. They were certainly vested with sovereign functions of the Government which were to be exercised by them for the benefit of each and every State in the Union and for the benefit of all the people of the United States.

In Bunn v. The People (45 Ill. 397) the court held:

"A person employed for a special and single object, in whose employment there is no enduring element, nor designed to be, and whose duties when completed, although years may be required for their performance, ipso facto terminate the employment, is not an officer in the sense in which that term is used in the constitution of Illinois."

In re attorneys, etc. (20 Johnson, N. Y.), the court defines the legal meaning of the term "office" to be "an employment on behalf of the Government in any station or public trust not merely transient, occasional, or incidental."

In matter of Hathaway (71 N. Y. 238–243) the court said:

"'Public office' as used in the Constitution has respect to a permanent trust to be exercised in behalf of the Government, or of all citizens who may need the intervention of a public functionary or officer, and in all matters within the range of the duties pertaining to the character of the trust. It means a right to exercise generally and in all proper cases the functions of a public trust or employment."

In McArthur v. Nelson (81 Ky. 67) the question was up as to whether certain commissioners were district officers, and the case says:

"The first section of the act authorizes the judge of the circuit court to appoint three commissioners, residents of the district, who shall hold their office at the will and pleasure of the judge. It is made the duty of the commissioners to have the courthouse constructed at a cost not exceeding $50,000, and to enable them to raise this money they are authorized to issue bonds, with coupons attached, bearing interest at 5 per cent, payable semiannually; and to redeem the bonds and pay the interest they are further empowered to levy an annual tax on the real and personal property in the district not exceeding 12 cents on the $100, etc. * * * They are not district officers within the meaning of section 10 of article 6 of the Constitution, but are the mere agents for the district, required by the act to discharge certain duties with reference to the building of the courthouse, and when those duties end their employment terminates."

In United States v. Germaine (99 U. S. 508) the question as to who are and who are not officers of the United States was quite fully considered. Under section 4777 of the Revised Statutes, United States, it is provided:

"That the Commissioner of Pensions be, and he is hereby, empowered to appoint, at his discretion, civil surgeons to make the periodical examinations of pensioners which are or may be required by law and to examine applicants for pensions where he shall deem an examination by a surgeon appointed by him necessary, and the fee for such examinations and the requisite certificates thereof in duplicate, including postage on such as are transmitted to pension agents, shall be $2, which shall be paid by the agent for paying pensions in the district within which the pensioner or claimant resides out of any money appropriated for the payment of pensions under such regulations as the Commissioner of Pensions may prescribe."

It was held in the case cited that the appointees under this statute are not officers of the United States, but mere agents of the Commissioner of Pensions.

It is perfectly clear, therefore, that the commissioners appointed under the act approved July 7, 1898, "An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for prior years, and for other purposes," the resolution approved July 7, 1898 (Pub. Res. No. 51), entitled "Joint resolution to provide for annexing the Hawaiian Islands to the United States," and the act approved June 18, 1898, entitled "An act authorizing the appointment of a nonpartisan commission to collate information and to consider and recommend legislation to meet the problems presented by labor, agriculture, and capital," are not persons "holding any office under the United States."

They are persons designated by authority of Congress to make certain investigations, inquiries, etc., or to conduct certain negotiations preliminary to and as a basis for possible action by the Congress of the United States or by one branch of it. They neither make law, execute law affecting the rights of the people, nor perform judicial functions. These commissioners are and are intended to be mere advisory agents of the Congress of the United States. Their investigations are confined to some particular matter or subject, and they are not required to take an oath of office. They have no power to decide any question or bind the Government or do any act affecting the rights of a single individual citizen.

If the House or Senate authorizes or directs the Speaker or President of the Senate, as the case may be, to appoint a special committee to investigate some particular matter or subject and report and recommend legislation, can it be claimed that an office is created or that the Members of the House or Senate appointed hold "an office"? Suppose the President of the United States is authorized to make the appointments. Does this create offices, and are the appointees "officers"?

The acts performed are for the information of the Congress, and it alone. Their suggestions and recommendations have no force; they may or may not be adopted. To make their suggestions or recommendations operative, bills or resolutions must be introduced embodying the provisions recommended, or their substance, and these must be enacted into law. If a treaty is recommended by peace commissioners, it must be submitted to the Senate and by it ratified. The acts of such a commission do not bind the President, the Senate, or the Government. Then such commissioners neither make, execute, nor interpret law. They do not possess or exercise any of the sovereign power of the Government of the United States.

That the Senate may feel that it ought to ratify or approve the recommendations of such a commission can make no difference; the fact remains that their acts are not binding upon anyone or upon any departments of the Government.

If the Congress of the United States should see fit by joint resolution to authorize the President to appoint 10 persons as commissioners, whose duty it should be to investigate the condition of the people residing in Porto Rico and recommend laws suitable to their government, and should appropriate money to pay the expenses of the commission, would anyone contend that such commissioners when appointed would become other than mere agents of the Congress for the purposes specified? Would they possess or exercise legislative, executive, or judicial functions or powers? Such commissioners would possess the mere naked power to investigate and report, and their action would conclude no one, nor would they execute or interpret any law. Their action would not affect in the slightest degree the personal or property rights of a single citizen of the Republic. They would be answerable to no power for misconduct; they would be bound by no oath.

"The officer is distinguished from the employee," says Judge Cooley, "in the greater importance, dignity, and independence of his position; in being required to take an official oath, and perhaps to give an official bond; in the liability to be called to account as a public offender for misfeasance or nonfeasance in office, and usually, though not necessarily, in the tenure of his position."

Attorneys and counselors admitted to practice in the courts of the United States are not officers of the United States. (Ex parte Garland, 4 Wall. (U. S.), 333; see also In re Robinson, 131 Mass. 376.)

In People v. Nichols (52 N. Y. 478), one of the judges of the court of appeals was designated by statute as one of three persons to examine and report upon the genuineness and value of certain relics which the State proposed to purchase, and upon the certificate of these commissioners the purchase price was to be paid. The court held that this was not an office or public trust within the meaning of the constitution of that State, which prohibits such judge from holding an office or public trust. Said the court: "It is very plain that the doing of such an act, a single act like this, is not within the meaning of the constitutional prohibition against holding any other office or public trust" (p. 485).

Applying these principles to what is known as the Postal Commission the committee finds that those Members of the House of Representatives appointed or designated as commissioners under Public Act 131, "An act making appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899," are not, nor are any of them, officers under the United States within the meaning of the Constitution.

In respect to the Industrial Commission, the committee finds that those Members of the House of Representatives appointed or designated as commissioners under Public Act No. 146, "An act authorizing the appointment of a nonpartisan commission to collate information and consider and recommend legislation to meet the problems presented by labor, agriculture, and capital," approved July 7, 1898, are not, nor are any of them, officers under the United States within the meaning of the Constitution.

In respect to the Canadian Commission the committee finds that those Members of the House of Representatives appointed or designated as commissioners under Public Act No. 182, "An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and prior years, and for other purposes," are not, nor are any of them, officers under the United States within the meaning of the Constitution.

In respect to the Hawaiian Commission the committee finds that those Members of the House of Representatives appointed or designated as commissioners under Public Resolution No. 51, "Joint resolution providing for annexing the Hawaiian Islands to the United States," are not, nor are any of them, officers under the United States within the meaning of the Constitution.

In respect to visitors to the Military Academy, etc., the committee finds that those Members of the House of Representatives appointed and designated as visitors to the Military Academy at West Point, to the Naval Academy at Annapolis, and the regents and directors and consulting trustees to the various public institutions in the District of Columbia and appointed by the Speaker of the House, are not, nor are any of them, officers under the United States within the meaning of the Constitution.

APPENDIX D.

THE CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES.

[By David K. Watson, pp. 330 to 336.]

"No Senator or Representative shall, during the time for which he was elected, be appointed to any civil office under the authority of the United States which shall have been created or the emoluments whereof shall have been increased during such time; and no person holding any office under the United States shall be a Member of either House during his continuance in office." (The Constitution of the United States, art. 1, sec. 6, par. 2.)

The constitution of Georgia, adopted in 1777, provided: "No person shall hold more than one office of profit under this State at the same time." (Madison's Writings, vol. 4, 221.)

Few provisions of the Constitution created a more earnest debate in the convention, or were the cause of a more eloquent and forcible discussion of the principles upon which the American political system is founded, than the resolution and motions which resulted in the adoption of this clause.

There was a firm determination on the part of some of the ablest men in the convention that such a clause should be inserted in the Constitution, and a belief that to omit it would be a serious error, while other members of the convention, equally able and sincere, regarded the proposition as derogatory to individual merit and a reflection of individual integrity.

After the preliminary debates in the convention on this subject, the Committee of the Whole reported, "Members of the first and second branch of the National Legislature ought to be ineligible to any office established by a particular State, or under the authority of the United States (except those particularly belonging to the functions of each branch) during the term of service, and under the National Government for the space of one year after its expiration." (Journal, 160.)

Mr. Gorham moved to strike from the report that portion of it "concerning ineligibility of members of the first branch." He considered it unnecessary and unjust. (Journal, 222.)

Mr. Butler opposed the motion. This precaution against intrigue was necessary. Men going into Parliament that they might get office for themselves or their friends were a source of corruption that ruined Great Britain.

Mr. King thought such a restriction on the members would discourage merit; it would also give a pretext to the Executive for bad appointments.

Mr. Wilson was also against discouraging merit, and suggested the fatal consequence in time of war of rendering perhaps the best commanders ineligible.

Mr. Mason opposed the motion, and regarded the disqualification as a corner stone in the fabric.

Mr. Hamilton stated, "there are inconveniences on both sides. We must take man as we find him, and if we expect him to serve the public, must interest his passions in doing so. A reliance on pure patriotism had been the source of many errors. It was known that one of the ablest politicians of England (Mr. Hume) had pronounced all that influence on the side of the Crown, which went under the name of corruption, as an essential part of the weight which maintained the equilibrium of the Constitution."

The motion of Mr. Gorham was lost by an equal division. (Journal, 222, 223.)

On the following day Mr. Pinckney moved to strike out the ineligibility of members of the first branch to office established "by a particular State," and this motion prevailed.

Mr. Madison then moved "to render members of the first branch ineligible during their term of service, and for one year after, to such offices only as should be established or the emoluments augmented by the Legislature of the United States during the term of their being Members." (Journal, 223, 224.)

Another animated debate occurred on this motion, which met with serious opposition.

Mr. Mason said in arguing against it that genius and virtue ought to be encouraged. Genius, for aught he knew, might; but that virtue should be encouraged by such a species of venality had the merit at least of being new.

Mr. Wilson supported the motion, and said the proper cure for corruption in the Legislature was to take from it the power of appointing to office. He animadverted on the impropriety of stigmatizing with the name of venality the laudable ambition of rising into the honorable offices of the Government—an ambition most likely to be found in the earlier and most incorrupt period of life, and which all wise and free governments had deemed it sound policy to cherish, not to check.

The Members of the Legislature have perhaps the hardest and least profitable task of any who engage in the service of the State. Ought this merit to be a disqualification? (Journal, 225.)

Mr. Madison said he had been led to this motion as a middle ground between ineligibility in all cases and an absolute disqualification. * * * The question was not to be viewed on one side only. The objects to be aimed at were to fill all offices with the fittest characters, and to draw the wisest and most worthy citizens into the legislative service.

The motion was defeated by a vote of two to eight. (Journal, 226, 227.) The committee of detail reported that "Members of each House shall be ineligible to, and incapable of holding, any office under the authority of the United States during the time for which they shall respectively be elected; and Members of the Senate shall be ineligible to, and incapable of holding, any such office for one year afterwards." (Journal, 452.)

The most important debate on this question, and one of the most important of the whole convention, occurred when this particular clause of the report of the committee of detail was being considered. Mr. Pinckney argued that to make the members ineligible to office was degrading, inconvenient, and impolitic. Degrading, since their election into the Legislature implied that they had the confidence of the people. Inconvenient, because the Senate might be supposed to contain the fittest men. He hoped to see that body become a school of public ministers, a nursery for statesmen. Impolitic, because the Legislature would cease to be a magnet to the first talents and abilities. He moved to postpone the section, and take up the following: "The Members of each House shall be incapable of holding any office under the United States for which they, or any others for their benefit, receive a salary, fees, or emoluments of any kind; and the acceptance of such office shall vacate their seats respectively." (Journal, 520, 521.)

Mr. Mason ironically proposed to strike out the whole section, as a more effectual expedient for encouraging that exotic corruption which might not otherwise thrive so well in the American soil; for completing that aristocracy which was probably in the contemplation of some among us; and for inviting into the legislative service those generous and benevolent characters who will do justice to each other's merit, by carving out offices and rewards for it. In the present state of American morals and manners few friends, it may be thought, will be lost to the plan by the opportunity of giving premiums to a mercenary and depraved ambition.

Mr. Mercer said: "The Governments of America will become aristocracies. They are so already. The public measures are calculated for the benefit of the governors, not of the people. The people are dissatisfied and complain. Government can only be maintained by force or influence. The Executive has not force—deprive him of influence, by rendering the Members of the Legislature ineligible to executive offices, and he becomes a mere phantom of authority. The aristocratic part will not even let him in for a share of the plunder. The Legislature will be composed of wealth and ability, and the people will be controlled by a junto."

Mr. Gerry read to the convention a resolution of the Legislature of Massachusetts instructing her deputies in the convention not to agree in any case to give to the Members of Congress a capacity to hold office under the Government. The sense of the State was still the same. He could not think, with Mr. Pinckney, that the disqualification was degrading. Confidence is the road to tyranny.

Gouverneur Morris was against rendering the Members ineligible. Why should we not avail ourselves of their services, if the people choose to give them their confidence? There can be little danger of corruption, either among the people or the legislators who are to be the electors. If they say, "We see their merits, we honor the men, we choose to renew our confidence in them," have they not a right to give them a preference, and can they be properly abridged of it?

Mr. Williamson opposed eligibility, and said he had scarcely seen a corrupt measure in the Legislature of North Carolina which could not be traced to office hunting.

Mr. Wilson was far from thinking the ambition which aspired to offices of dignity and trust an ignoble or culpable one. He was sure it was not politic to regard it in that light, or to withhold from it the prospect of those rewards which might engage it in the career of public service.

Mr. Mercer was extremely anxious on this subject. What led to the appointment of this convention? The corruption and mutability of the legislative councils of the States. If the plan does not remedy these, it will not recommend itself. It is a great mistake to suppose that the paper we are to propose will govern the United States. It is the men whom it will bring into the Government and interest in maintaining it that will govern them, and he would ask if this could be done if the members of the legislature should be ineligible to offices of States; whether such disqualification would not determine all the most influential men to stay at home and prefer appointments within their own States.

The motion to substitute Mr. Pinckney's resolution was lost by an equally divided vote. (Journal, 522, 527.)

The consideration of the report of the committee of detail was postponed and finally referred to the committee of eleven, which reported the following as a substitute for the resolution of the committee of detail: "The Members of each House shall be ineligible to any civil office under the authority of the United States during the time for which they shall respectively be elected; and no person holding an office under the United States shall be a Member of either House during his continuance in office." (Journal, 649.) This report materially changed the question which previously had been discussed by the convention, first, by limiting the ineligibility of Members to any civil office under the authority of the United States; and, second, removing the ineligibility of Senators for one year after the expiration of their term.

Mr. Pinckney moved the following as a substitute for this report: "The members of each house shall be incapable of holding any office under the United States for which they, or any other for their benefit, receive any salary, fees, or emoluments of any kind; and the acceptance of such office shall vacate their seats respectively." (Journal, 651.) He considered the ineligibility of members of the legislature to the honorable offices of Government as resembling the policy of the Romans in making the temple of virtue the road to the temple of fame. (Journal, 651.)

The vote on the motion for substituting Mr. Pinckney's motion was lost. Another sharp debate occurred and the report was amended to read: "The Members of each House shall be ineligible to any civil office under the authority of the United States created, or the emoluments whereof shall have been increased, during the time for which they shall respectively be elected. And no person holding any office under the authority of the United States shall be a Member of either House during his continuance in office." (Journal, 653.)

This section is a prohibition against a Senator or Representative being appointed to any civil office which was created, or the emoluments of which are increased, during the term of the Senator or Representative, and against a person holding an office under the United States being a Member of the Senate or House of Representatives. (Watson, The Constitution, vol. 1, pp. 330–336.)

World War Foreign Debt Commission.

Opinion of the Attorney General.

[Vol. XXII, p. 184.]

Department of Justice,
August 18, 1898.

Sir: I have your letter of the 13th instant, asking my opinion upon the question whether Hon. William L. Putnam, United States circuit judge, who was appointed and has acted as one of the two commissioners under the convention of February 8, 1896, concerning claims growing out of seizures of vessels in Bering Sea, can be paid by you for his services as such commissioner.

Your attention, it appears, has been called to Revised Statutes 1763, 1765, and the Dockery law. (2 Supp. Rev. Stat. 212.)

The provision of the Dockery law referred to is as follows:

"No person who holds an office the salary or annual compensation attached to which amounts to the sum of $2,500 shall be appointed to or hold any other office to which compensation is attached unless specially heretofore or hereafter specially authorized thereto by law."

Article 7 of the treaty of 1896 is as follows:

"Each Government shall provide for the remuneration of the commissioner appointed by it.

"The remuneration of the umpire, if one should be appointed, and all contingent and incidental expenses of the commission, or of the umpire, shall be defrayed by the two Governments in equal moieties."

The treaty, article 3, speaks of the two commissioners as constituting a commission, and article 1 provides that the two parties agree to refer all claims growing out of seizures of British vessels in Bering Sea to two commissioners, one to be appointed by the President, one by the Queen. The duties of the commissioners are confined to fairly and impartially investigating and deciding upon the claims, jointly, and jointly reporting any disagreement; upon which, an umpire is to be chosen.

On May 7, 1896, Congress passed a law appropriating $75,000, "to be expended, under the direction of the Secretary of State, with the approval of the President of the United States, in fulfilling the stipulations of the treaty." This language evidently referred to article 7, and did not provide for the payment of the claims.

The question is whether the act of 1894 applies to the commissioner and prevents the payment to Judge Putnam of compensation from the $75,000 because it forbids the appointment to or holding of a second "office to which compensation is attached."

Article II, section 2, of the Constitution, establishing the executive branch of the Government, provides:

"He [the President] shall have power, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to make treaties, provided two-thirds of the Senators present concur; and he shall nominate, and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate shall appoint ambassadors, other public ministers and consuls, judges of the Supreme Court, and all other officers of the United States whose appointments are not herein otherwise provided for, and which shall be established by law; but the Congress may by law vest the appointment of such inferior officers as they think proper in the President alone, in the courts of law, or in the heads of departments."

It would seem that the phrase "which shall be established by law" was conceived as referring to the power of Congress to pass laws necessary and proper to carry into effect all the powers granted in the Constitution, and that there was no expectation that the "officers of the United States" would be established by treaties between the United States and other countries. The commissionership in question is not an office established by law in that sense. Neither does it seem to be within the clause "ambassadors, other public ministers and consuls," for their offices were adopted from the law of nations, and exist independently of statute or treaty. (7 Opin., 242.) The commissioner is, of course, not one of the officers "whose appointments are herein otherwise provided for."

In short, the office, if it be an office, is not one of those appointments which is required by the Constitution to be made in the ways enumerated in Article II, section 2.

The treaty, to which the commission and commissionership owe their existence, provides that the President (saying nothing of the Senate) shall appoint; but although this produces a resemblance to the constitutional requirement, the commissionership is none the more, on that account, an office known to the Constitution as such. It is an office or employment emanating from the general treaty-making power, and created by it and Great Britain. In the case of United States v. Germaine (99 U. S., 510) the Supreme Court says:

"That all persons who can be said to hold an office under the Government about to be established under the Constitution were intended to be included within one or the other of these modes of appointment (those of Article II, section 2), there can be no doubt. * * * If the punishment were designed for others than officers as defined by the Constitution, words to that effect would be used, as servant, agent, person in the service or employment of the Government; and this has been done where it was so intended, as in the sixteenth section of the act of 1846 concerning embezzlement, by which any officer or agent of the United States, and all persons participating in the act, are made liable."

In the series of statutes to which the act of 1894 belongs (Rev. Stat., 1763, 1764, 1765) it will be observed that the language of the Supreme Court finds further confirmation; for, after speaking of officers, they add words to include persons serving the Government in other or doubtful capacities.

It is true that the statutes referred to were criminal; but, while this may be a reason for not confining the word office in civil statutes to a strict construction, yet what the Supreme Court says seems to indicate that where, as in this series, that word is used and followed by other designations the line of cleavage is that between constitutional and nonconstitutional offices. (See United States v. Mouat, 124 U. S., 307.)

It would seem, therefore, that the word office in the act of 1894 is to be presumed, in the absence of indications to the contrary, not to embrace such a commissionership, because not what is called a constitutional office. But this may not be so; and therefore it is well to consider that, in addition to the constitutional, there is the legal and the popular sense of the word office.

The legal definitions of a public office have been many and various. The idea seems to prevail that it is an employment to exercise some delegated part of the sovereign power; and the Supreme Court appears to attach importance to the ideas of "tenure, duration, emolument, and duties," and suggests that the last should be continuing or permanent, not occasional or temporary. In case cited it was further said: "The surgeon is only to act when called upon by the Commissioner of Pensions in some special case, as when some pensioner or claimant of a pension presents himself for examination"; and this was regarded as making his duties "occasional and intermittent."

Whether this commissioner, sent to adjudicate upon certain-named claims, listed at the end of the treaty, whose employment was thus to perform a certain task which might take a month or several months, would answer the right legal definition of an officer, must be regarded as at least doubtful. He resembles a special assistant to a district attorney, to aid in a certain case or set of cases, who has been recognized as not an officer, although a regular assistant is an officer. No "emolument" was attached to his employment by the treaty or act of May, 1896, but the former signified no more on that point than that he was to be paid by the United States, if at all, and the latter, while appropriating money to be used in carrying out article 7, left the President and Secretary free to pay or not to pay the commissioner, as might be arranged. I am not prepared to say, however, that, if nothing else were lacking to make him an officer of the United States—and we may assume that only officers of the United States were in the mind of Congress in 1894—it would be easy to establish that the commissioner could be paid out of the $75,000 and yet be regarded as holding an employment to which no "emolument" belonged. It does seem, however, that the temporary character of the employment, which was to consist of and to terminate at the end of the examination of a limited number of specified claims, withdraws one of the elements of an office which the Supreme Court regards as essential. (Auffmordt v. Hedden, 137 U. S. 327.)

As for the popular language, it seems clear that a person employed solely as a sworn judge of a joint international commission would not be spoken of as an officer of either country, although, under a treaty requiring it, selected and sent to his post by one of them.

For these reasons it seems to me that this act of 1894, passed anterior to the treaty as a supplement to a series of acts which first concerned only collectors of customs, naval officers, and surveyors, and was afterwards extended to other officers, should be regarded as not intended by Congress to invade the domain of the treaty-making authority and establish restrictions upon future occasional and temporary commissionerships created by international agreement, the nature and functions of which neither Congress nor the framers of Article II, section 2, could wisely have undertaken to foresee. The treaty in this case might have provided for the appointment of an identical commissioner by our ambassador to Great Britain, or by the President of France, instead of by the President of the United States, and might, for reasons important to the two treaty-making authorities, have expressly required one of the judges of the Supreme Court to be appointed. With such matters, it seems to me, Congress, by the act of 1894, had no intention of interfering. If within the letter, such an employment seems to be beyond the intent of that law.

It has been a useful custom of the Government for a century to assign to special work of great international importance eminent judges—Ellsworth, Jay, Nelson, etc.—while it has been no part of our policy to require services for the public without pay, theoretically amounting to just compensation.

What I have said seems to have been the executive interpretation of the word office, for Mr. Senator Morgan was appointed and paid as a member of the fur-seal arbitration tribunal, although while a Senator he aided in creating that "civil office," and Mr. Justice Brewer and Judge Alvey, since this act of 1894, have been appointed upon the commission to report upon the divisional line between Venezuela and British Guiana, all being compensated out of general appropriations for the expenses.

While, therefore, the question is not free from difficulty, I am inclined to the opinion that Judge Putnam can be paid a sum additional to his salary as judge.

I do not regard Revised Statutes 1763 and 1765, to which you refer me, as applicable to the case. If not an office, the commissionership was a distinct place, position, or employment, having nothing to do with the duties of the judgeship and compatible therewith, to which position no superior authority could detail Judge Putnam. (U. S. v. Mullett, 150 U. S. 566, and cases cited.)

Respectfully,

JOHN W. GRIGGS.

The SECRETARY OF STATE.

COMMENTS OF SENATOR WALSH ON THE FOREGOING.

In the opinion of the Attorney General submitted to the Senate on March 8, 1922, reference is made to the opinion of Attorney General Griggs (22 Op. 184) as a ruling of the department on the question under consideration by the Committee on the Judiciary under Senate resolution 244. Not only that it is not such, but that it supports the position taken by the subcommittee will be revealed by even a cursory study of the reasoning of Attorney General Griggs.

In the statement submitted with the report of the subcommittee commissions upon which Members of Congress have from time to time been appointed were divided into three classes: (1) Commissions to negotiate treaties; (2) commissions arbitral in character, existing by virtue of treaties; (3) commissions to conduct investigations and to report to Congress with a view to legislation.

The commission considered by Attorney General Griggs falls within the second class mentioned, and the opinion proceeds upon identically the same ground upon which, in the statement heretofore referred to, such commissions are differentiated from the Foreign Debt Funding Commission. He was called upon to say whether within a statute Judge Putnam, in his capacity as American member of the commission to settle claims for the confiscation of Canadian vessels engaged in pelagic sealing, was an officer of the United States. He argued that Judge Putnam did not come under the operation of section 2 of Article II of the Constitution empowering the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to "appoint ambassadors, other public ministers and consuls, judges of the Supreme Court, and all other officers of the United States whose appointments are herein otherwise provided for and which shall be established by law," because that provision was intended to apply only to positions official in character, created by act of Congress, and not to positions existing by virtue of a treaty. As to such positions the Attorney General maintains they exist not under the authority of the United States, but under the joint authority of the United States and the other party to the treaty, as will be shown from the following from the opinion, for comparison printed in a column parallel to what was said in the views submitted with the report of the subcommittee.

[From the opinion of the Attorney General.]

It would seem that the phrase "which shall be established by law" was conceived as referring to the power of Congress to pass laws necessary and proper to carry into effect all the powers granted in the Constitution, and that there was no expectation that the "officers of the United States" would be established by treaties between the United States and other countries. The commissionership in question is not an office established by law in that sense. Neither does it seem to be within the clause "ambassadors, other public ministers, and consuls," for their offices were adopted from the law of nations, and exist independently of statute or treaty. (7 Opin., 242.) The commissioner is, of course, not one of the officers "whose appointments are herein otherwise provided for."

In short, the office, if it be an office, is not one of those appointments which is required by the Constitution to be made in the ways enumerated in Article II, section 2.

The treaty, to which the commission and commissionership owe their existence, provides that the President (saying nothing of the Senate) shall appoint; but, although this produces a resemblance to the constitutional requirement, the commissionership is none the more, on that account, an office known to the Constitution as such. It is an office or employment emanating from the general treaty-making power, and created by it and Great Britain. * * * * * It seems clear that a person employed solely as a sworn judge of a joint international commission would not be spoken of as an officer of either country, although, under a treaty requiring it, selected and sent to his post by one of them.

[From the argument of Senator WALSH.]

Another class of cases, quite similar in character, includes appointments on commissions to settle international disputes, like boundary commissions or other arbitration commissions, the members of which are appointed pursuant not to an act of Congress but to a treaty. Such officers, if they may be so denominated, do not come under the operation of the clause of the Constitution under consideration which was intended to exclude Members of Congress only from such office as they had as such a part in creating or in making more desirable by increasing the emoluments attached to it. The provision in question was one of the compromises of which not a few are found in the Constitution. The more skeptical wished to make Members ineligible to appointment to any office, and not only for the term of the Member but as well for a year after its expiration. Others objected to any restriction on the appointing power in that regard. It was finally agreed that the safety of the Republic would be sufficiently assured if the temptation were removed only with respect to such offices as the Members respectively participated in creating or making more inviting in the manner indicated. So, admitting that the members of commissions, such as those last referred to, are officers and that they act under the authority of the United States, rather than under a joint authority of our country and the other party to the treaty, the offices they hold are not of that class the makers of the Constitution had in mind when they framed the clause in question—that is, though they may be within its letter, they are not within its spirit.

In addition to the contention that a position existing by virtue of a treaty is not an "office under the authority of the United States" because created not by the United States but by the joint authority of the United States and the other party or parties to the treaty, it was urged that the makers of the Constitution could have had in mind only those offices in the creation of which Members of both Houses participated. It may be that there is equal reason for excluding Senators from office in the creation of which they participated by the ratification of a treaty as from offices created by act of Congress. But inasmuch as the ineligibility extends to Representatives in all cases in which Senators are disqualified, and the reason for the rule established by the Constitution fails as to Representatives in the case of positions created by a treaty, it is a reasonable contention that such positions do not fall under the inhibition of the Constitution.

Accordingly the appointment of a Senator or a Representative as a member of an arbitral commission is not a persuasive precedent or, justly considered, a precedent at all for the appointments giving rise to the present inquiry.

MINORITY VIEWS.

The undersigned members of the Committee on the Judiciary, which committee has had under consideration Senate resolution 244, are unable to concur in the report of the committee, it being their opinion that the Hon. REED SMOOT and the Hon. THEODORE E. BURTON are eligible for membership on the commission created by the act of Congress approved February 9, 1922, entitled "An act to create a commission authorized to refund or convert obligations of foreign Governments held by the United States of America, and for other purposes."

They submit herewith their views upon the subject matter of the resolution.

KNUTE NELSON.
ALBERT B. CUMMINS.

The resolution directing the Committee on the Judiciary to make a report is as follows:

"Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be, and it hereby is, directed to inquire into and report to the Senate, not later than Tuesday next (February 28, 1922), touching the eligibility of Hon. REED SMOOT and Hon. THEODORE E. BURTON to membership on the commission created by the act of Congress approved February 9, 1922, entitled 'An act to create a commission authorized to refund or convert obligations of foreign Governments held by the United States of America, and for other purposes,' reference being made to section 6 of Article I of the Constitution of the United States, as follows:

"'No Senator or Representative shall, during the time for which he was elected, be appointed to any civil office under the authority of the United States which shall have been created or the emoluments whereof shall have been increased during such time.'".

It will be observed that the committee is required to answer a pure question of constitutional law, namely: Are Senator REED SMOOT and Representative THEODORE E. BURTON eligible, under the Constitution, to receive appointments as members of the World War Foreign Debt Commission, a commission created by the act of February 9, 1922; the act having been passed while these nominees of the President were Members of Congress, and during the time for which they were respectively elected?

Whether these selections for the commission are wise or unwise, whether the reasons which prompted the provisions of section 6 of Article I of that instrument would logically lead to the further conclusion that Members of Congress should receive no appointments of any character from the President, is a subject not submitted to and upon which the minority of the committee expresses no opinion.

There are a thousand ways, some of them proper and some of them improper, through which the President, so far as the Constitution is concerned, can bring influence to bear upon Members of Congress, and likewise there are a thousand ways, some of them proper and some of them improper, through which the Members of Congress can exert their influence upon the Chief Executive. It must be constantly borne in mind that the committee is not charged with the duty of recommending amendments to the Constitution to supply the defects of an instrument prepared and adopted at a time and under conditions which rendered it impossible to foresee or anticipate all the needs of modern government. Nor should it be forgotten that it is just as destructive of the security afforded by a written Constitution to attempt to extend its terms by forced and unnatural interpretation as it is to limit its construction by similar methods.

Unquestionably it is not only our right but our duty carefully to consider the known object which the makers of our Constitution had in view when particular provisions were debated and adopted; but respect for our fundamental law will not long survive if, in order to reach what may now be regarded as a desirable end and one which we may believe that the framers of the Constitution would have desired to reach had they been able to conceive the present development of organized society, we refuse to accept the true meaning of the words and phrases actually employed.

The minority has referred to this phase of the subject because it is earnestly and ably contended that to appoint a Senator or a Representative to any position of honor, distinction, or profit would be attended by the same evils that were anticipated and provided against by our forefathers when they forbade the appointment of a Member of either House to a civil office under the authority of the United States created during the time for which he was elected.

The fundamental difference between the majority and the minority of the committee relates to the rule of construction which should be adopted. We may not differ upon literal definitions, but, nevertheless, lying deeper than the words which we may use to describe the guides which we follow, there is a radical divergence in thought.

The majority of the committee, while they would not admit the suggestion, are in fact applying the rule which a distinguished President of the United States once stated in this very plain, blunt way—we are not attempting to quote him literally, but the substance of his declaration was that the Constitution at any given time means what the needs of the people at that time require that it shall mean. There are a great many statesmen of high degree and lawyers of great attainments who if they are not willing to avow this canon of construction act in accordance with its standards.

It is not difficult to understand the attitude of men who feel that it would promote the public interest if Members of Congress were ineligible for appointment to any office, position, place, or employment which they helped to create; first, because in rare instance the possibility of appointment might present a temptation that would influence their votes or, second, because the opportunity for such an appointment might give to the Executive an undue influence respecting the legislative act.

The minority of the committee do not deny that there is a possibility of such a result, but they can not accept the conclusion that because there is such a possibility we are justified in rewriting this clause of our Constitution, ignoring the distinction between the words "office," "position," "place," and "employment," and having so rewritten it, in testing the eligibility of Senator SMOOT and Representative BURTON, not by anything that those who have adopted the Constitution declared but by words and phrases not found in that instrument, but which according to the view of the majority ought to have been incorporated in it. The minority are strongly in favor of a liberal construction of the Constitution, but they can not concur in the obvious effort to amend that instrument through interpretation.

Moreover, it is not necessary to wreck the Constitution in order to accomplish the purpose which the majority of the committee believe should be accomplished and to institute and maintain the public policy which they are so confident should control this and every other like situation. If the majority of the Senate are of the opinion that in this instance it is contrary to the public interest that these two Members of Congress shall become members of the commission, it can refuse to confirm them, and so end the whole controversy. In any future instance, if Congress desires to prohibit the appointment of Members of Congress to any position, place, or employment, as distinguished from an "office" created by any law that it may enact, it is within its constitutional authority to do so. This is mentioned not because it is strictly material to the inquiry, but in order to call attention to the remedy that is in the hands of the Senate in this particular case and that would be in the hands of the Congress in any case occurring hereafter.

Unquestionably the chief purposes of the clause of the Constitution under consideration were, first, to remove the temptation which, theoretically at least, is presented to Congress to create offices or increase the compensation of offices already created, which would be filled by the appointment of the Members of Congress, and, second, to preserve the independence of the legislative branch of the Government by excluding the improper influence of the Chief Executive.

It is manifest and would be at once admitted that the provision, even if rewritten by the majority of the committee, can not be extended to embrace all the influences of a generally similar character. For illustration: Suppose the act creating the commission had given to the President the authority to appoint a legal adviser to that body at a salary of $50,000 per annum and the President had appointed a Member of the Senate as such adviser; it is not contended that the person so appointed would be an officer of the United States. There is no authority, however extreme, that does not hold that such an appointment would be a mere employment, and yet the objectional temptation and the opportunity for improper influence would be as great, if not greater, than in the case of the creation of an office. Illustrations of this character could be indefinitely multiplied. One, however, is sufficient, and it serves to demonstrate how impossible it is to broaden the language of the Constitution so that it will meet all the evils which may be encountered in the general field relating to the eligibility of Members of Congress to receive recognition of any kind at the hands of the Executive.

In the discussion in which we have indulged it must not be understood that the minority of the committee entertain any doubt with respect to the propriety of the two appointments under consideration. On the contrary, we regard these appointments as eminently wise—first, because both the appointees are in every way highly fitted to perform the work assigned to them; and, second, because they understand the attitude of Congress toward the subject with which they are to deal, and are therefore likely to recommend to the President arrangements with our foreign debtors that will command the approval of the legislative bodies to which they belong.

We beg to submit that the view of the construction of the Constitution upon which we insist is not to be disparaged by the suggestion that those who hold it have resorted to a technicality. On the contrary, our contention relates to the very substance of orderly government. Any other rule of interpretation leads immediately to the complete overthrow of written constitutions and statutory enactments. The men who wrote the Constitution chose to confine the provision respecting Members of Congress to "civil offices." If the commissioners under the funding act hold civil offices, as distinguished from "civil positions," "civil places," or "civil employments," then Senator SMOOT and Representative BURTON are ineligible. The sole function of the Committee on the Judiciary is to answer the one question: Are these commissioners whose appointments are authorized by the funding act civil officers under the authority of the United States? If they are, then A. W. Mellon, Charles E. Hughes, and Herbert Hoover hold two offices, respectively, and Senator SMOOT and Representative BURTON are ineligible.

Before referring to the authorities, and there are many of them, in which the courts have had occasion to consider what is and what is not an "office" under the provisions of the various State constitutions and various Federal and State statutes, we turn to an examination of the terms of the particular act under which the World War Foreign Debt Commission was created. The material portions of the act are as follows:

* * * "That a World War Foreign Debt Commission is hereby created consisting of five members, one of whom shall be the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall serve as chairman, and four of whom shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

"SEC. 2. That, subject to the approval of the President, the commission created by section 1 is hereby authorized to refund or convert, and extend the time of payment of the principal or the interest, or both, of any obligation of any foreign government now held by the United States of America, or any obligation of any foreign government hereafter received by the United States of America (including obligations held by the United States Grain Corporation, the War Department, the Navy Department, or the American Relief Administration), arising out of the World War, into bonds or other obligations of such foreign government in substitution for the bonds or other obligatons of such government now or hereafter held by the United States of America, in such form and of such terms, conditions, date or dates of maturity, and rate or rates of interest, and with such security, if any, as shall be deemed for the best interests of the United States of America."

The minority of the committee are of the opinion that, if the words "subject to the approval of the President" were not in the statute, there would still be room for the contention that the commissioners are not officers, under the principles announced and the definitions found in many of the authorities to which reference will hereafter be made. However, we frankly concede that if the words just quoted had been omitted there would be presented an entirely different question and an exceedingly close one. But these words "subject to the approval of the President" are in the statute, and they remove the question from the region of doubt or uncertainty.

While we postpone the consideration of the decided cases, it may be helpful to remember that the Constitution uses the words "civil office" to describe its purpose. Those who employed the words could have said, had they been so minded, "position," "place," "employment," or the like, but they did not; and it is the duty of the committee, under the resolution, to render an opinion upon the meaning of the word "office" as distinguished from the meaning of the broader and more comprehensive words "position," "place," "employment," or other similar terms. The word "office" had a fairly definite meaning at the time the Constitution was adopted; and inasmuch as it occurs not only in the Constitution of the United States but in all the State constitutions and in innumerable laws, both Federal and State, it has been the subject, as heretofore suggested, of a great many judicial discussions and decisions, some of which have been collected and appear in the exceedingly interesting and able paper accompanying the report of the majority of the committee. These decisions are not harmonious; and as there are no two cases which involve the same conditions, they are of little value, save for one thing, namely, we are able to extract from them and from commentators, with fair precision, the elements which must concur and combine in order that any given position or place may constitute an "office." Disregarding all disputed elements, there will be found universal agreement as to one indispensable element. This element is not only admitted, but emphasized in the argument of the majority of the committee; and inasmuch as we desire to bring this matter at once to the test of this indispensable characteristic, we quote from Mechem's Public Offices, etc. (sec. 4), which states the principle as clearly as it can be found anywhere:

"Office involves delegation of sovereign functions. The great important characteristic which distinguishes an office from employment or a contract is that the creation and conferring of an office involves a delegation to the individual of some of the sovereign functions of the Government to be exercised by him for the benefit of the people; that some portion of the sovereignty of the country, either legislative, executive, or judicial, attaches for the time being to be exercised for the public benefit. Unless the powers conferred are of this nature the individual is not a public officer. This involves necessarily the power (1) to legislate, (2) execute a law, or (3) hear and determine, judicially, questions submitted. Therefore mere power to investigate some particular subject and report thereon, or to negotiate a treaty of peace or on some commercial subject and report, without power to make binding on the Government, does not constitute a person an officer."

The principles here announced are universally accepted, and by no one more clearly than the Senator from Montana. In his address to the Senate upon this subject he says (CONG. REC., February 24, p. 3329):

"Mr. President, I think the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] correctly stated the necessary elements that make an office. The first question is, Is it created by law? Undoubtedly this commission was created by law—by an act of Congress. Second, is the officer, or are the commissioners, intrusted with a portion of the sovereign power of the Government either to legislate, to enact a law, to execute a law, or to construe a law?"

All that remains is to apply this test to the powers and duties of the commission created by the funding act. The commission has no power whatsoever. Its duties are purely preliminary and advisory. It can do nothing that will bind the Government of the United States in any respect or degree. Every act that it performs is without the least force or effect until approved by the President. It is not invested with any part of the sovereign authority of the United States. It has no function save to present to the President its work for his approval. It is to the President that Congress has delegated the authority to enter into a binding agreement. While the work of the commissioners may be more dignified and important than the work of any of the employees of the commission, it is in every sense of the same character. It is the President who becomes responsible for everything that is done.

It has been suggested that the President stands in the same relation to the commission that the courts bear to such tribunals as the Interstate Commerce Commission or the Federal Trade Commission, but we are not impressed with the analogy. It is true that there are instances in which the orders of these commissions may be reviewed by the courts, but the action of the reviewing courts is not necessary to make the orders of such commissions binding upon the parties to them. The moment they are issued they are in full force and effect until set aside by the judgment of a superior tribunal. It is not so with the commission created by the funding act.

That commission can make no order, enter into no contract, make no arrangement of any description until the President approves it. It is his approval, and his approval alone, which gives to the work of the commission its validity. The commission may negotiate, gather information, put proposed agreements into form, and report to the President. Its duties and powers are then concluded and if nothing further is done their work is valueless and can not in any manner affect the people or the Government of the United States. It is the President, and the President alone, who gives life and force to the agreements which may be presented to him. The conclusion is irresistible; the commissioners are not "officers under the authority of the United States."

The majority of the committee, in the course of their argument, mention the fact that the funding act itself contains the implication that the commissioners are officers, because it provided that they must be appointed by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

With regard to this phase of the matter it is sufficient to say that the action of the Senate in this respect, whether considered or unconsidered, can not change the character of the duties performed by the commission, and is entitled to little or no weight in reaching a conclusion upon the merits of the subject submitted to the committee for examination and report. Moreover, whatever effect the inclusion of this provision in the act may have is entirely neutralized by another provision wholly inconsistent with it. The act contains this clause:

"That a World War Foreign Debt Commission is hereby created, consisting of five members, one of whom shall be the Secretary of the Treasury."

In this clause Congress attempts to select and appoint one of the members of the commission. It will not be denied that if the members of the commission are officers Congress can not select or appoint them. We are thus presented with this curious situation, that in the same sentence Congress has affirmed that the commissioners are officers and are not officers.

While it is not within the province of the committee to make observations upon the constitutionality of the funding act, it is, nevertheless, proper to say that if it be held that the commissioners are officers within the meaning of the Constitution there would arise at once the gravest doubt with respect to the constitutionality of the law creating the commission. While the reservation in the act providing for confirmation by the Senate of an appointment to a position, as distinguished from an "office," a reservation not warranted by the Constitution, might not affect the validity of the law, yet if these commissioners are officers, then the attempt on the part of Congress to select or appoint one of them, thus invading the authority of the President, would constitute an affirmative violation of the Constitution and invalidate the entire statute.

The clause of the Constitution now under discussion has never been judicially construed or applied, and therefore we can not appeal to any direct adjudication. It may be worth while, however, to pass from the consideration of the one element in an "office" concerning which there is no conflict of opinion and examine the question from another point of view.

In United States v. Germaine (99 U. S. 508) the Supreme Court of the United States found it necessary to determine whether a civil surgeon appointed by the Commissioner of Pensions under an act of Congress was an officer of the United States and subject to indictment and punishment under a criminal statute which declared as follows:

"Every officer of the United States who is guilty of extortion under color of his office shall be punished, etc."

In the course of the opinion (delivered by Justice Miller) the court said:

"If we look to the nature of defendant's employment, we think it equally clear that he is not an officer. In that case, referring to United States v. Hartwell (6 Wall. 385), the court said, the term embraces the ideas of tenure, duration, emolument, and duties, and that the latter were continuing and permanent, not occasional or temporary. In the case before us, the duties are not continuing and permanent, but they are occasional and intermittent. The surgeon is only to act when called on by the Commissioner of Pensions in some special case, as when some pensioner or claimant of a pension presents himself for examination. He may make 50 of these examinations in a year, or none. He is required to keep no place of business for the public use. He gives no bond and takes no oath, unless by some order of the Commissioner of Pensions of which we are not advised."

The general field which this case occupies is full of authorities from State courts. Prominent among these is Bunn v. The People (45 Ill. 397). In this case Jacob Bunn and others had been appointed, by an act of the Illinois Legislature, commissioners charged with the duty of erecting a new statehouse. The constitution of the State contained the following section:

"The governor shall nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the senate (or a majority of all the senators concurring), appoint all officers whose offices are established by this constitution or which may be created by law, and whose appointments are not otherwise provided for; and no such officer shall be appointed or elected by the general assembly."

Another section declared:

"That no such officer shall be elected by the general assembly."

The proceeding was in the nature of a quo warranto brought for the purpose of testing the right of these commissioners to hold their alleged offices. We quote significant passages from the opinion:

"It is not contended that the magnitude of the object or the amount or varieties of duties imposed to carry it out determines the character of the employment or will convert that which was a mere employment, temporary in its very nature, into an office; it is only their continuous nature that will have that effect. * * *

"It seems to us that it can not be predicated of these plaintiffs in error that their duties are of such a character that a general duty continues, * * *. In fact, there are no general duties imposed by the act in question on these appointees; they have only one single special duty to perform, and that is to superintend the erection of a statehouse, and when that is performed their functions, ipso facto, are at end. * * *

"It seems to us the term 'such officer,' judging from the contemporaneous action and construction of the clause by the legislature, had reference alone to such officers as had some portion of the functions of government committed to their charge. No man can certainly say to which of the three departments of our Government these appointees belong. It will not do to say that they belong to the executive, because they are required to execute a law. The same may be said of road commissioners; they execute the laws under which they derive their appointment, and so of numberless persons necessarily employed by the State in subordinate positions and for a special purpose. So far as we have any knowledge on this subject or are enabled to judge from the facts of contemporaneous history, no one has ever supposed the legislature had not full power to appoint and employ all such agents as might be deemed necessary by them to perform duties not of a permanent but of a transient and incidental character such as we see in abundance in our statute books. No one has ever exalted such employees to the position of an officer, though their duties might require months or years for their full performance. There is no enduring element in these employments, nor designed to be; the duty being performed, the place is vacant by the very fact of performance. * * * * * * "The appointees are to perform a duty single in itself, which the legislature could not of and by itself perform—that is, to superintend the erection of a statehouse, and disburse the moneys the legislature may appropriate to such purpose. No power is given to levy taxes, and no governmental act is to be performed by them."

The court cites many of the older cases which are worthy of careful review but which we must leave to the examination of the members of the committee.

In the matter of Hathaway (71 N. Y. 238) will be found an instructive discussion of this phase of the subject.

In 3 Greenleaf, 48, which is the answer of the Supreme Court of Maine to a question propounded by the governor of that State, the distinction between an "office" and a "position," "place," or "employment" is as clearly defined as the English language can define it, and the opinion deserves the most careful study.

We could multiply cases of this general character indefinitely, but it would serve no useful purpose to do so, for after we have analyzed all the varying shades of judicial opinion and noted their inharmonious definitions, we must resort finally to our instinctive classification of the particular commission created by the funding act. No two commissions are alike in their powers or duties, and when we form a judgment with respect to the essential characteristics of an "office" as compared with a "position," "place," or "employment" our fair ordinary common sense must assign this commission to the one classification or the other.

There are some suggestions in the argument submitted with the majority report which seem to require a reply. The argument refers to several instances in which Senators or Members of Congress have been appointed to settle international disputes "like boundary commissioners or other arbitration commissions," and it is said that these commissioners have been appointed "pursuant not to an act of Congress but to a treaty," and it is further insisted that "such officers, if they may be so denominated, do not come under the operation of the clause of the Constitution under consideration." Why not? The Constitution does not say that the office must be created by an act of Congress. It says he shall not be appointed to any "civil office under the authority of the United States which shall have been created, or the emoluments whereof have been increased, during such time." A treaty is the supreme law of the land, and an office created by a treaty, even though the Members of the House have no voice in bringing the treaty into existence, is just as clearly within the prohibition of the Constitution as is an office created under an act of Congress. It seems to be simply another effort to make the Constitution so flexible that it may shrink or expand to meet the constantly changing views of public policy.

In the majority argument great emphasis is placed upon the fact that unless the commissioners are held to be officers they can not be punished for infidelity or wrongdoing; that if they are officers they can be impeached, and that this situation should lead us to the conclusion that they are officers. It is quite impossible for the minority of the committee to give weight to this contention. Indeed, the suggestion that persons composing the commission under the funding act ought to be subject to impeachment, as they would undoubtedly be if they are officers of the United States, furnishes a powerful reason for the conclusion that they are not officers.

The impeachment and trial by the Senate of men whose work is of the most temporary character is hardly thinkable. There can be no more persuasive reason for believing that they are not officers than the insistence upon the part of the majority that they ought to be subject to impeachment. It will be observed that the funding act does not require these commissioners to take an oath of office, and from that omission it may fairly be inferred that Congress did not regard them as officers, but the act might well have contained apt provisions for their punishment in the event of wrongdoing. Impeachment, even followed by removal from their positions, would be very inadequate punishment for the crimes of which they might be guilty. It is quite illogical, it seems to us, to insist that we must hold the commissioners to be officers in order to subject them to impeachment, when Congress could very appropriately have attached whatever penalty it thought desirable for misconduct on the part of the commission.

For the reasons we have merely outlined in this report, the minority of the committee is of the opinion that Senator REED SMOOT and Representative THEODORE E. BURTON are eligible for appointment as members of the World War Foreign Debt Commission.

VIEWS AND OPINION OF SENATOR NELSON.

The funding act creates a commission of five members, of which the Secretary of the Treasury is one (and it is provided that he shall serve as chairman of the commission), and four others, who shall be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate. The work of the commission is, in all respects, subject to the approval of the President; in other words, it is in subrogation to his wishes and direction. If he approves the work of the commission, it becomes valid; if he disapproves, it is invalid. The entire authority granted by the act shall cease at the end of three years from the date of the passage of the act (February 9, 1922). No salary is provided in the act for the commissioners, and they are not required to take an oath or give a bond for the performance of their duties.

The question raised by Senate Resolution 244 relates to the validity of the appointment of one Senator and one Member of Congress as members of the commission. It involves the construction of section 6 of Article I of the Constitution, to wit:

"No Senator or Representative shall, during the time for which he was elected, be appointed to any civil office under the authority of the United States, which shall have been created * * * during such time."

And the question involved is whether this commission is such a civil office as is contemplated in the paragraph of the Constitution quoted.

Bearing in mind that the action of the commission is in all respects subject to the approval of the President, these commissioners can not be regarded as independent officers, but rather as a committee or board to advise and instruct the President. They have a specific duty in that respect to perform, and when that duty has been performed, or when three years have elapsed, their function is at an end. Under such circumstances the commission can not be regarded as an independent civil office, nor the commissioners as independent civil officers.

It is a question both of precedent and practice, and of legal principles. The Supreme Court of the United States, in the case of United States v. Hartwell (6 Wall., 385), lays down this general rule:

"An office is a public station or employment conferred by the appointment of the Government. The term embraces the ideas of tenure, duration, emolument, and duties."

In 1867 the Legislature of Illinois passed an act for the erection of a new capitol or statehouse, and in the act provided for the appointment of a commission of seven men named in the law to act as a commission to take charge of the erection of the new statehouse or capitol. The constitution of Illinois provided—

"That the governor shall nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the senate (or a majority of the senators concurring), appoint all officers whose offices are established by this constitution or which may be created by law, and whose appointments are not otherwise provided for, and no such officers shall be appointed or elected by the general assembly."

The question raised was whether these commissioners appointed in the act were officers that should have been appointed by the governor within the meaning of the constitution. The case came before the Supreme Court of Illinois in the case of Bunn v. The People (45 Ill., 397), and it was decided by the court that the commissioners appointed by the legislative act were not officers of the character required to be appointed by the governor. The court in this case laid down this doctrine:

"A person employed for a special and single object, in whose employment there is no enduring element, nor designed to be, and whose duties when completed, although years may be required for their performance, ipso facto terminate the employment, is not an officer in the sense in which that term is used in the constitution."

The court further adds:

"In determining whether these commissioners are officers, it is proper to take into consideration the uniform contemporaneous and continuous expression given by the legislature, since the adoption of the constitution, to the clause in question, and from the construction thus given it must be concluded that they are not to be regarded as officers, and that such clause has only reference to such officers as had some portions of the functions of government committed to their charge."

In the case of Matter of Hathaway (71 N. Y., 238), the court laid down this rule:

"The term 'public office' as used in the constitution has respect to a permanent public trust or employment to be exercised generally and in all proper cases. It does not include the appointment to meet special exigencies of an individual to perform transient, occasional, or incidental duties such as are ordinarily performed by public officers. As to such appointment the legislature is left untrammeled and at liberty to vest the courts with power to make them."

In this case it was held that the order of the court appointing a person to act as surrogate and directing a commission to issue to him in the matter of the probate of a will in a case where a surrogate, county judge, and district attorney were disqualified from acting, was valid.

Mechem, Public Offices, section 4, contains the following statement:

"Office involves delegation of sovereign functions. The most important characteristic which distinguishes an office from an employment or contract is that the creation and conferring of an office involves a delegation to the individual of some of the sovereign functions of government, to be exercised by him for the benefit of the public; that some portion of the sovereignty of the country, either legislative, executive, or judicial, attaches, for the time being, to be exercised for the public benefit. Unless the powers conferred are of this nature, the individual is not a public officer."

In a case that came up in the State of Maine under an act of the State legislature authorizing the governor to appoint one or more agents for the preservation of timber on public lands and for other purposes, the question arose as to whether it was a civil office of profit under the State, so that no senator or representative of the legislature could be appointed as such agent. The opinion of the Supreme Court was sought upon this question, and there was a full discussion of the subject matter by the court. The court in its opinion, among other things, says:

"On a careful review of those sections in which the term 'office' or 'offices' is used it will be found from the connection in which it stands to have reference to the division of the sovereign power which has been before States into the legislative, executive, and judicial departments. * * * There is a manifest difference between an office and an employment under the Government. We apprehend that the term 'office' implies a delegation of a portion of the sovereign power to and possession of it by the person filling the office, and the exercise of such power within legal limits constitutes the correct discharge of the duties of such office. The power thus delegated and possessed may be a portion belonging sometimes to one of the three great departments, and sometimes to another; still it is a legal power which may be rightfully exercised, and in its effects it will bind the rights of others and be subject to revision and correction only according to the standing laws of the State. * * * It appears, then, that every 'office,' in the constitutional meaning of the term, implies an authority to exercise some portion of the sovereign power either in making, executing, or administering the laws."

The court came to the conclusion that these timber agents were not officers of the State within the meaning of the constitution.

In the case of McArthur v. Nelson (81 Ky. 67) the question was whether certain commissioners appointed by the circuit court to take charge of the construction of a courthouse were district officers within the meaning of the constitution of Kentucky. Upon this question the court states as follows:

"The first section of the act authorizes the judge of the circuit court to appoint three commissioners, residents of the district, who shall hold their office at the will and pleasure of the judge. It is made the duty of the commissioners to have the courthouse constructed at a cost not exceeding $50,000, and to enable them to raise this money they are authorized to issue bonds, with coupons attached, bearing interest at 5 per cent, payable semiannually; and to redeem the bonds and pay the interest they are further empowered to levy an annual tax on the real and personal property in the district not exceeding 12 cents on the $100, etc. * * * They are not district officers within the meaning of section 10 of article 6 of the constitution, but are the mere agents for the district, required by the act to discharge certain duties with reference to the building of the courthouse, and when those duties end their employment terminates."

If we apply these general rules laid down by the courts to the case in hand, it would appear that these commissioners are not civil officers of the United States within the constitutional sense. Without dwelling upon the point that these appointments are of a transitory character, that no provision is made for salaries, that no bond or oath of office is required, nevertheless the controlling and decisive fact is that they are in fact only the advisers of the President, for whatever program or plan they may adopt or whatever action they may take in respect to the funding of our foreign debts it is of no effect unless approved by the President, so that ultimately whatever is done in respect to the funding of our foreign debts is the act of the Executive and not the act of the commissioners.

These commissioners stand on a par with the members of many other commissions that have been appointed during the history of the Government. Among these are the so-called Industrial Commission, part of it appointed by the President of the Senate, part of it by the Speaker of the House, and part of it by the President of the United States, with power to investigate and report to Congress. The Hawaiian Commission of five members, two of whom were to be Hawaiians, were appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate (see act of July 7, 1898, entitled "Joint resolution providing for annexing the Hawaiian Islands to the United States"). This commission was required to recommend such legislation as they deemed necessary to Congress. In substance this is similar to that of the funding commission, for practically the funding commission are required to report to the President, and he takes final action. Whether a report is made to Congress or to the President, in neither case does it become effective until approved—in the one case by Congress, in the other case by the President. Senators Morgan and Cullom and Representative Hitt were members of the Hawaiian Commission.

Pursuant to protocol entered into between our Government and Great Britain relative to the appointment of a joint commission for the adjustment of questions at issue between the United States and Great Britain in respect to the relations between the former and the Dominion of Canada, and pursuant to the following provision in the act of July 7, 1898, an act making appropriations to supply deficiencies for the fiscal year 1898, etc., to wit:

"Canadian Commission: For the expense on the part of the United States of a joint commission to be appointed for the adjustment of differences between the United States and Great Britain in respect to the Dominion of Canada, including the compensation of the commissioners representing the United States, the pay of expert service for preparation of papers, for the portion of joint expenses, chargeable to the United States, for printing and all other incidental expenses, to be disbursed under the direction of the Secretary of State, $50,000, to remain available during the fiscal year 1899."

Senators Faulkner and Fairbanks and Representative Dingley were appointed members of this commission.

The protocol of the conferences in Washington in May, 1898, leading up to the appointment of this commission, is found in volume 1 of Treaties, Conventions, etc., by Malloy, at page 776, and shows that the conclusions of the commission were to be binding on both the United States and Great Britain.

President Harrison, on June 6, 1892, appointed Senator John T. Morgan, of Alabama, as an arbitrator on behalf of the United States under the treaty of February 29, 1892, between the United States and Great Britain, to determine the jurisdictional rights of the United States in waters of the Bering Sea, for the preservation of the fur seals. This arbitration court met at Paris and its decision was binding and required no Senate ratification.

President Roosevelt, on March 4, 1903, appointed Senator HENRY CABOT LODGE a member of the tribunal to consider and decide the boundary line between Alaska and Canada under the provisions of the convention between the United States and Great Britain, signed at Washington January 24, 1903. The decision of the tribunal was to be final. (See convention of January 24, 1903, vol. 1, p. 787, Malloy's Treaties and Conventions.)

In the last two cases, that of Senator Morgan and Senator LODGE, their action as arbitrators or members of the tribunal was final and binding and required no ratification on the part of the Senate. Their duties were clearly of an executive character and were not subject to review either by the President or Congress; and they certainly were much closer to the definition of a "civil officer of the United States," found in the Constitution, than the members of the commission provided for in the funding bill.

In September, 1898, President McKinley appointed Senator Davis, of Minnesota, Senator Fry, of Maine, and Senator Gray, of Delaware, members of a commission to negotiate a treaty with Spain.

A number of other cases of commissions appointed by the President could be cited, much akin to the commission of the funding bill. While these cases that are cited, or might be cited, do not, ipso facto, settle the constitutional question involved, yet they serve to show the legislative and executive construction given to the provision of the Constitution here in question. In the case of many of these commissions, reports must be made to Congress. In the case under consideration, the report of the funding commission must be made to the President, and must be ratified by him before it becomes valid; hence it seems clear that these commissioners are simply advisers of the President, who prepare and recommend to him the proper course to be pursued and followed; but it is his act, his approval, that breathes life into the work of the commission and gives it any effective validity.

The Henderson report (H. R.) of February 21, 1899, finds, among other matters, that the members of the Hawaiian commission were not holding any office under the United States; that the members of the postal commission were not officers of the United States; that the members of the industrial commission were not officers of the United States; and that the members of the Canadian commission, heretofore referred to, were not officers of the United States.

In view of the legal principles quoted, and in view of the many legislative precedents referred to, our conclusion is that Senator SMOOT and Representative BURTON, appointed members of the commission provided for in the refunding law, would not, as such members of the commission, be holding "a civil office under the authority of the United States," and that they are eligible as members of the commission.

WORLD WAR FOREIGN DEBT COMMISSION.

Message from the President of the United States, transmitting, in response to Senate resolution of March 7 (calendar day, March 8), 1922, an opinion of the Attorney General relating to the eligibility of Senator SMOOT and Representative BURTON to serve on the World War Foreign Debt Commission.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, March 8, 1922.

Hon. CALVIN COOLIDGE,
President of the Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: Agreeable to the request of the Senate, expressed in a resolution concerning the passage of which I have just been informed, I am sending to you an opinion of the Attorney General relating to the eligibility of Senator SMOOT and Representative BURTON to serve on the World War Foreign Debt Commission.

Very truly yours,

WARREN G. HARDING.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., March 8, 1922.

MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: I have the honor to acknowledge your request for my opinion as to whether the appointment of Senator SMOOT and Representative BURTON to the World War Foreign Debt Commission is invalid under Article I, section 6, of the Constitution.

Were this a case of first impression, I should have serious doubt as to what reply I should make. The language of the Constitution is so broad and comprehensive that it can not be denied that the commissioners in question, in a general sense, hold a "civil office under the authority of the United States," and as this commission was created by the Congress at a time when the two commissioners were Members of that body, the application of the section of the Constitution does present a serious and debatable question.

This department has already expressed an opinion on the subject, for, in an opinion rendered by my predecessor, Attorney General Griggs (Op. Atty. Gen., vol. 22, p. 183), specific reference is made to the fact that Senator Morgan was, with the approval of the Executive, appointed a member of the fur seal arbitration, although, while a Senator, he aided in creating that "civil office."

I have failed to find any judicial interpretation of the section of the Constitution now under consideration, and, in the absence of such finally authoritative interpretation, great weight must be attached to the practical construction put upon the Constitution from the beginning of the Government. In such practical construction a distinction has always been made between special employment on the one hand and offices on the other, and between offices—using that term in a general sense—which serve only a temporary purpose, and those which have duration and permanency. From the very beginning of the Government Members of the Senate and the House have, from time to time, been asked to render services for the Government upon commissions of various kinds, and it has never been decided that such temporary employment for a special purpose and to serve an immediate exigency constituted a "civil office" within the meaning of the constitutional provision above referred to.

The Supreme Court has held in a number of cases (United States v. Hartwell, 6 Wall. 385; United States v. Germaine, 99 U. S. 508; Auffmordt v. Hedden, 137 U. S. 310) that the word "office" "expresses the idea of tenure, duration, emolument, and duties." Its duties must be "continuing and permanent, not occasional and temporary." In the last-cited case the office then under consideration had no general functions, nor any employment which had any duration as to time, or which extended over any case further than the power to act on that particular case. It was held by the Supreme Court "that the incumbent did not hold an 'office' within the meaning of Article II, section 2, of the Constitution."

Where, therefore, a position does not have continuancy and permanency and its function is restricted to a single matter, the position seems to be that of an executive agent and not an "office" within the meaning of the Constitution.

Many cases could be cited in other jurisdictions and the views of text writers could also be readily adduced to justify the theory that the idea of an office "clearly embraces the idea of tenure, duration, fees, or emoluments, rights, and powers, as well as that of duty."

Applying this distinction between an "office" and a temporary trust to the act of Congress which created the World War Foreign Debt Commission, I would say that for several reasons it excludes the application of the word "office" as above defined.

The commissioners receive no compensation.

Their tenure of office is limited in time and is restricted to a single object.

The subject matter of their duties is work in which the Congress has a peculiar interest and as to which it is finally responsible; for if the adjustment of the debts due to the United States by foreign nations shall ultimately be accomplished by treaty, the latter must receive the sanction of the Senate, and therefore there is propriety in a Member of that body participating in the negotiations. So far as the adjustment of the debt does not depend upon treaty obligations, the question as to what adjustment will be made of it is for Congress to determine, and it has seen fit to delegate the difficult task of adjustment to the commission, with the approval of the President. This increases the propriety of having a Member of the Senate and of the House participate in such adjustment.

Moreover, the commissioners can take no action except with the approval of the President. Their duties, therefore, are primarily those of negotiators for the terms of such adjustment, and, secondarily, as an advisory body to the President of the United States.

Inasmuch as both the legislative and the executive branches of the Government have responsibility in the adjustment of these obligations, it was desirable that there should be coordination between the two branches of the Government, and presumably this consideration prompted the appointment of a Member of the Senate and a Member of the House to confer with the Secretary of State, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Secretary of Commerce in reaching some wise conclusion which these representatives of the executive and legislative branches of the Government could recommend to the President, to whom the final decision was delegated by Congress.

In substance and effect, your appointment to the debt commission simply puts into operation that which, without the legislation, might have occurred with entire propriety, viz, a conference between the representatives of Congress charged with the final responsibility of adjusting the debt and Cabinet officers who are charged with the duty of carrying out the wishes of Congress. No one would have questioned the propriety of representatives of the appropriate committee of Congress conferring with the Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary of State, with a view to some recommendation to be made to the President which would guide him in his duty of negotiating with foreign countries for the adjustment of their financial obligations to this country.

Having in mind the debates in the Constitutional Convention, it seems clear that the purpose of Article I, section 6, was to prevent Members of Congress from creating offices which thereupon they would seek to fill by resigning their positions in Congress. Thus the fundamental idea was the incompatibility of the new offices thus created with their existing office as Members of Congress. This reason is plainly inapplicable to the present legislation, for, when Senator SMOOT and Representative BURTON act on this debt commission, they are not exercising duties which are incompatible with their duties as Members of Congress, but, on the contrary, their duties as commissioners are, in a sense, an auxiliary to their work as Congressmen, and moreover an auxiliary to all the Members of Congress in any further consideration that that body may feel obliged to give to this matter of adjusting these foreign obligations.

Here, again, it seems unreasonable to interpret the provision of the Constitution in question in a way that would forbid the cooperation between the legislative branch of the Government and the executive, which, with the growing complexity of life, is becoming increasingly necessary.

I can not think that such a statesmanlike solution of the question is within the mischief against which the constitutional provision above referred to was made. That provision (Art. I, sec. 6) evidently intended, on the one hand, that Congress should not create offices which its Members should fill, and that it should not be within the power of the President, on the other hand, to appoint to office Members of Congress when the offices have been created during their membership. This was a wise and salutary provision; but it seems to me to strain the language to apply it to a mere temporary employment, without compensation, and purely of an advisory capacity and intended to serve a temporary emergency.

To take an extreme illustration, it could hardly be said that if Congress creates a joint commission, to be composed of executive officers and Members of Congress, to take charge of the inauguration of a President, that such temporary and honorable employment offends the inhibition of the Constitution. There must be, in the nature of the case, as our governmental machinery becomes more complex, frequent measures to insure closer cooperation and a better coordination between the Executive and the legislature. It has long since been found impracticable to apply the Montesquieu doctrine as to the separation of the Government into three distinct and independent departments in all its literal force. Coordination must be secured if the machinery of the Constitution is to function, and to do so it must be possible, where temporary emergencies require it, to enable members of the executive and legislative departments of the Government to cooperate for special purposes on special commissions, and to construe the constitutional inhibition as obstructing and preventing such reasonable coordination tends to make the section of the Constitution in question impracticable of enforcement.

An impracticable and unreasonable construction of any clause of the Constitution ought to be avoided, and, as no judicial authority can be cited which forbids the views herein expressed, and as the practical construction by the Government from its very beginning and long acquiesced in has given some sanction to the views above expressed, I have less hesitation in advising you that in my judgment the appointment of Senator SMOOT and Representative BURTON does not offend Article I, section 6, of the Constitution.

Respectfully,

H. M. DAUGHERTY,
Attorney General.

The PRESIDENT,
The White House, Washington, D. C.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Overhue, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 11065) making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTIONS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled joint resolutions, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

H. J. Res. 7. Joint resolution to amend section 2 of the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution to authorize the operation of Government-owned radio stations for the use of the general public, and for other purposes," approved June 5, 1920; and

H. J. Res. 249. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to donate and grant certain buildings in Alaska to the Woman's Home Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. WILLIS presented the petition of Wm. J. Brownlow and sundry other citizens of Cleveland, Ohio, praying for the passage of the soldiers' bonus bill, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a resolution adopted at a meeting of the Presbytery of Mansfield (U. P.), held in the United Presbyterian Church at East Mansfield, Ohio, favoring the enactment of legislation providing for compulsory Sunday observance in the District of Columbia, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented a resolution adopted at a meeting of the Presbytery of Mansfield (U. P.), held in the United Presbyterian Church at East Mansfield, Ohio, favoring the enactment of legislation prohibiting polygamy, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a resolution adopted at a meeting of the Presbytery of Mansfield (U. P.), held in the United Presbyterian Church at East Mansfield, Ohio, favoring the enactment of legislation providing for uniform marriage and divorce laws, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. PEPPER presented a resolution of the Philadelphia (Pa.) Board of Trade favoring the inclusion of a provision in the naval appropriation bill for the maintenance and efficient operation of the Philadelphia Navy Yard, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented a petition of the Philadelphia (Pa.) Board of Trade praying for the enactment of legislation providing a subsidy for the merchant marine, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HARRIS presented a resolution adopted at a regular meeting of the Lamar County Board of Trade, of Barnesville, Ga., favoring acceptance of the proposal of Henry Ford relative to the Muscle Shoals project, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

RESTRICTION OF IMMIGRATION.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I present and ask permission to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Immigration a letter from Dr. David Starr Jordan, president of Leland Stanford University, of California, in regard to the immigration bill, and also a petition from several hundred people in Chicago in regard to the same measure.

There being no objection, the letter and petition were referred to the Committee on Immigration and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STANFORD UNIVERSITY POST OFFICE,
California, April 5, 1922.

Hon. WILLIAM J. HARRIS,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

SIR: Permit me to say that I regard the continuation of the present limited immigration law for another year, and until Congress orders otherwise, by a carefully worked out general immigration law, as of vital importance.

It should, however, be so modified as to prevent certain avoidable hardships to desirable people. Especially, I think that New Zealand, Australia, Canada, and South Africa should be recorded as British. No country has a finer population than New Zealand, and few of its people emigrate. The quota is thus soon filled, and some excellent people have been humiliated and perhaps turned back from San Francisco.

It is a plain fact that our population has been diluted to an alarming extent by the incoming of peoples which are biologically incapable of rising either now or through their descendants above the mentality of a 12-year-old child. Education and Americanization may help the individual a little, but can never improve the stock.

Guizot once asked James Russell Lowell, "How long will your Republic last?" "As long," said Lowell, "as the spirit of the fathers is in the hearts of the people." How long will this spirit endure, we may ask? Just as long as the blood of free men runs in the veins of the people. In every race there are some men and strains capable of freedom and some strains hopelessly incompetent—as in the London slums. It is hard to discriminate at Ellis Island, and to have this done in foreign lands may be impossible for legal reasons. But while it is plain that most immigrants from northern Italy, for example, are competent and desirable, there is not one in a thousand from Naples or Sicily that is not a burden on America. Our social perils do not arise from the rapacity of the strong, but from the incapacity of these hereditarily weak.

Sincerely yours,

DAVID STARR JORDAN.

CHICAGO, ILL.

PETITION.

We, the undersigned citizens of the State of Illinois, earnestly urge Congress to extend and make permanent the Johnson-Dillingham restriction law, which expires June 30. With over 5,000,000 unemployed in this country, 15,000,000 foreign born, 7,000,000 aliens, 5,000,000 persons unable to speak our language, some 5,000 foreign newspapers, and the so-called melting pot overflowing and our forces of assimilation swamped, we strongly memorialize Congress in favor of an immigration period. Our first duty is to those here. We should look after our own household. Every alien now entering becomes dependent upon some one here or takes the job from some person already here.

THE TARIFF.

Mr. McCUMBER, from the Committee on Finance, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 7456) to provide revenue, to regulate commerce with foreign countries, to encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 595) thereon.

Mr. GOODING subsequently said: I submit three amendments to the tariff bill, and ask that they be read and lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STERLING in the chair). The Secretary will read the proposed amendments.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

On page 111, line 14, strike out the figure "four-tenths of 1" and insert in lieu thereof the figure "1½," so that the paragraph as amended will read as follows:

"PAR. 760. Oil-bearing seeds and materials: Castor beans, one-half of 1 cent per pound; flaxseed, 40 cents per bushel of 56 pounds; poppy seed, 32 cents per 100 pounds; sunflower seed, 2 cents per pound; apricot and peach kernels, 3 cents per pound; soya beans, 1½ cents per pound; cotton seed, one-third of 1 cent per pound: Provided, That no allowance shall be made for dirt or other impurities in seed provided for in this paragraph."

On page 104, line 22, strike out the figure "three-eighths of 1" and insert in lieu thereof the figure "2"; on page 104, line 23, strike out the figure "five-eighths of 1" and insert in lieu thereof the figure "2"; on page 105, line 1, strike out the figure "one-fourth of 1" and insert in lieu thereof the figure "2"; so that the paragraph as amended will read as follows:

"PAR. 728. Paddy or rough rice, 2 cents per pound; brown rice (hulls removed), 2 cents per pound; milled rice (bran removed), 2 cents per pound; broken rice and rice meal, flour, polish, and bran, 2 cents per pound."

On page 110, line 23, strike out the figure "three-fourths of 1" and insert in lieu thereof the figure "3"; on page 110, line 24, strike out the figure "1½" and insert in lieu thereof the figure "4"; so that the paragraph as amended will read as follows:

"PAR. 757. Peanuts, not shelled, 3 cents per pound; shelled, 4 cents per pound."

Mr. HARRISON. Are these amendments offered to some bill that is in committee, or what were they?

Mr. GOODING. They are amendments to the tariff bill, which was reported to-day from the Finance Committee.

Mr. HARRISON. May I ask the Senator, was the tariff bill reported to-day?

Mr. GOODING. It was.

Mr. HARRISON. I have been here ever since the Senate convened this morning. I had not heard of it being reported.

Mr. WARREN. It was reported in the executive session.

Mr. HARRISON. It is perfectly natural that that should have been done. Everything else that has been done about the bill has been done in secrecy.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments will lie on the table and be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS.

Mr. WADSWORTH, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 181) providing for the payment of war-risk insurance in certain contingencies, asked to be discharged from its further consideration and that it be referred to the Committee on Finance, which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 3412) authorizing the Secretary of War and the Auditor for the War Department to consider and settle the claim of Mrs. John D. Hall, widow of the late Col. John D. Hall, United States Army, retired, for personal property destroyed in the earthquake at San Francisco, Calif., asked to be discharged from its further consideration and that it be referred to the Committee on Claims, which was agreed to.

REPORT OF THE BOY SCOUTS OF AMERICA (S. DOC. NO. 180).

Mr. MOSES, from the Committee on Printing, reported the following resolution (S. Res. 273), which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved, That the report entitled "The Eleventh Annual Report of the Boy Scouts of America" be printed as a Senate document.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. JONES of Washington:

A bill (S. 3432) to increase the efficiency of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, and for other purposes; and

A bill (S. 3433) to increase the efficiency of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. JOHNSON:

A bill (S. 3434) directing the Veterans' Bureau to pay Constance Van Brunt Lynch the present value of a term insurance policy; to the Committee on Finance.

A bill (S. 3435) for the relief of E. J. Hendrycks; and

A bill (S. 3436) for the relief of Francis Nicholson; to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 3437) granting a pension to Mary D. O'Malley;

A bill (S. 3438) granting a pension to Mrs. Henry C. Halpenny;

A bill (S. 3439) granting a pension to Conrad Miller;

A bill (S. 3440) granting a pension to Altana B. Clark; and

A bill (S. 3441) granting a pension to Mitchell Gatter; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. McNARY:

A bill (S. 3442) for the relief of the Portland Iron Works; to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 3443) granting an increase of pension to Albert T. Baker; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WILLIS:

A bill (S. 3444) to amend sections 4826 and 4827 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to Board of Managers of National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. SIMMONS:

A bill (S. 3445) to amend the act approved July 17, 1916, known as the Federal farm loan act; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. SUTHERLAND:

A bill (S. 3446) granting a pension to George W. Johnson; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CALDER:

A bill (S. 3447) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Treasury to promulgate a schedule of fees to be charged vessels at the New York Quarantine Station as will be fair and reasonable for services rendered; to the Committee on Commerce.

AMENDMENT OF AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HARRISON submitted an amendment proposing to increase the appropriation for cooperative agricultural extension work, etc., between the agricultural colleges in the several States receiving the benefits of an act of Congress approved July 2, 1862, and of acts supplementary thereto, and the United States Department of Agriculture, from $1,000,000 to $1,500,000, intended to be proposed by him to House bill 10730, the Agricultural appropriation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

AMENDMENTS OF TARIFF BILL.

Mr. CAMERON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 7456, the permanent tariff bill, which was referred to the Committee on Finance, ordered to be printed, and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

On page 120, line 18, strike out the figure "7" and insert in lieu thereof "15," so as to make the paragraph, as amended, read:

"PAR. 900. Cotton having a staple of 1⅛ inches or more in length, 15 cents per pound."

Mr. SHORTRIDGE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 7456, the tariff bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 11065) making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

ADDRESS BY FEDERAL PROHIBITION COMMISSIONER HAYNES.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I wish to make a request for unanimous consent. Last night the Federal Prohibition Commissioner made an important speech in Philadelphia, giving certain facts on the subject of law enforcement which I think it would be well to have inserted in the RECORD. I ask unanimous consent for such insertion and that the address be printed in the regular RECORD type.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD in 8-point type, as follows:

[Address delivered by Federal Prohibition Commissioner R. A. Haynes, at law enforcement meeting, Academy of Music, Philadelphia, Pa., Monday night, April 10, 1922.]

I congratulate the great State of Pennsylvania upon such a magnificent demonstration of loyalty to our Constitution as this meeting reflects. I am thrilled as an American by your splendid enthusiasm for law enforcement, and yet, my friends, I am not surprised, for any State that has such leadership as that of Senator PEPPER and Governor Sproul must of necessity be found in the front ranks of patriotism and progress. This great audience stirs me to a deeper optimism, for here is the social and political force that is powerful enough to arouse the public conscience on the subject of law enforcement.

It is a great pleasure and satisfaction to speak for a Government that has outlawed the liquor traffic in Pennsylvania and upon every inch of soil under our flag. It is just such citizenship as that gathered here to-night that has registered this great moral advance of our country and prophesies the fact that the Constitution of the land, and with it, if you please, the eighteenth amendment, which is a part of it, shall not be defied, nullified, and, I think I might add, modified.

It is far from my purpose to occupy your attention with oratory or with well-rounded periods. I am here to give you facts; some of them eloquent of achievement and others which give us most serious concern. I am here as a public servant to render an account of my stewardship, and I trust to report some progress in our common task of making the law of the land effective in operation toward the high and the low alike.

Very soon after assuming the duties of Federal Prohibition Commissioner I was startled by the headlines of a great metropolitan daily which carried my own picture with the caption, "The man with the hardest job in the world." I found myself pondering the question, "Is it true that the job of enforcing the law in this great country has become the most difficult task of the hour?" I remembered that this particular law had behind it nearly a century of education and agitation; that it had become part of our Constitution over the veto of a President, and that it was ratified by 46 States, the largest number of States that had ever ratified a constitutional amendment. Remembering the courage and persistency of those who had enacted the law, I determined to consecrate myself to the task of making their dream come true. So it was that I sat down with the great problem that I felt must be solved.

I realized that the problem was more difficult because of the hour in which we lived; that we were in a period of reconstruction when the whole world was still suffering from the shock of battle that nearly wrecked the civilization of the world; that all the civilized world had been unstabilized, especially psychologically; that the backwash of the military tide registered itself in a crime wave, world-wide, and that the reflex in America was registered in the prevalence of crime from coast to coast. The war was over; the great armies of America were demobilized and all the military restraints were broken. Two million men were walking the streets in idleness. Fortunes made in the war had been lost in the early days of reconstruction; the spirit of unrest was everywhere rampant. Lawlessness and idleness were factors that entered into the problem faced. Prohibition had been on the statute books for a year and a half, but liquor was plentiful, and many good citizens were asking the question, "Is the Government really in earnest on the subject of prohibition enforcement?" The purpose that actuated the Government under President Harding, I knew. Believing that law enforcement was fundamental to the perpetuity of our institutions, it appeared to me that the prohibition law-enforcement machinery then in operation was wholly inadequate to the task that presented itself. Because of the spirit of the times, all laws were difficult of enforcement, and this law so newly placed upon the statute books would of necessity be difficult of enforcement. Two things became evident:

The first, the need of men of the highest type and of unquestioned conviction and patriotism, for I regret to say in some localities the prohibition service was a discredited service; the other was the pressing need for a reorganization along lines especially adapted to the peculiar phases of this particular problem of law enforcement.

I shall not burden you with the details of the reorganization which has resulted and of which I am proud, and in which I have absolute confidence; but let me call your attention to the fact that its purpose was and is immediate attack upon flagrant violations of the law which has been a threefold problem. First, unwarranted withdrawals which had amounted in the calendar year 1920 to nearly 12,500,000 gallons of red liquor.

The second phase of the problem was the large amount of alcohol being diverted to beverage purposes through fraudulent manufacturing concerns, and to the large releases of beer containing an excessive alcoholic content.

The third phase of the problem was the enormous quantities of liquor then being smuggled into the country from over our borders and along the shore lines.

The threefold problem was so large and the enforcement machinery so inadequate that it became apparent from the beginning that all effort must be concentrated upon a single phase of the problem at a time.

The first effort was directed at the enormous releases of red liquor presumably for medicinal purposes. It must be remembered that 24 States out of the 48 in the United States are medicinally dry. There are approximately 150,000 physicians in the United States, and about 40,000 of them reside in these 24 medicinally dry States. Of the 110,000 physicians remaining, less than 35,000 hold permits to prescribe liquor; and yet, as one paper described it, there was a "deluge of booze." To cut down this unwarranted flow of bonded liquor was by no means an easy task. It did not mean to wage warfare upon the conscientious physician or the legitimate druggist, but it did mean to face a powerful combine of corrupt forces who through duplicity, bribery, and every other device known to the illicit traffic, were securing large withdrawals of liquor to be diverted for beverage purposes. To correct this miscarriage of the law required the dismissal of Government agents and the indictment of some men holding high offices of trust. It meant the perfecting of our permit system and sleepless vigilance on the part of the loyal officers of the Government.

It is now nearly 10 months since the renewed effort began to restrict good liquor into legitimate channels, and I am happy to report that this result is perhaps as nearly achieved as possible. The years immediately preceding prohibition showed an annual consumption in the United States of about 130,000,000 gallons of American-made whisky. During the calendar year 1920 there was withdrawn on permits approximately twelve and one-half million gallons and in the calendar year 1921 withdrawals amounted to about three and one-half million gallons. Withdrawal for this calendar year on the basis of the last three or four months will amount to about 2,000,000 gallons, which is perhaps only about one-half million gallons in excess of normal medicinal requirements.

The release of liquor in your city alone at the present withdrawal rate is just about one-fifth of what it was 10 months ago, and in the city of New York, in less than 3 months, under rigid supervision, regularly released liquor became restricted to practically legitimate uses. How nearly we are accomplishing the task of restricting bonded liquor to bona fide uses can be gleaned from the fact that of all the liquor seized by Government agents at the present time, less than 2 per cent is found to be high-grade liquor, revealing the fact that the bootlegger is unable to obtain bonded spirits. Ninety-eight per cent of the illegally obtained spirits is positively dangerous to health and often life itself.

The next phase of the problem to be attacked was the large amount of industrial alcohol being diverted to beverage purposes. There was apparently a combination whereby large quantities of alcohol used in the manufacture of synthetic whisky were marketed at enormous profits. This activity constituted a formidable opponent of the Government, for you must remember that many of these men were schooled in devious methods of evading the law. Eight or nine major violators in this classification have already been apprehended. Seizures have been made wherever warranted by the evidence and all the offenders are being prosecuted vigorously, and it is safe to say that the differential or prohibitive tax assessed against three violators alone will amount to more than $6,000,000. Governmental restrictions have been so placed around operating plants conducted according to law that the problem ceases to be longer serious.

At the beginning of this fiscal year there were approximately 500 breweries engaged in the manufacture of near-beer. Word was received from every side that many of these breweries were not obeying the law; 285 of them have been reported for violation of the law; 95 of these plants are now under seizure by the Government; 60 breweries have been seized since July 1. Two of these breweries have submitted offers in compromise of $96,000 each and the other offers reach from $20,000 to $60,000, and this does not mitigate possible criminal liability against the companies. I have long been persuaded that fines against large violators are but very small deterrent forces, so we are citing on criminal informations in the United States courts all breweries found guilty of violations. We are not only revoking permits of the guilty, but are also refusing to reissue permits to persons who have violated the provisions of their permits, and this has resulted in the closing down of about 50 near-beer plants in recent months.

Smuggling is not a new art, and the smuggling of liquors into this country was not new with the coming of prohibition. The fabulous revenues to be gained made strong appeal to unscrupulous men, and the traffic in smuggled liquors soon appeared as a menace that threatened to engulf the whole program of law enforcement and was the third phase of the program. It was necessary to enlarge the forces along our borders and to augment the general agents' force that had particular contact with this phase of the work.

Early in the administration it seemed wise to make representations to the commissioners of Canada, and an invitation was accepted to enter into a conference with the liquor commissioners from several Provinces. On November 1, 1921, the representatives of the attorneys general and the commissioners from the various Provinces met the representatives of the prohibition unit at Saskatchewan. Another conference was held at Detroit. The result of these meetings was that the Canadian officials have given to our Government the utmost possible cooperation in our efforts to close the border. The Canadian law permits exportation. Our law prohibits importation; therefore the difficulties are peculiarly complicated. However, at the present time the smuggling of liquor from Canada is having careful attention and is admittedly under better control than ever before.

A most careful and thorough investigation has been made of the liquor smuggling from the Bahamas and the Indies. We are in possession of all the hideous facts concerning the smuggling traffic. We have discovered the ships and their owners, their methods and their sea routes, and we are to-day attacking this problem by means of an air service and a marine service, and I hope the time is not far distant when we shall have such treaties with these friendly nations who are our neighbors that their subjects or citizens will no longer be permitted to commit the unfriendly act of rendering assistance and comfort to the outlaws within our country who are engaged in a business that violates the Constitution and the laws of the land.

If I were asked to name a definite result of the war, I would without hesitation say that the war has taught us how tremendous is the power of propaganda. Let the press and the platform concentrate upon one idea or purpose, and by constant effort impress it upon the minds of the people, and eventually the public will become obsessed with the idea. To me there is grave danger in the propaganda that is being waged against the enforcement of the eighteenth amendment. Nothing is being left undone to impress upon the public mind the idea that the law is not operative. Surely there is grave danger to the Republic in the attitude that the minority need not submit to the expressed will of the majority, and the question arises at once as to the security of our free institutions. As an American I am inclined to believe that the source of this propaganda is not to be found in the unwillingness of the minority to submit to the dictates of law, but that this propaganda has its origin in a well-defined purpose to nullify the law in the interest of large personal gains on the part of a comparative few, who have felt most forcefully the effect of the law; and it is significant that at the time when liquor is the most difficult to obtain in all our history, when drunkenness has decreased to a very appreciable degree, when convictions for the violation of the law are becoming most numerous, that at such time the largest amount of space is given in some of our newspapers to articles most flimsy of fact which set forth the idea that "prohibition is a failure."

Over 10,000 convictions for the violation of the law have been obtained during the last nine months. It would not be strange if some of the hue and cry, "Prohibition is a failure," might have arisen from some of the very ones who have felt the force of the law, either in the temporary loss of their liberty, in property losses, or in the loss of their social standing. It is not to be expected that certain interests of this country will bow to the will of the majority without making a most determined effort to regain some of the sources of revenue of which they have been deprived by an outraged public. The chief cry of the antiprohibition law propagandist is that "prohibition is a failure," and the question arises in the mind, Wherein has it failed? No one expected 100 per cent enforcement. What law can you suggest that is enforced 100 per cent? But again, wherein has it failed? The drunkard has almost disappeared from the streets of our great cities; arrests for drunkenness have decreased 60 per cent under prohibition; scores of institutions for the treatment of inebriates have closed their doors; the open saloon has disappeared and the influence of sober workmen is evident everywhere in the industries of our country; and it is safe to say that for every job lost by prohibition two others have been created. Economically, the biggest thing the prohibition law has done was to destroy a parasitic business.

This in itself has been one of our greatest sources of strength during a period fraught with great financial peril. And yet the cry is that "Prohibition has failed." To the thinking man the issue is clear. This is no hour to determine whether or not the law is a failure. Every law requires the test of time, and, as Chief Justice Taft is reported to have said, not until we have tried this law for at least 10 years may we with propriety discuss whether or not the law is a failure. At least, the law should be given a fair chance and the enforcement of it should be intrusted to the friends of the law and then its value determined by its good or bad results. The cry, "Prohibition is a failure," at this particular time is much like the cry that Vanlandingham raised against Mr. Lincoln's administration of the war; it was premature and refuted by subsequent events.

This is an hour when the burden of the war rests heavily upon our people through the imposition of taxes, and so the astute propagandist has singled out the cost of prohibition and in large letters pointed to the fact that it will cost this Government nearly $10,000,000 this coming year, but the people are not apprised of the fact that there is a revenue derived from fines, taxes assessed, and properties seized under the provisions of the prohibition act. It would be interesting to the people to know that if we were to collect the fines, penalties, and special tax imposed upon violators of the law in the first six months of this administration they would more than pay two and one-half times the estimated cost of enforcing the prohibition law for the next year. These enormous figures do not include nearly $3,000,000 in bonds that are being forfeited to the Government, or $2,000,000 that have been offered in compromise by 21 of the large violators of the law, and do not include the $6,000,000 in differential or prohibitive tax that has been referred to previously. So it is not difficult to see that if Uncle Sam is at all adept in collecting his claims prohibition should be no burden upon the law-abiding citizen. The reason that certain interests are protesting against this law is the fact that they are now forced to pay for its enforcement through these fines, forfeited bonds, and prohibitive taxes. These facts do not trouble the law-abiding citizen.

That which the country at large is meeting from the propagandist to-day is what each of the various States experienced when first they adopted laws which were similar to our prohibition act and their experience, which has been well expressed by Governor Allen, of Kansas: "Kansas has had prohibition for over 25 years. When first passed there was great opposition and for the first 15 years the temperance question was the storm center of all campaigns, but each year opposition grew less and its provisions were strengthened." He further states that "to-day in Kansas the dry law is as successfully enforced as any other law, and any effort to remove the prohibition law from the statute books of Kansas would be defeated by a vote of 50 to 1." This might well be taken as the prophecy of the national experience. It is hard to believe that even the most ardent opponent of the law believes that the law can be overthrown; the most that could be done is a nullification of this law by public officials failing to do their duty in its enforcement, so the propaganda is largely an effort to intimidate honest public officials, to break down the morale of our best citizenship, and to encourage a lawless element to hold the law in total disregard. As long as enforcement officers could be easily bribed; as long as the traffic went on unimpeded by either taxes, fines, or jail sentences; so long as only the small offenders were brought to justice, there was little cause for the insidious propaganda that finds large space in that portion of the press that is still hostile to prohibition and its enforcement.

Among the most subtle and deceptive of all the propaganda directed against the enforcement of the eighteenth amendment is the persistent cry that the law is unpopular and can not be enforced; that it is being flagrantly violated and therefore should be repealed. The contention is that because this law is violated it puts all law in jeopardy and tends to develop a spirit of defiance toward all our laws. It does not take keen intelligence to see that this contention itself is subversive of law enforcement and is the veiled confession that any law that is unpopular with a minority of the people may be held in disregard, and if the Government accedes to this demand a precedent is established against the enforcement of any law rendered difficult of enforcement because of adverse propaganda. If, on the other hand, this great Government is seen to be firmly behind the laws enacted by Congress and this law is well enforced it will bring an added weight of authority to all the laws of our land. Nothing can be more fallacious than the statement that it should be repealed because it is violated.

Recently I read with keen satisfaction an editorial in one of your great dailies here. It was one of those brilliant, strong, 100 per cent American editorials that come from the brain and heart of Van Valkenburg. It was captioned, "The law is defied—Repeal it." He shoots the light of clear logic quite through the fallacy that the law should be repealed because it is violated. He shows the prevalence of banditry and points out how far-reaching and prevalent has become this form of lawlessness, with its attacks upon human life and property, and says two menacing conditions have resulted: "First, criminally inclined persons are losing all respect for the law and the agencies of enforcement, and second, law-abiding citizens are losing faith in the power of the Government to apply the statutes. And nothing will tend more swiftly to undermine public order than repeated demonstrations that laws can be violated with impunity." He also says, "If the laws against banditry were repealed it would no longer be a crime, and hence conditions which are undermining respect for those laws would disappear." With the same unanswerable satire and relentless logic he deals with the laws against stock swindling and takes up other phases of violation, and then comes to this most thought-provoking statement of present-day propaganda, "We have merely suggested some logical implications from their contention that a law which is widely and defiantly violated ought for that reason to be repealed lest it and all laws be brought into disrepute, and in order that its violators may become orderly citizens. And the remarkable fact about their demand is that it is not directed against laws which have become obsolete or have outlived their usefulness, but against the most recent of important enactments. The prohibition law, which they want repealed because it is not, they say, effective, is part of the Constitution of the United States."

It is not a question as to the popularity of the law, my friends. The question is, Is the law just and American? Does it work toward the highest destiny of this country?

Does it in its operation contribute to the well-being of our people. The communities in which this law is most unpopular are those communities where they have had the least enforcement of this law, and it would be difficult to conceive of this law ever becoming as unpopular with Americans as was the open saloon and the evils that this law is designed to eradicate from our political and social system.

Nothing can affront the American people more than the statement that we can not enforce our laws. In this statement lies the death warrant of the Republic, for this Nation can not endure without reverence for law, without the recognized authority of law. If the laws passed by Congress are no longer binding upon the people, and if the executive power of our Government entrusted with the enforcement of law is powerless, where shall we look for the seat of government? The perpetrators of this new treason have overlooked one of the great essentials of the American people—that law is but an expression of the Nation's will—and the will power of America has ever met apparently insuperable difficulties and changed them into world-amazing achievements. It is no mere expression of pride to say that when America wills to do that which other nations have not done she will not fail of that achievement.

Let us confess that the eighteenth amendment leads the way for all the nations of the earth in moral achievement; that America is the pathfinder for the race in this legislation; but let us also remember that the majority has spoken and that American backbone is as strong to-day as it was when the world laughed at the experiment of independence or scorned the prophecy of Lincoln or doubted the dream of Roosevelt of the Panama Canal.

"Prohibition in this country is pitiful to look at" are the words reported to have been uttered by a visiting nobleman. Immediately an American editor answered in these words: "Howbeit, sir, this opinion is itself pitiful. It indicts his sense of proportion, his perspective, his sense of fitness and high weighing of values, or else his sincerity."

Let us not overlook the real issue that underlies all the contest that wages around prohibition enforcement. It is in the last analysis Americanism in conflict with Old World customs and concepts; it is democracy against avarice, lawlessness, and anarchy. The issue divides men not upon the question of their appetites but upon the question of their loyalty to their country; it is no longer whether we are wet or dry; it is whether we are American or un-American; whether we are for the Constitution and the laws of our land or for our personal convenience or self-indulgence. It is not illogical to assume that if 80 per cent of the violators of this law are alien those who aid and abet them in violation of the law are themselves un-American in spirit.

To me the prohibition act is essentially American in its purpose. Its aim is to develop the highest type of American character and manhood. Without going into the question of political science, I think it must be admitted that Washington was right when he said that our free institutions rest in the last analysis upon American character.

It is very difficult for the alien to understand this law because of the fact that he has been reared under institutions hoary with years; he has been surrounded with customs that are ancient; he has lived in a country where the population is homogeneous, and so a law that touches one's personal habits as closely as the prohibition law is quite foreign to his thought. On the other hand, we are a very heterogeneous population; our institutions are new and our customs are largely in the making, and we must of necessity have laws which are character forming and directing as to conduct in order that we may develop the American type of character which alone insures our perpetuity as a free people.

The law is essentially American, not alone in its purpose but in its outlook. There is a puzzle that is sometimes given to the student of ethics, "when is good bad?" There is one answer, "good can only be bad when it keeps us from our best." American idealism is always striving for the highest possible destiny, and our watchword is the achievement of our best. Prohibition is a great moral and social advance, and is a logical part of the Nation striving to reach its highest possible destiny.

Prohibition has not divided the Nation against itself. It has rather ranged the great forces of our Government squarely on one side of a great question, and I am pleased to say that the real forces of Americanism are lined up on the right side of the question of law enforcement. In every severe test the Supreme Court of the United States has gone squarely on record as to the constitutionality of the prohibition act. There is no question to-day as to where the Houses of Congress stand, for whenever the question is clearly defined an overwhelming verdict is rendered in favor of the prohibition act and its enforcement. You will remember that only last week the House of Representatives by a majority of more than 3 to 1 passed a bill to deport all alien violators of the liquor and narcotic laws.

With the passage of the nineteenth amendment the women of the country came into their long-delayed rights of citizenship and at that moment there entered into the realm of our political life a force that can always be relied upon to exert itself on the right side of every moral or social question. Beyond the peradventure of a doubt the women of this country can be depended upon either at the polls or in the jury box to cast their vote for law and rigid law enforcement.

There is no question as to where the leaders of this administration stand on law enforcement. Attorney General Daugherty recently said: "The Government will endure on the rock of law enforcement or it will perish in the quicksands of lawlessness. My duty is clear. As long as I am the responsible head of the Department of Justice the law will be enforced with all the power possessed by the Government which I am at liberty to call to my command." This leaves no question as to his attitude or the commitment of his department to a vigorous enforcement of the law.

No less drastic is the conviction of Assistant Attorney General Goff: "The law must be and shall be enforced as it is conceived and written, and always without fear or favor. And so to you, and through you, I bring the pledge that in so far as it lies within the power of the Department of Justice to execute and enforce the law of the land, there will be no backward step, no retreat, in preserving the Constitution and carrying out the mandate of the people."

Our great Secretary of State, who has rendered a service to the whole world in his recent leadership at the Conference for the Limitation of Armanent, has also voiced with characteristic clearness and patriotism this thought when he said: "Everybody is ready to sustain the law he likes. That is not in the proper sense respect for law and order. The test or respect for law is where the law is upheld even though it hurts."

There is no question as to where we will locate the President of the United States on this great issue, for with the same constructive statesmanship with which he has viewed the distracted conditions of Europe, he has keenly penetrated to the very heart of the great problem at home and has spoken the word that leaves no doubt as to the large place which he has given to law enforcement. He recently said:

> Whatever breeds disrespect for the law of the land, in any particular department of our community relations, is a force tending to the general breakdown of the social organization. If the people who are known as leaders, as directing influences, as thoroughly respected and respectable members of society, shall in their respective communities become known for their defiance of some part of the code of law, then they need not be astonished if presently they find that their example is followed by others, with the result that presently the law in general comes to be looked upon as a set of irksome and unreasonable restraints upon the liberty of the individual. Every law involves more or less of this element of restraint. Nearly every individual will find some part of the code that to him seems an unreasonable inhibition upon his personal freedom of action. Our only safety will be in inculcating an attitude of respect for the law, as on the whole, the best expression that has been given to the social aspiration and moral purpose of the community."

These words are eloquent; they are pregnant of thought; they have couched in them great and far-reaching truths, but to me entrusted, as I am with the enforcement of this law, the attitude of this great President toward my problems has been eloquent beyond even these most brilliant periods. In the very hours when he has been carrying a burden perhaps larger than that of any other man in the world, he has found time to encourage me in the task that lay before me. While he was wrestling with questions of world-wide importance, he has found the wakeful hours to acquaint himself with the problems that confronted me, and at no time has he been too busy to interest himself or to render every possible assistance within his power when there appeared to him an opportunity to render service to law enforcement.

I say there is no question as to where these great men stand, or where the great forces of our national life are to be found. The question is where you as an individual citizen shall be located and what is your attitude toward the law?

I think little is to be feared from those who are positively hostile to law enforcement. I think there is danger in those who are negative or fail to express themselves. If the question of law enforcement is as these good men see it to be, fundamental to the life of the Nation, then the individual citizen immediately is placed in a position where he must become militant in its defense. To assist in the enforcement of the law must become his duty toward his country.

No trivial or superficial obligation rests upon the American citizen who receives all the benefits of citizenship in this great land and he only discharges the conditions of citizenship when he gives his best effort toward the perpetuity of his country. If lawlessness endangers this Republic, then there can be only one attitude of the citizen upon the subject.

You may ask, "What can I do to express my patriotism and to place myself positively upon the side of law enforcement?" As citizens of Pennsylvania, you can give your cooperation and assistance to Director Davis and the splendid organization that he is now perfecting; you can help in the enforcement of this law by publicly and privately registering your sentiment in favor of vigorous enforcement of the law; you can greatly assist by serving upon juries, as every good American citizen should do. You can render assistance by expressing your opinion to the editor of your paper and by encouraging the faithful public servant who is doing his best to enforce the law; you can register yourself in favor of law enforcement by affiliating yourself with those societies and organizations that have for their purpose the inculcating of the spirit of reverence for law in both young and old. And not the least among all the things to be observed that will place you on record is your daily conduct where in strict obedience to the law you will create an example that will point others to a proper attitude toward the law.

Let us then, my countrymen, enroll ourselves in the cause of our country's safety and the security of our Constitution. Let us renew our courage and strengthen our hope that our country shall endure. Let us listen to the heroic voices of the past and dedicate ourselves anew to their unaccomplished task. Before the altar of our Nation, let us consecrate our lives and our love in the service of one God, one country, and one flag.

AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that House bill 10730, the unfinished business, may be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is the understanding of the Chair that the unfinished business has already been informally laid aside, there having been a recess taken last evening until to-day.

HOSPITAL FACILITIES FOR EX-SERVICE MEN.

Mr. BALL obtained the floor.

Mr. FERNALD. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment in order that I may give a notice?

Mr. BALL. I yield.

Mr. FERNALD. Mr. President, I had intended to call up House bill 10864, the hospitalization bill, to-day, but two or three Senators have asked me to defer the consideration of that measure until to-morrow. I now simply wish to give notice that during the morning hour to-morrow or immediately thereafter I shall ask that the Senate consider the so-called hospitalization bill.

EXTENSION OF DISTRICT RENT COMMISSION.

Mr. BALL. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 2919, being Order of Business 519.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Delaware asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill the title of which will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. A bill (S. 2919) to extend for the period of two years the provisions of Title II of the food control and the District of Columbia rents act, approved October 22, 1919, as amended.

Mr. MYERS. I object to the request.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is objection.

THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, there is a matter of some moment to which I venture to call the attention of Senators before the Senate undertakes the consideration of any of the pending bills.

You have noted, sir, that in New York on Saturday last ex-Governor Cox, of Ohio, in substance submitted to his hearers the program which he presented at the notable gathering in Dayton on the 25th of January last. I will not trespass upon the time of the Senate this afternoon to speak of the portions of his address which dealt with issues wholly or primarily domestic; but I think it proper that, in the presence of the distinguished leaders of the Democratic Party on the other side, we ask if they join with him in the belief that the United States should become a party to the covenant of the League of Nations, and that despite events which have transpired since the last election?

Governor Cox at Dayton in January, and again in New York last week, spoke in forthright, downright, and direct fashion; there is no mistaking his meaning. One may believe that a great part of the address of Governor Cox was burbling and blithering bombast; but whether he so believes or not, he can not mistake Governor Cox's intention to carry the people of America into the League of Nations whenever the opportunity presented.

There were long weeks when we discussed the text of the league covenant.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. McCORMICK. Most certainly.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator has submitted to the other side a question as to whether they agree with ex-Governor Cox. I should like to ask how many Senators on this side would vote with the other side if the League of Nations were proposed at this time?

Mr. KING. Does the Senator mean proposed by the President?

Mr. BORAH. By anybody.

Mr. McCORMICK. The Senator from Idaho has as Delphic a capacity for prophesy as has any other Senator.

Mr. BORAH. But I am not in as close touch with the organization as is the Senator from Illinois, and I should like to know how many Senators on this side are now prepared to go into the league. I know that there are some prepared to do so.

Mr. McCORMICK. I think the remnant is so exiguous as to be almost invisible to-day.

Mr. BORAH. I am afraid not; I am afraid the number is increasing.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, when the Senator from Idaho asked the question which he is better able to answer than am I, I had said that during long weeks we discussed the text of the covenant, its meaning, explicit or implicit; we discussed the possibilities latent in the instrument; but to-day we may judge of the league by what has been accomplished in Europe since its first assembling.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. McCORMICK. Certainly.

Mr. HARRISON. On yesterday in the official organ it was stated that the Senator from Illinois would be the spokesman of the administration to-day in presenting to the Senate the matter which he is discussing. So I am curious to know whether there is any truth in the rumor which is afloat that there will be introduced shortly, and backed up by the administration, a bill proposing representation upon the part of this Government on the Reparation Commission. Will the Senator tell us whether that is true?

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, the humorous and witty Senator from Mississippi knows very well that the newspaper to which he refers does not speak for me, and that I am not in the confidence of its editors. He knows, too, I am sure, that I have not been advised as to the purpose of Senators or of the administration with regard to the Reparation Commission.

Mr. HARRISON. No; I do not know that. I know of no Senator who is closer to the administration, and I thought that the official organ was speaking by the card when it said that he would in his speech to-day represent the views of the administration. I thought, perhaps, then, the Senator could tell us whether or not it is proposed that the United States shall have a representative on the Reparation Commission.

Mr. McCORMICK. If the newspaper so stated, it spoke without any warrant in fact. The Senator from Illinois is voicing no other views than his own.

We may judge of the accomplishment of the league by the record. We know, as I have said before in the Senate, that in the determination of disputes, in the arbitrament of boundaries, nothing has been done by the league or through the league which might not have been done under the old diplomacy and by our arbitral tribunals as formerly constituted. There is no record that the league has determined any dispute which might not have been determined in the normal course of conciliation or arbitration, while in the liquidation of the graver differences which have halted the reconstruction of Europe, in the reestablishment of the economic foundations upon which the future must be built, in the abatement of hates, in the reduction of armaments, the league has accomplished nothing. It promises to accomplish nothing; hence the gathering at Genoa of the assembly to-day, presided over by the Italian Prime Minister.

Despite the existence of the league, there are well-nigh as many armed men in Europe to-day as there were before the outbreak of the Great War and before the dismemberment of the Hapsburg monarchy and the disarmamemt of Germany. The league has brought into being in Europe no true peace. It has not inspired men to lay down their arms or to live in concord. We have as witness to that fact the pope, who in his letter to the archbishop of Genoa spoke of "the forest of bayonets" which environed the assembly about to gather.

So futile have been the labors of the league, so signally has it failed to imbue statesmen with a spirit of peace, so utterly has it been delinquent in bringing forward measures of reconstruction, that the pope has thought it appropriate, through the medium of a letter addressed to the archbishop of Genoa, to call upon the political leaders there assembled to attempt to do that which the League of Nations has left undone.

I know that there are some who honestly believe—I fear that there are others who for argument's sake will hold—that if America had entered the League of Nations it might have been otherwise.

The candidate of the Democratic Party for the presidency, who must remain the titular leader of the Democracy until formal action or the course of events has chosen as his successor some other, and very likely one of the Senators whom I see before me, has held not only that America must enter the league but that America should have granted credits and still more credits to Europe.

This would Governor Cox do despite the economic conditions inevitably consequent upon the war but aggravated, as all men know, by the political rivalries, the international jealousies and hates of the European powers and the armaments which they maintain because of those rivalries and hates.

The full text of the speech of the leader of the Democratic Party, delivered in New York, was not published in any of the newspapers which have come to my attention; but you may find in his address, delivered last January in Dayton and published in full in his own newspaper, his views not only on the League of Nations but on the part which America should play in the economic reconstruction of Europe.

Europe requires credit—

Said he—

America had a prosperity upon which credit could have been given. American gold advanced would scarcely have left our vaults, because it would have been merely the base of financial transactions for the products of our farms and factories. Our vast surplus would have brought happiness to Europe and maintained prosperity at home.

"America," said the governor, "had a prosperity upon which credit could have been given." He does not speak of the security necessary for the granting of credits. He ignores or he is ignorant of the fact that the excess of exports over imports indicates that since the signing of the armistice private credits have been granted to Europe in the sum of six or seven billion dollars. He has taken no note of the fact that since January 1, of 1921, European securities in the sum of $800,000,000 have been underwritten in the American market.

He would hale a free America to the bar of the league, there to petition for admission, while about its capital are encamped 2,000,000 armed men. He would have America grant credits, and credits still, aye, even in excess of those which from private sources have been granted to Europe since the signing of the armistice and at a time when we are about to undertake the difficult and hazardous negotiation for the resumption of interest upon the debt due from European Governments to the American Government, and for the ultimate payment of the capital of that debt, however doubtful some may think that payment to be.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. McCORMICK. I yield very readily to the Senator.

Mr. KING. The Senator a moment ago adverted to the fact that Governor Cox had pleaded for an extension of credit to Europe upon the part of Americans, and alluded to the fact that credits to the extent of five or six billions of dollars had been extended. I think the figures given by the Senator are approximately correct, that the private credits extended are between five and six billions of dollars. The question I desire to ask the Senator is this: Does the Senator think that it was wrong economically, politically, or morally for the United States, either the Government or individuals, since the signing of the armistice, to extend to Europe the large credits which were extended, as the result of which we found a market for our surplus products, increased our exports and thus increased somewhat our imports, and in a general way brought prosperity to the United States, while at the same time aiding in the stabilization of conditions in Europe, and materially diminishing the sufferings and the sorrows and the woes to which those unhappy people were subjected?

Mr. McCORMICK. The Senator from Utah, I must think, has studied the speech of his leader either less carefully than I, or not so recently.

Mr. KING. I have not read it.

Mr. McCORMICK. I thought as much.

Mr. KING. I am speaking for myself.

Mr. McCORMICK. I have no doubt that when the Senator from Utah and other Senators have read it, they will be disposed publicly to advise the country whether they agree or disagree with the leader of the Democratic Party.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, without reference at all to anything that Governor Cox said, the Senator accurately stated that we had extended large credits to Europe since the armistice. I ask the Senator whether he believes that was wrong, economically or otherwise?

Mr. McCORMICK. I said the Senator must have read the speech of his leader less recently or less carefully than I. Let me ask the Senator to note this difference, that private credits granted were granted upon sufficient security. No man reading the Dayton speech of the leader of the Democratic Party can find any but the implicit meaning that credits should be granted Europe, not upon security found overseas, but upon the surplus wealth of the United States.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I was not speaking with reference to what security had been demanded; I was taking the situation as it exists, namely, that we had extended large credits. Assume that we did or did not have security for the credits extended, but taking the broad fact as it is, does the Senator contend that the extending of credit which has been made by private individuals was wrong?

Mr. McCORMICK. If private individuals have extended credit without sufficient security for repayment, I condemn it. If they have granted credit upon sufficient security, security which guarantees payment for that which has been sold upon credit, that is sound business, beyond dispute.

Mr. KING. If those who extended the credit have been and are satisfied, then the distinguished Senator from Illinois can not complain, and the Senator from Illinois must know that economically the United States has prospered by reason of the extension of those credits. Whether or not adequate security was given, that fact stands forth, I think, demonstrable and indisputable.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, I will not labor the argument that credit granted by private sources upon insufficient security will not in the long run contribute to the wealth or prosperity of the United States. I rose to call to the attention of Senators on the other side of the Chamber the salient features of the two addresses delivered by the leader of the Democratic Party—that which dealt, if I can understand his speech, with the granting of unsecured credits to the Old World in excess of the sum in which they had been granted and that which dealt with the League of Nations.

Providence alone can forecast what may be determined at the conference of Genoa. We must hope that if it accomplish but little, that little will point the road to the drastic curtailment of armaments, to the no less drastic curtailment of civil expenditures in Europe, to the balancing of budgets, to the cessation of the issue of fiat money. If Europe can put aside her differences, if European statesmen assembled at the Genoa conference can accomplish, even in part, what assembled in the League of Nations they failed to do, then America can help in the economic reconstruction of Europe. That, I think, is a question upon which we are not disagreed. That presents an issue upon which the parties will not differ.

Mr. President, I rose to call to the attention of the leaders of the Democratic Party, many of whom I see yonder, and one of whom is likely to be nominated in succession to Governor Cox—I rose to call to their attention his argument for the granting of credits and to his demand that America enter the League of Nations. I hope that they will speak their minds as fully as he has upon those questions.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCORMICK. I yield.

Mr. KING. I think the Senator made just one error in the concluding part of his statement when he referred to some person on this side who would be nominated as successor of Governor Cox. He ought to have made that statement a little fuller, and he would have been more accurate if he had said some Democrat would be elected as the successor of President Harding.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, I welcome the issue which will be presented if Senators on the other side will join Governor Cox in demanding that America enter the League of Nations, and will make the campaign of 1924 as Governor Cox made the campaign of 1920. Let him who is without fear among you be the first to join himself with Governor Cox upon that issue.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the Senator from Illinois voices a sentiment with which I am heartily in accord—that is, that the League of Nations will again be made the issue in another campaign, in order that we may separate this time the sheep from the goats inside our own party.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

Mr. BORAH. The Senator from Illinois is chairman of the senatorial election committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. POMERENE. I was just wondering if the Senator from Idaho would go a little further and tell which were the sheep and which the goats?

Mr. BORAH. The Senator from Ohio does not need any instruction upon that question so far as the viewpoint of the Senator from Idaho is concerned.

I want the Senator from Illinois to make that the issue inside the Republican Party. It is within his power to do it. Entertaining the views and sentiments which he does, that the entrance of the United States into the league would be a disaster to this country, it is his highest and most solemn obligation to make it the issue.

So far as I am individually concerned, Mr. President, I occupy the same position with reference to the league that I occupied two years ago. If I know it, I will support no man for a position in this body who is in favor of entering the league, and I will support any man who is opposed to entering, whether he is a Republican or a Democrat. I confess that it may not be easy for me to ascertain that fact, judging by the experience of the past; but if I am able to ascertain it, that will be my position.

This is not a party issue. This is not a party question any longer. There are just as many Democrats opposed to the league as there are Republicans, possibly, who are in favor of it, and this administration can not for a moment be considered as an antileague administration. The most powerful influences in the administration, outside of the President himself, are in favor of the United States entering the League of Nations, and if they are correctly reported by their proleague friends they are doing all they can to take the country into the League of Nations. No, Mr. President, it is not a party question, unless the able Senator from Illinois, through his leadership, believing as he does, is able to make it a party question.

The fundamental principles upon which the people rejected the League of Nations in 1920 were the principles which are found embodied in Washington's Farewell Address. The people did not stop to discuss reservations. They did not discuss the question of how you could form a political copartnership, and whether or not you could go part of the way in and retire at leisure, or whether you could form a limited copartnership.

The question which appealed to the American people in 1920 was the preservation of the doctrine announced by the fathers, that we should never suffer any political connections with foreign powers. That they distinctly understood; that they comprehended, and comprehending they spoke in no uncertain way. The layman, the man behind the plow, the man in the workshop, the farmer, those who were not schooled in questions of international law and the niceties of obligations, understood that simple, fundamental proposition, and upon that question they voted. If there be any candidate for Senator on this side of the Chamber who thinks the people did not or do not believe in that doctrine let him have the courage in this campaign to try it out.

Mr. President, what is the situation now with reference to that principle? In my humble judgment that principle has already been surrendered. The fundamental principle upon which the fight was made is already gone, and the question is not now the preservation of it, but the regaining of the position which we asserted in 1920. We have already made political connections and we are preparing to make others. Step by step we are moving toward a complete political association with all nations.

Permit me to recount one or two or three of the steps which we have taken, and more which we propose to take. We ratified what was known of the German treaty. In doing so we availed ourselves directly or indirectly of the most obnoxious obligations of the Versailles treaty. In other words, we reserved the right to avail ourselves of those obligations in the treaty which, to my mind, are to-day the cause of the economic chaos in Europe.

What is the proposition now pending? If we are correctly advised by the newspapers, the proposition is already at hand to introduce a joint resolution or a bill in the Congress by which the President shall be authorized to appoint a member of the Reparation Commission. When we become a member of the Reparation Commission, we will have entangled ourselves with every conceivable political question which can arise in Europe for the next 40 years. There is no proposition into which we would have entered or become entangled by reason of our entrance into the league which will not confront us and be a part of our program if we become a member of the Reparation Commission.

The Reparation Commission is itself a government, a government in Europe, exercising quasi legislative, judicial, and executive functions, a government which has practically the power of life and death over a large portion of the people of Europe, a government which centers in itself autocratic and despotic powers and touches every political nerve on the European Continent. Into that commission we propose to enter, so we are told, and I submit to my able friend from Illinois now, when the bill or resolution authorizing the President to appoint a member of the Reparation Commission comes to this body, what will be the position of the Republicans in that fight? What will be our attitude? Does he doubt for a minute what as a party we will do? And the league Democrats will join you, because it is a long step toward that for which they have been contending.

I am not so much concerned about the Democratic Party. It is not for me to care how often it is defeated; but I am concerned a little to know whether the party which sits upon this side of the Chamber proposes that the United States shall become a member of the Reparation Commission, and thus violate every pledge made to the people in 1920. Does any Member on this side of the Chamber know what the program is? I should like to hear from him. I should like to have those who are bantering our friends on the other side of the Chamber tell me what they propose to do when that proposition comes in for consideration.

I stated at the time the German treaty was up for consideration that in due time that proposition would be submitted to the Senate and we would accept it. The President has already notified the public that the first step should be taken, and is waiting for the Senate to take it; but if the Senate does not, he doubtless feels under obligation to do it.

Now, suppose we join the Reparation Commission. Have we not then abandoned the principle upon which we made the fight in 1920? Have we not become entangled in European affairs? Have we not committed ourselves to the political affairs of Europe? Have we not associated ourselves with every feature of European life—political, economic, militaristic, and every other kind? Is there anything which we would do under the league in the way of political entanglements that we are not bound to do as a member of the Reparation Commission?

Sir, the mere fact of technically refusing to join the league is not to preserve that faith the American people supposed they were voting for. We will have surrendered the principles for which we fought, whether we technically become a member of the league or not.

But that is not all. We can not become a member of the Reparation Commission and do our duty as a member of that commission and carry out the obligations of the commission and execute the obligations of the treaty without joining ourselves to the League of Nations. They were so interwoven at Versailles, made into one unit, one supporting the other and cooperating with the other, that we would be in the same position when we join the Reparation Commission and refuse to become a part of the league that those who now insist that we should join the Reparation Commission say we are at the present time, to wit, in a position where we could not enjoy our full rights or discharge our full obligations with reference to Europe.

That is the second step. The first step has been taken. The second step is near at hand, and the third step will be to become a member of the council and of the assembly at Geneva, and it will follow, in my judgment, as inevitably as the night follows the day, because when we are a member of the Reparation Commission the other is the logical and inevitable position for us to take.

Mr. President, I do not find fault with men who are for the league and say so and who are fighting for it. They have a perfect right to their opinion. Therefore it is in no spirit of personal criticism; but we know that the Secretary of State, the most influential member of the Cabinet in foreign affairs by reason of his position, is an open, avowed leagueist and always has been. We know he is in favor of becoming a member of the League of Nations with a reservation or two with reference to article 10, which are now hardly necessary by reason of article 2 in the four-power treaty, and that his object and purpose, as stated to his countrymen in 1920, was to pull the Republican Party into a position where it would have to join the league. Go back and read the proclamation which was given to the people in October, 1920, signed by Mr. Hughes, Mr. Hoover, Mr. Paul D. Cravath, Mr. Root, and others. They told the people in plain words that the only way to get into the league was to vote the Republican ticket and put the Republican Party in power. What is the interpretation of that? Certainly it bound Mr. Hughes, if he was in a position to exercise power or influence or ability or ingenuity, to exercise it in behalf of going in that direction, and he is doing it with a marked degree of success. Let no man be misled; he is carrying out his purpose.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator think that it is entirely proper in this discussion to exclude the President from the category of those favoring the league, at least with reservations? The Senator knows that when President Harding was a Member of this body he voted for the league with the so-called Lodge reservations. In many of his speeches prior to his election his attitude was such and his declarations were such that millions of Americans construed the position of President Harding to be in harmony with that just announced as the position of Mr. Hughes and Mr. Root and others, namely, that America should go into the league with reservations with respect to article 10.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, in discussing the league question it is only necessary for a Republican to discuss those Republicans who are distinctly announced in favor of the league. I am always hopeful that the sorely tempted may not ultimately fall. Mr. Hughes has not left his position in doubt. The declaration of 1920, read in the light of present events, does not leave his purpose in doubt and leaves not in doubt at all his intention of carrying out his purposes.

Mr. President, there are still others. Mr. Hoover, who was another gentleman who signed the declaration of 1920, is a very active, influential, and powerful member of the Cabinet. Mr. Hoover makes no concealment of the fact at all that we are going into the league; that we ought to be in it now; that affairs will not go as they should until we are in the league. Mr. Hughes and Mr. Hoover are perfectly willing to move cautiously, just so they move. Suppose Mr. Cox had been elected President and Mr. Cox had appointed as his Secretary of State one of the ablest and most pronounced antileaguers in the United States, or suppose he had formed a Cabinet, a majority of whom were in favor of the league and some of whom were distinctly advocating it all the time, would not the members of his party have a right to say that the zeal of the President, as he would then be, was not commensurate with the promises which he had made?

So I repeat, Mr. President, it is no question of party issue. It is a question of individuals. Upon that the question will have to be fought out, and the Senator from Illinois, as chairman of the election committee, can make the issue clear and distinct and pronounced within his party. So far as I am concerned I can perhaps be of very little assistance to him, but in so far as I can aid him in that issue I stand ready to answer to his call at any hour of the day or night. On this question I know no party obligation. I can look with no more complacency upon betraying and surrendering the great policies which I believe essential to the life of this Republic by a Republican than by a Democrat. Let us again stand up and be counted. Let Republican candidates who want to go into the political embroilments of Europe say so to their people. I shall not complain of the result.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, my friend the Senator from Illinois [Mr. McCORMICK] adverted to an address recently delivered by former Governor Cox at a Jefferson Day banquet in New York City. It is true that Governor Cox lost the election and lost the Presidency, but in that disastrous campaign he won that which politicians can never give and can never take away. He won the esteem of the American people. He never spoke in cryptograms.

Never was there an administration whose home or domestic policies pleased the American people more than the home or domestic policies of Woodrow Wilson. Why, then, did we sit in sackcloth and ashes after the election?

He is not only a wayfarer, he is a pretender who says the league was not an issue in 1920. If the league was not the issue, what was the issue? You can not make a contract in politics. The only way by which you can bind men in politics and statesmanship is by honor. The learned Senator from Illinois, who graces the Senate, presided at a meeting in Chicago during the league contest, at which his countrymen gathered, not by the thousands but by the tens of thousands. As chairman of that meeting he introduced a number of speakers and promised that the United States would be drawn into no league nor semblance of league, no alliance or entanglement with foreign powers, if the Republicans were successful.

The Senator from Illinois was a member of the battalion of death which stabbed the league. The Senator from Illinois denounced the league, its parents, and its friends. And yet, sir, only one capricorn had passed when the roll was called upon a vicious alliance into which we were invited—the quadruple alliance—and the Senator from Illinois voted "yea."

He voted to take the United States into an alliance with an oriental power that is challenging and undermining our American culture. He voted to take the United States into an alliance with an imperialistic government. But the Senator from Illinois did have the manhood, he did have the conscience to say that he did it reluctantly, and that he was not "enamored of such a treaty."

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JOHNSON in the chair). Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. ASHURST. Certainly.

Mr. McCORMICK. The Senator has described my course more leniently than other Democrats will as the campaign progresses. I am grateful to him for that. Now that he has done speaking of me——

Mr. ASHURST. I have not quite finished speaking of the Senator.

Mr. McCORMICK. Will he tell us, for himself and his colleagues, whether or not they agree with Governor Cox that we ought to enter the League of Nations and subscribe to the covenant thereof?

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, we Democrats do not have any Delphic oracles to speak for us. We think for ourselves and act accordingly.

Mr. McCORMICK. I did not say that Governor Cox thought for himself; I said he spoke for himself. There is a distinction.

Mr. ASHURST. I believe that Governor Cox thinks for himself and speaks for himself; and I will read to the Senator from Jefferson's first inaugural address, of March 4, 1801. Pretermitting a number of paragraphs, Mr. Jefferson, the founder of the Democratic Party, said——

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, I should like to ask if the answer to my question is to precede or to follow the Senator's literary exercise?

Mr. ASHURST. Will the Senator repeat his question?

Mr. McCORMICK. Does the Senator agree with Governor Cox or disagree with him on the issue of the entrance of the United States of America into the League of Nations?

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I am amazed that my friend would ask that of a Democrat. Let me read from Jefferson's inaugural address:

> Absolute acquiescence in the decisions of the majority, the vital principle of republics, from which there is no appeal but to force.

Mr. President, am I obliged again to traverse the ground which I traversed a moment ago when I said the issue in 1920 was the league, and that by promising to stay out of the league the Republicans triumphed? Does the Senator believe that a Democrat now is seeking against that majority to take the United States into the league?

Mr. McCORMICK. What interpretation does the Senator put upon the speech of Governor Cox, of Ohio?

Mr. ASHURST. The utterance of a dauntless man——

Mr. McCORMICK. Who has rejected the doctrine of Jefferson.

Mr. ASHURST. I read further from the same inaugural address of Jefferson, in which he said:

> Equal and exact justice to all men, of whatever state or persuasion, religious or political; peace, commerce, and honest friendship with all nations; entangling alliances with none.

The League of Nations had at least the poor virtue, which if Senators be fair they are going to admit, to wit, that it kept the door open so that all powers of the earth might join; so that all the powers might at least be heard.

Of course, Mr. President, the Senator from Illinois would be glad to have the League of Nations for an issue.

Mr. McCORMICK. He would.

Mr. ASHURST. He would; and, of course, the leader of the majority would be glad to have the league for an issue.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President——

Mr. ASHURST. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. McCORMICK. Furthermore, the Senator from Illinois will do his best to have it for an issue.

Mr. ASHURST. I do not blame you.

Mr. McCORMICK. And thus to satisfy the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH].

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator from Illinois in stating that he desires to have the League of Nations for an issue discloses a perspicacity that will be valuable not only to the Republican Party but to any association with which he is affiliated. The Senator from Illinois is too keen a man to fail to perceive the lamentable failure of the Republican Party to keep its promises. I do not blame him, in his desperation, for trying to induce Democrats to set up the league as an issue; having betrayed the confidence of the people in taking this Nation through the back door into the quadruple alliance, it becomes him now to try to make the country believe that it is necessary to perpetuate his party in power in order to escape the league.

Mr. President, it is appropriate that I should say that you, sir [Mr. JOHNSON in the chair], stood the fire. Although some prominent men in your party and a representative of a great foreign power were sent to your State to make speeches whilst the four-power treaty was under discussion, you stood like a man. Notwithstanding the backfire and the effort to align your own State against you, you delivered your vote at your country's altar for the good of your country.

Mr. President, the transparency of the Republican attempt to make the league an issue is so obvious that the most unpretending simpleton can see that it is only an effort on the part of the Republicans to get away from their record.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield.

Mr. McCORMICK. Will the Senator from Arizona, who is as candid as he is fair, not address his remarks to Governor Cox, of Ohio? It was he who in Dayton and again in New York said that events were carrying the United States eastward to the seat of the League of Nations at Geneva. It was Governor Cox who twice said that events would bring about the entrance of the United States into the league.

Mr. ASHURST. I am aware of that, and I am also aware of the fact that the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] said that it was obvious that the attempt was now being made to take the United States one more step toward the league by having a commissioner appointed to the Genoa conference. It is very convenient for Republican leaders to talk of the League of Nations so that the people may forget that $180,000 or more were expended to secure the seat of a Member of the Senate.

Mr. KING. Over $250,000.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, in the State of Arizona, which voted for Harding electors and sent my Republican colleague [Mr. CAMERON] here in 1920, you filled the sky with your promises to the people that if they would send a Republican Senator to Washington and vote for Republican electors for President you would place a duty of 20 cents a pound on long-staple Pima cotton. The people there in part believed you.

Mr. CARAWAY. But they will not do so any more.

Mr. ASHURST. The tariff bill came here from the House of Representatives the 22d day of July, 1921, 8 months and 19 days ago, and in that bill long-staple cotton was on the free list. You seek to escape the effects of that violated promise.

That is the record from which you seek to escape; that is the record in front of which you want to erect the barrage or smoke screen of the League of Nations.

I recur now to the Budget. Here I sincerely pay my tribute of respect to my friend from Illinois for his work on the Budget bill, and to another great Illinoisan, General Dawes, but the Budget crumbled and fell to pieces in a body with over a hundred Republican majority when a river and harbor bill came along.

So much for the Budget.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield.

Mr. McCORMICK. So much for the Budget, and so much for long-staple cotton. How much for the League of Nations?

Mr. ASHURST. What is that?

Mr. McCORMICK. The Senator can not hear the question?

Mr. ASHURST. No; I can not.

Mr. McCORMICK. No; and others will be deaf to that question in the next campaign.

Mr. ASHURST. I am glad to listen.

Mr. McCORMICK. How many of you agree with Governor Cox that America must enter the League of Nations?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to answer, for one, that I agree with the governor?

Mr. McCORMICK. The Senator is secure in the vast spaces of Texas. He is for the League of Nations. I want to hear from some of the Senators from the border and northern States.

Mr. ASHURST. Of course, other Senators speak for themselves. I am speaking for myself.

Mr. McCORMICK. I thought the Senator was speaking for the whole Democracy.

Mr. ASHURST. I never have pretended on any occasion to speak for any other than myself. At times, in what I say, my own constituents do not agree with me. That is one reason why they elect me—because they know I say what I think, in the State and elsewhere.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, every Senator in this Chamber will readily bear witness not only to the ability but to the downright courage of the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. ASHURST. I thank the Senator.

Mr. McCORMICK. But I hope he will not consider me discourteous if I express the fear that his eloquence, if long continued, may serve as an anesthetic and lull his hearers to sleep, so that they may forget that he has not answered my question, nor has any other Senator save the Senator from Texas.

Mr. ASHURST. Not all the drowsy sirups and mandragora of the earth could lull to sleep the writhing conscience of the Republican Party when it reflects upon its broken promises.

Mr. McNARY obtained the floor.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, it seems to me that an opportunity ought to be given to other Senators on the other side of the Chamber to declare their agreement or disagreement with Governor Cox; and therefore I make the point of no quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CAPPER in the chair). The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	France	Lenroot	Poindexter
Ball	Gooding	McCormick	Pomerene
Borah	Hale	McKinley	Rawson
Broussard	Harris	McNary	Sheppard
Bursum	Harrison	Moses	Spencer

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-six Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, I give notice that immediately after the passage of the Agricultural appropriation bill I shall move that the Senate consider Senate bill 2919, known as the District of Columbia rent bill.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, I requested the presence of a quorum in order that Senators on the other side of the Chamber might not be delayed by the intervention of other business in announcing their agreement or disagreement with Governor Cox, of Ohio. I note that in response to the call a fifth of the Democratic Senators are present. I hope that among that number there will be two or three to tell the country whether they hold with the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] that as an issue the League of Nations is a corpse, or whether they agree with Governor Cox that it lives, and that they urge with him that the United States shall subscribe to the terms of the covenant, and take its place at Geneva, surrounded by the 2,000,000 bayonets of the peoples of Europe.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President——

Mr. CURTIS. May I make a parliamentary inquiry?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state his inquiry.

Mr. CURTIS. Has the Agricultural Department appropriation bill been laid before the Senate to-day?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has not been laid down.

Mr. CURTIS. Will the Senator from Georgia yield so that the bill may be laid before the Senate?

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Certainly.

AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. McNARY. I ask that House bill 10730, the Agricultural Department appropriation bill, be laid before the Senate.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 10730) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. McNARY. I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that the bill be read for amendment, and that the committee amendments shall be first considered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

CURRENT POLITICAL ISSUES.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, the statement made by Governor Cox to the effect that our present situation is due to the fact that we did not enter the League of Nations should not be allowed to go unchallenged. Everyone knows what a terrible condition our country has been in, beginning two years ago, and its condition now; but, Mr. President, the same conditions prevail in Switzerland, which is a member of the League of Nations, and which was neutral during the war.

Switzerland enjoyed profound peace while other nations were convulsed. It stayed out of the vortex into which we drifted. Her profiteers made fortunes, as ours did. She was the land of refuge of thousands of people who had to leave their native lands. Her industries flourished during the war. Since the war they are prostrated. And why? She is in the league; we are not. Her industries were prostrated by the very same causes which prostrated ours. Those causes have been pointed out in a masterly and eloquent way time and again by the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN].

Switzerland went crazy about the gold standard, just as we did. Switzerland refused to supply paper money to her people. We had a supply, and it was wickedly destroyed to the extent of two thousand million dollars.

Switzerland's money is so dear, the value of the dollar has been so inflated, that one industry after another has become extinct. She no longer makes the finest watches for the world. She no longer exports shoes, or laces, or embroideries, or silks, or dyes. She no longer exports the milk chocolates and the condensed milk which were sold in every market in the world. Therefore not only are the men, the women, and the children unemployed, but the very cows are unemployed. Except for domestic purposes, the cow is unemployed, meaning that her product is no longer used for the milk chocolates and the condensed milk which once brought in marvelous revenues to the Swiss.

On the other hand, Mr. President, Germany is not in the league, but Germany increased her issues of paper money until the volume of it is six or eight times as great as it was before the war, and the German goods entering the Swiss markets are underselling the Swiss goods in those markets. Germany has sprung from her ashes. Germany is industrially rehabilitated. And by means of what? Because of the increase of her currency. Switzerland is in ruins, as we are, because of our dear currency, our precious gold.

Governor Cox would make the league the issue in the next campaign. Speaking for myself only, I will say that, in my judgment, no greater mistake could be made by the Democratic Party than to try to breathe the breath of life into that dead issue.

We need not look far for issues. There is issue after issue which can be used against the Republican Party. One of the mightiest swords that could be drawn upon the opposition in the campaign of this year would be this new judge bill, which was put through last Friday night. That is the most radical, the most savage, the most dangerous attempt that has been made upon the independence of the judiciary since the year 1687, when James I of England put the judges under his feet.

There was a demand throughout this country for an additional judge here and there and yonder. That demand should have been met by separate bills, giving to this State, that State, and the other State the needed judge. There was no demand whatever for any revolutionary change in the system itself; yet that revolutionary change was made, and now the sword of Damocles is suspended by a hair over the head of every district judge in America.

Formerly the district judge, acting through his clerk and the seal of the court, sent out his signal of distress, his cry for aid, and the circuit judge had to respond to that appeal for help, and to send him a district judge from that circuit. It is true that the circuit judge, when he was convinced of the necessity for it, could himself send in a judge; but the practice had been for the circuit judge to wait upon the initiative of the district judge. Now that initiative is taken away from the district judge. He is at the mercy of the circuit judge. In some State there will be a district judge who is industrious, capable, conscientious, discharging his full duties, giving a full day's work as often as his dockets require it, disposing of all cases with due promptitude, disposing of all motions without unnecessary delay; but because he does not take the case in his own hands and direct the jury to find some bootlegger guilty; because he does not take away from the jury its constitutional rights; because he does not deprive the jury of the right of giving the accused the benefit of every reasonable doubt, the circuit judge, instigated by some prohibition officer, will send in from outside the circuit a tyrant who will storm at the jury, who will intimidate the jury, who will direct the jury, and thus reduce the 12 jurors to 12 nullities.

The other day in Arkansas a district judge of the Federal court was dissatisfied because a jury, composed of the most prominent business men in that town, refused to convict. He publicly insulted them and ordered their names stricken off the jury list forever. By what right did he do that? No right at all, but the thing is done.

Another judge put jurors in jail because they would not convict a bootlegger. They did not think the evidence warranted his conviction. They gave him the benefit of the doubt, as it was their duty to do.

We do not allow a juror to go into the box until he has satisfied the court that his mind is a clean slate, upon which can be written "guilty" or "not guilty," according to the evidence. If he has a bias or prejudice for or against the accused, he is automatically disqualified to serve on that case. Will any lawyer tell me why a judge should not go on the bench with his mind as impartial as that of everyone of the 12 jurors? Yet it is stated openly by the head men of the Anti-Saloon League that they are going to have judges to suit them.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Certainly.

Mr. HEFLIN. It has been the fundamental law always heretofore that it was the province of the judge to pass upon the law and the province of the jury to pass upon the facts. There are scores and scores of instances where the Supreme Court, in State and in National Government, has reversed and remanded cases because the trial judge refused to give a charge that read like this: "It is the duty of the jury to give the defendant the benefit of every reasonable doubt," or words to that effect, "and unless he is proven guilty beyond a reasonable doubt it is the duty of the jury to acquit him."

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. That is sound law.

Mr. HEFLIN. The judge of whom the Senator spoke in Arkansas undertook to direct the jury as to its verdict in a criminal case, and invaded the province of the jury when he did so.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Of course, that is correct.

Mr. President, in the New York World of last Thursday appeared an editorial in which Congressman TINKHAM, of Massachusetts, is quoted as saying that the Anti-Saloon League boasts that it controls Congress.

The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] read into the RECORD the other day a letter from Wayne B. Wheeler, chief counsel of the Anti-Saloon League, in which he virtually told the Senator from Tennessee that he could have a new judge for Tennessee if the Anti-Saloon League could name the man. Having control of Congress, as they say, they want control of the judiciary; and if they can control the legislative and the judicial departments of the Government, the executive department will have its hands tied and 110,000,000 people will be governed to a large extent by the Anti-Saloon League.

One of its affiliated associations is the National Reform League, of which the Rev. Sam Small is one of the speakers and organizers.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President——

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LENROOT. I did not catch the Senator's statement as to the contents of the letter sent to the Senator from Tennessee by Mr. Wheeler.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. As I understand it, in substance—I will not quote the language—it was that they would assist him in getting a new judge for Tennessee if he would allow them to name the man.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the Senator from Georgia look that up, and if he is inaccurate will he not correct himself?

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I shall certainly take pleasure in doing so. That is the way I understood it. I so understood it at the time the Senator from Tennessee made the statement on the floor. I did not read his remarks in the RECORD, because I heard the speech. I attended a farewell dinner that was given at the home of Congressman GORDON LEE, of the Georgia delegation, just prior to the departure of Gen. Peter Harris, of Georgia, for France, and at the table, where conversation was free, I mentioned what I had heard in the Senate that day, as I understood it. One of the gentlemen at the table said, "Judge SHIELDS told me the same thing." As already stated, if I am in error, I will correct my statement.

The superintendent of the Tennessee Anti-Saloon League is quoted editorially by the New York World as follows:

> A number of Congressmen who hold the balance of power to pilot majorities in Congress come from Southern and Western States, where money for organization and educational purposes is scarce. They always had to have help from the national league.

In other words, here is the responsible head of the Tennessee Anti-Saloon League saying, virtually, that the league finances southern and western Congressmen who, of course, are expected to remember gratefully the assistance given them to be reelected, or elected in the first instance, and whose gratitude will take the form of votes as demanded by the Anti-Saloon League. Therefore, if what they say is true, the independence of Congress is gone. If they can hang a threat and cloud of danger over the heads of district judges the independence of the judiciary, won by 300 years of stubborn struggle, will be gone.

When our forefathers were framing the Constitution under which we live, the proposition was made by Mr. Dickinson, of Pennsylvania, to vest the Executive with the power to remove Federal judges when so requested by both Houses of Congress. That motion was opposed by Gouverneur Morris, by Edmond Randolph, and by Mr. Rutledge, as attempting to interfere with the complete independence of the judiciary; and when the final vote came only one State, Connecticut, voted for the provision. They left the judges completely independent, even of Congress and of the President. The life term itself was given to them in order that they might not fear removal, which had been practiced in England, especially under the Stuart kings.

Mr. President, the great trouble with our country to-day is that we have forgotten at what tremendous sacrifice our forefathers won the pearls of personal liberty. There is not a diamond in the crown of our civic glory that did not cost the lives of thousands of brave men.

Now, the Federal judges have been mobilized and Chief Justice Taft made commander in chief. What is his record? The American people showed what they thought about his record when they gave him the worst beating that any presidential candidate ever got at the polls until Governor Cox ran. Judge Taft, on the district bench, was the very first Federal judge who nailed the engineer to his locomotive and denied him his right to quit work when the job and the pay dissatisfied him. It is as much the right of a human being to quit work as it is his right to earn his living by work. Both are natural rights, and no judge can legally take them away. Taft took them away from the engineer.

Suppose the engineer had sought an injunction against the railroad management to restrain them from dismissing the engineer, what would have been Taft's decision? Would he have enjoined the management from dismissing the engineer? The case would have been laughed out of court. If the one is good law, the other is, because the converse of the proposition that you can make a man keep on working is that you can make an employer keep on employing him.

But I mentioned the Rev. Sam Small, who is connected with the Anti-Saloon League and the National Reform Association. The Reverend Sam says they are going to spend in the election this year the $2,000,000 of their annual income. That is a fine idea of reform, is it not? They are going to debauch the electorate. Two million dollars! The first thing we know the Newberry case will become eminently respectable. We have all been sorry that so much money was spent. The Senator from Michigan himself came on the floor of the Senate and said he was very sorry, and said he was especially sorry that day, just before the vote was taken. I made a speech for the Senator on the law of the case, and I do not take back a word of it, either. They did not prove anything against him. No votes were corrupted, but the speeches cost too much; the music cost too much; those pictures taken on the battleship in the park in New York City—about which my friend from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] grew so eloquent—cost too much; newspaper space cost too much. Publicity cost too much, but they had to have it. Henry Ford already had it.

But here is the Anti-Saloon League claiming that it already controls the balance of power in Congress, and this was the power behind the judges' bill, which changes our judicial system, places Taft in command, and puts the circuit judges in control over the district judges. Tell me, would you not feel mortified and humiliated, if you were doing what you thought was your duty and keeping the docket clear, if the circuit judge himself were to come in, or send in an outside judge to your district? You would take it as a reflection upon yourself. You would take it as a public reprimand, and if you were a man of pride you would resign.

Another thing: The circuit judge can change a district judge around over the country until, being a man who loves his home, his home folks, his friends, his old associations, he will find life not worth living, and he will quit. Then, in comes your partisan, who will virtually abolish the office of the jury and virtually deny jury trials to the accused.

Then, too, they are to have an annual convention, with Taft presiding, and have it anywhere that he chooses, and as long as he chooses, getting $10 a day, while they are holding the convention.

The language of the bill is so vague that the convention may virtually give orders to every district judge in the Union, and he will have to obey them, else they will make him feel sorry that he did not; they will punish him in some way.

It is consolidation, centralization, putting all power here in the Chief Justice, whereas the Supreme Court should have no further power over lower courts than to reverse their decisions. That is all the power a higher court ought to have over a lower court.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. With pleasure.

Mr. HEFLIN. As I understood the Senator from Georgia a little while ago, if a district judge's docket now becomes crowded and he desires help from the outside, he will make known that desire and a judge will be sent down to help him clean up his docket?

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. That is the existing law.

Mr. HEFLIN. In other words, the needs of the locality control in the matter, the National Government responds, and aid comes?

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. HEFLIN. But now the need of the locality is to be ignored, the authority is lodged at Washington, and the opinion of the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court and his council will decide whether or not a judge shall be sent down?

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Exactly so.

Mr. President, I offered an amendment to restore to the district judge the power to call for help, through the certificate of his clerk, under the seal of the court, but the Republicans voted the amendment down. If they did not have some hidden design in that bill, why did they not leave the law as it now is?

By another provision in this proposed new law the circuit judge may name himself to go into the district and take the business out of the hands of the local judge. I offered an amendment to strike that provision out, because it seemed altogether wrong in principle to allow a judge to select himself to take the place of the district judge; but the Republicans voted my amendment down. Why was that done? The Republicans did not explain it then. I ask any of them to explain it now. It can not be explained on any theory consistent with the independence of the judiciary.

There are other issues the Democrats may use in the campaign without going into the last year's bird's nest of the League of Nations. They can use the four-power pact, which is worse than the League of Nations would have been. The league had its machinery for the adjustment of differences between nations, large and small. In the league our Republic could have protected itself from Japan and against France and against England, but in the four-power pact we have no such protection. Senators on the other side of the Chamber said that it would take a unanimous vote to decide a disputed question. Where did they get that idea? If that is true, why did they not write it into the bond? Why did they not give us the protection of three or four words, which would have made that meaning clear? Sir, we shall be bound, as all bodies in this country and others are bound, unless otherwise stipulated, by a majority vote, and Japan, France, and England will be the arbiters of our destiny.

While the debate was in progress we on this side of the Chamber spoke of the danger of the four-power pact driving Germany, Russia, and China together; we spoke of the war that was inevitable between Japan and Russia on account of Japan's aggression upon the island of Sakhalin and the mainland of Siberia. The newspapers bring us word day by day of the ever-widening area of the war. There was a battle fought day before yesterday in which it is said there were tens of thousands engaged and thousands killed. The Moscow government is behind the government at Chita. The 4,000,000 men under Trotski may even now, while I speak, be on the march toward the Siberian frontier. There is an issue. It may be debated until the hot blood of indignation runs through the veins of every true American and his eyes blaze at the way in which a party elected by such a tremendous plurality in November, 1920, because of the league, has now gone completely back and given us something worse than the league.

Let the league alone; fight the four-power pact. Tell the people that we made a struggle here to uphold the banner of traditional American policy; that we did our best, under great odds, to maintain the historic policy handed down to us by Washington, Jefferson, Madison, and Monroe. Tell them that we were handicapped from the beginning, because the first thing the President did was to take our leader away and leave us without a head.

I do not think I mistake the sentiment of the American people. They are as much devoted as ever to the policy of America first, America all the time, friendly relations, commercial treaties with foreign nations, but no political alliance at all, because any such alliance is bound to be an entangling one, drawing us into the whirlpool of European politics. It is now widened out to Asia and Africa. Our proud ship of state is launched upon a shoreless sea, without compass or rudder; we are dragged at the chariot wheels of Japan, made subservient to the imperial ambitions of Great Britain, made an ally to the imperialism of France, with her white army of 700,000 men and her black army of 4,000,000.

In God's name, what have you done—you who came to open a peace conference and who took advantage of closed doors, under the popularity of the peace cry, secretly to form this four-power pact, which needed amendment almost as soon as it saw the light?

There are other issues; a sufficient number of issues have arisen here during the short year that I have been in this Chamber. I will not enumerate them now, nor discuss them, but I have said enough to indicate what I mean. Let us bring the campaign up to date; let us not deal in back numbers and past issues. Take what our friends on the other side have done in this Congress, from the time they reversed themselves on the Colombian treaty and the soldier bonus on down to last Friday night, when they revolutionized the judiciary system of our fathers.

And think of what was done here to-day! It is not proper for me to state what occurred in executive session, but I can announce the result. The Senate confirmed the appointment of a Senator and a Representative in Congress to act as commissioners in settling the greatest international debt that ever existed, a debt involving $11,000,000,000, with $1,000,000,000 of accrued interest due upon it. Our forefathers said that no Senator and no Representative in Congress should hold an office created during his term.

Senators have contended that these commissioners are not officers within the meaning of the law. Mr. President, the Constitution of the United States was not the work of amateurs, legal or literary; it was the work of veterans, of experts. Alexander Hamilton and James Madison were the authors of almost the entire Federalist, which has been called one of the greatest books of its kind ever written, and is standard authority to-day. Do you suppose that Hamilton, a finished scholar as well as a consummate lawyer, did not know the meaning of the word "office"? Did not James Madison, an accomplished scholar, know the sense in which the word "office" was used? Edmund Randolph, one of the splendid lawyers of his day; Elbridge Gerry, who wrote the judiciary act of 1789, which is one of the greatest statutes ever framed, the bedrock of our judicial system; George Mason, who wrote the Virginia Bill of Rights, a better paper, in my judgment, than the Declaration of Independence—do you mean to say that in the Senate now we have better lawyers, better artists in the use of words than were the men whom I have named?

The word "office" is synonymous with "employment," "position," a public, official "charge."

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. OVERMAN. Is it not a fact that the refunding act that we passed, in its first provision, in providing that the commissioners should be confirmed by the Senate, recognized the fact that they were officers?

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. That is my understanding, Mr. President. I thoroughly agree with the Senator.

It has been contended that these men will have no power, that they will conclude nothing, that the President will have to approve. Can anybody conceive that President Harding would veto the work of that great international conference, after it had spent weeks, perhaps months, in adjusting the claims and reaching a final decision? It is inconceivable to me that President Harding would do anything of the kind. At any rate, the President does not come into action until the refunding commission shall have acted. The President is up in the air until they give him something to stand on. Their work is the work to which he will put simply his O. K. Therefore they do have a place of tremendous power, handling the biggest debt the world ever knew. The way in which it is settled, the kind of bonds they take—meaning, of course, the nationality of the bonds—will affect the destinies of the whole world for the next 25 or 50 years.

So I say, Mr. President, I think it would be very unfortunate if Governor Cox should make the country believe that our depression in all lines of business is due to the fact that we did not go into the league. It is due to the fact that our currency began to be destroyed in 1920; and, at the very time they began to destroy the currency, the slump began; and now, with two thousand million dollars of our money taken away from the channels of trade, there is nothing to stimulate enterprise, give hope to labor, give employment to idle hands, and put legitimate business on its feet.

It is an amazing thing that in Switzerland, which went into the league and adopted exactly the same policy that was adopted here by the Federal Reserve Board, they have the same fatal results that we got; and it is a stranger thing that Germany, on her back so short a while ago, meeting her future under such difficulties and so many discouragements, should have adopted the method which always puts new life into an industrial body; and she is to-day underselling us in the markets, underselling Switzerland in the markets, underselling England in the markets; and with her loins girded up in strength and with hope in her heart she goes forward to an assured industrial future with the victor song of Miriam on her lips.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I desire merely to correct a statement made by the distinguished Senator from Georgia.

The Senator from Georgia stated that Mr. Wheeler, of the Anti-Saloon League, wrote a letter to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS], stating in that letter that if the Anti-Saloon League could name the judge in Tennessee they would assist him in securing an additional judge. I was amazed at the statement. I thought I recollected the letter. I asked the Senator from Georgia if he would repeat his statement, thinking I might have misunderstood him. He did repeat it, and in the same language.

I have the letter before me, Mr. President. While I hold no brief for the Anti-Saloon League or for Mr. Wheeler, there is not the slightest warrant in that letter for the statement made by the Senator from Georgia. There is not one single word in the letter intimating in the remotest degree that the Anti-Saloon League, if they could name the judge in Tennessee, would assist in procuring one. I should like to have the attention of the Senator from Georgia, if I may.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I am listening.

Mr. LENROOT. I am very sure the Senator from Georgia would not intentionally misrepresent anyone.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Why, no; certainly I would not.

Mr. LENROOT. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that the letter to which he has referred is found upon page 4861 of the RECORD. I ask him to read the letter, and then make the correction in the same public way that he made the statement.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I shall certainly do it, if I have made any mistake about it.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia subsequently said:

Responding to the suggestion of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT], I read from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of March 31, 1922, page 4861, from the remarks of the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS]. The Senator from Tennessee said:

> I received a letter from Mr. Wheeler concerning this Tennessee judgeship, and I will read it and my answer. I know I am giving entirely too much importance to what Mr. Wheeler says and does; but as he seems to be engaged now in initiating legislation, passing laws, and influencing the President in appointing judges and the Chief Justice in the assignment of judges, I think I may notice him a little.
> This letter is dated March 14 and addressed to myself. I read:

I select the sentences which seem to me to bear on this most particularly.

> Permit me to inform you that we—

That is, the Anti-Saloon League—

> now are and always have been in favor of having an extra judgeship for the State. * * * I have a letter from the United States attorney in the middle district of Tennessee in which he says—

Then the Senator from Tennessee remarked, in parenthesis:

> It seems he was interfering with the discharge of the duties of the district attorney down there.

Then he proceeded reading from the letter:

> In this district the docket is fearfully congested, so that it is almost impossible for a case to be called for trial until a year and a half old, and, of course, this greatly militates against successful prosecution.

Then the Senator from Tennessee proceeded:

> This district attorney, instead of answering that letter evidently calling him to task for supposed dereliction in his duties, wrote an apologetic letter. If I were President of the United States and there was a district attorney who would apologize to any interest for the manner in which he discharged his duty and took a reprimand from it, I would remove him as soon as I heard it.

Then the Senator read his reply to Wayne B. Wheeler, as follows:

> Your letter tendering to me your assistance in providing a United States district judge for the middle district of Tennessee received.
>
> I do not wish or need your assistance in this matter.
> The Senators and Representatives from Tennessee are amply able to take care of all legislation concerning their State, and I resent any interference by outsiders and special interests, especially concerning the judiciary.

Mr. President, as I said, I did not read the speech, because I heard it; and I got the general idea from it that Wayne B. Wheeler was interfering with the independence of the judiciary, and interesting himself unduly in the selection of judges. The remarks of the Senator from Tennessee, I am sure, will bear that interpretation without any violence being done to his words. Of course, there is always room for honest differences of construction, but that is the construction I gave them.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, does not the Senator admit there was no foundation in the letter to which the Senator referred for the statement that he made?

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, I did not attempt to quote the words. I quoted what I understood to be the meaning, and I stand by it; that is, I contend that that inference is fairly to be drawn from the words. Why should Wayne B. Wheeler be concerning himself about the condition of the dockets in these district courts? That is the business of David H. Blair, Commissioner of Internal Revenue; that is the business of Mr. Haynes, the internal-revenue enforcer. It is not the business of Wayne B. Wheeler to be cracking whips over the heads of district attorneys, and offering to assist Senators in getting new judges, carrying with it naturally the inference that the new judge must be the kind of a man he wants, or he will not assist in getting him.

AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10730) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, I am deeply interested in the agricultural appropriation bill, having been for some time a member of the Agricultural Committee; and I am particularly interested in an amendment which I desire to offer to that bill during the pendency of the measure. Unfortunately, important engagements call me away from the city for a few days, and I desire to ask unanimous consent to present this amendment before the committee amendments are considered. It will take only a few minutes, and I shall briefly explain the purpose of the amendment if the unanimous consent is granted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STERLING in the chair). Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Maryland? The Chair hears none.

Mr. FRANCE. I desire, on page 65 of the bill, to offer an amendment increasing the appropriation to investigate and encourage the adoption of improved methods of farm management and farm practice from $291,707 to $301,707, with the following proviso:

Provided, That $10,000 of this sum may be used to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to provide means for the study of the problem of the standardization and simplification of farm implements and machinery, and of the repair parts for the same, with a view to the possible more economical manufacture and use of the same.

Mr. President, this subject of the standardization and simplification of farm machinery is a very important subject, and it is one which has engaged the attention of those interested in agriculture for many years. It is quite apparent that if farm machinery could be so standardized that there would be manufactured, for example, one mowing machine instead of many varieties of mowing machines, a standard implement with standardized parts, an enormous saving could be effected in the manufacture of that particular form of farm machinery. It is quite evident, also, that the cost of the repair parts for such a standardized machine would be greatly reduced. Moreover, Senators will realize that the distribution of the standardized machine parts for standardized machines would naturally be much easier, and that it could be accomplished in a much more economical manner.

I have long been interested in this subject. Recently the Maryland Legislature adopted a memorial recommending such legislation as that embodied in this amendment, and I feel that the Maryland Legislature was very well advised in adopting such a memorial.

Of course, the appropriation of this $10,000 would simply mean that the Secretary would have at his disposal a small sum which would care for the clerical work involved in an investigation which in a large measure would consist merely in calling together the large manufacturers of farm machinery for consultation as to the possibility of some cooperation in the standardization of machine parts and of the forms of farm machines. One of the large companies—a company which has rendered very valuable service to the country in the invention and in the production of new machines—manufactures, I believe, in its own factory several varieties of implements for one particular process of agriculture. Every farmer well knows that this large company at one time manufactured three different types of mowing machines and two or three different types of binders. If that one company could be persuaded to substitute one standardized machine for these three varieties much might be accomplished in the way of economy.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. FRANCE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I want to call the Senator's attention to the fact that the Bureau of Standards of the Department of Commerce is doing work right along that line. I do not know that they have taken up particularly farm machinery; but I know that the Secretary of Commerce presented this very idea to us in connection with the appropriation bill for the Department of Commerce, and they also had a provision of that sort in the bill of last year—that is, the bill for the current year—and the Secretary called attention to the work they have done along various lines. I do not remember the particular manufactured articles, but where there had been heretofore 66 different varieties of the article manufactured they have got it down, I think, to 11; and then in another case where there were 32 varieties they have got it down to 6 standard articles, right in line with what the Senator is favoring.

I simply wanted to call the Senator's attention to the fact that all of that work could be done by the Department of Commerce. We ought to avoid duplication as much as possible. It is a very important object, of course.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, in response to the Senator I will say that I am much gratified to know that the Bureau of Standards has carried its work so far. Of course, if the Bureau of Standards would take up this work, it would be perfectly agreeable to me; but this is the Agricultural appropriation bill, and it seems to me that it would be quite appropriate to have a small sum, such as this—merely $10,000—to enable the Secretary, if he pleased, to get in touch with the Bureau of Standards and cooperate with the Bureau of Standards through employees who might be necessary in carrying on such cooperation between the Department of Agriculture and the Bureau of Standards. I have a very high degree of confidence in the intelligence of the Secretary of Agriculture, and I believe that if this sum should not be needed for this purpose he would not use it. I merely wish to bring to the attention of the Senate the importance of this question, which will run into a saving of millions of dollars to our farmers if anything can be effected.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President——

Mr. FRANCE. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. JONES of Washington. In that connection I just want to read to the Senator a provision in the Commerce appropriation bill which I think covers this matter:

To develop methods of testing and standardizing machines, motors, tools, measuring instruments, and other apparatus and devices used in mechanical, hydraulic, and aeronautic engineering; for the comparative study of types of apparatus and methods of operation, and for the establishment of standards of performance; for the accurate determination of fundamental physical constants involved in the proper execution of this work; and for the scientific experiments and investigations needed in solving the problems which may arise in connection therewith, especially in response to the requirements of aeronautics and aviation for information of a purely scientific nature, including personal services in the District of Columbia and in the field, $15,000.

Then there are several other provisions with reference to standardization.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

Mr. FRANCE. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. I am told that the Bureau of Standards is doing some work along the line just indicated by the Senator from Washington, but I suggest this to the Senator: I do not see just how you are going to fix any rational limits to the inventive genius of the American people. The Senator knows, as most of us who were born in the country and have lived upon farms know, that the mowers and reapers we had 25 or 30 years ago, and those which were in use 40 years ago, were very different from those which are in use to-day. There has been progress, and the rivalry between various machine companies and agricultural implement houses has brought progress and change. If there had been an effort then to standardize and to bring all of the organizations engaged in the manufacture of machinery into a sort of a combine and to standardize everything, there would not have been the improvement and the developments which have been the result of rivalry.

I believe in competition. It seems you can run this thing to an extreme. I do not think you could do any effectual work, or any practical or useful work, in attempting to accomplish the things which the Senator has in mind, if I grasp all that he has in mind. Mr. Ford has standardized the Ford car, and you can get the parts almost on the desert. He has many establishments throughout the United States where you can buy the standardized parts for the Ford car. Other manufacturers of automobiles would not consent to any standardization. They think their cars, if they are not better, at least are higher priced than Mr. Ford's, and each manufacturer claims some little superiority, some advantage, and he advertises it because of those differentiations. It is not homogeneity which is sought; it is heterogeneity; it is differentiation, taking an idea here and an idea there, and developing that idea and bringing about a higher standard.

So it is in nature and so it is in all utilitarian things. We rise from the simple to the complex, from the homogeneous to the heterogeneous, from the simple piece of machinery to the more complex piece of machinery, and thus we get perfection and higher utility in all the activities of life, utilitarian or otherwise.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, I realize the force of what the Senator has said, and there would be no disposition, I am sure, on my part to favor any legislation which would in any way hamper the inventive genius of our people or prevent the manufacturer of new types of machines to do work in a new way. At the same time, I think the Senator will realize that much might be accomplished in the way of standardizing different machines, for example, designed to do the same work, manufactured by one company. If one company is, simply to preserve a name, manufacturing three types of binders or three types of mowing machines, it seems to me that is a waste which is hardly rational and one which might well be avoided.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I want to read another provision of the act:

To enable the Bureau of Standards to cooperate with Government departments, engineers, and manufacturers in the establishment of standards, methods of testing, and inspection of instruments, equipment, machines, tools, and so forth.

There is $100,000 made available for that purpose for coordination and cooperation.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, I do not care to prolong the debate upon this amendment, but I would say in response to what has been brought forward by the Senator from Washington that I am quite familiar, in a general way, with the problem of standardization to which he has referred. I do not think it has occurred to the Bureau of Standards that it might, under the provisions of that statute, take up the question of the standardization of farm machines and types of farm machines. There is a very great waste in the manufacture of all sorts of machines in the different standards which are used for screws and bolts and threads, so that very often nuts for bolts are not interchangeable, and so that machine tools of a certain type can not be used in place of machine tools of a slightly different type. That is a vast field, which is quite different from this, I think.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The bureau has taken up an investigation of work along those lines and in the other lines, and I do not know of any reason why they should not take up such investigation in connection with machinery if it is brought to their attention. I think they would be glad to do it.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, it would be very profitable if the Bureau of Standards would take up this work. I offer this amendment because I think something might be accomplished in this direction. Certainly we want no Federal legislation which would compel manufacturers to make one type of machine. I think that would be intolerable; but I think that to supply the Secretary with a small fund which would enable him to call into conference the big manufacturers, with a view to discussing this question, would be most helpful. If the Committee on Appropriations should later decide that this work should be carried on by the Bureau of Standards, it would perhaps be more economical and better organization. If the legislation is not needed the Senate can pass upon that subject, although I rather feel that it is a question in which the millions of farmers all over the United States are vitally interested, and it seems to me that it would be at least an indication of our intelligent interest in them if we should adopt this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE].

CURRENT POLITICAL ISSUES.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, the Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCCORMICK] has invited the Democrats to-day to accept as the issue for the next campaign the League of Nations as the paramount issue. The Senator said, before he finished his remarks, that he would do all in his power to make that the main issue.

Mr. President, this is at least a very interesting situation. The Republican Party came into power in all the branches of the Government on the 4th of March, 1921. They have had the House and Senate since March 4, 1919. They have had control of every instrumentality of the Government all these days and weeks and months that have gone since March 4, 1921, and nothing has been accomplished in that time to which the Senator from Illinois can point with pride, so in sheer desperation he goes back and undertakes to lead the Democrats out to the battle ground where the League of Nations issue was fought out three years ago. He knows that as the Senate is made up to-day we could not elect enough Senators at the next election to change the political complexion of this august body—the body that would have to pass on the League of Nations issue suggested by him. Mr. President, the Senator from Illinois is begging the question. He is evidently trying to get away from the miserable record of his party when he asks us to go out and fight over again the League of Nations issue with him. In their own good time the American people will attend to that question. I am not surprised at the distinguished Senator from Illinois wanting to make the League of Nations or some other international question the main issue. The Senator from Illinois himself is the author of the deflation resolution which brought misery untold to millions of people in the United States since the Republican Party went into power. Let me read that resolution, because I want the 34,600 readers of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, who read the powerful speech delivered to-day by the Senator from Illinois, to know just why it is that he wants to make the League of Nations the issue in the congressional elections of 1922.

The Senator from Illinois offered this resolution on the 17th day of May, 1920, when the Republicans were in power in both branches of Congress:

Resolved, That the Federal Reserve Board be directed to advise the Senate what steps it purposes to take or to recommend to the member banks of the Federal reserve system to meet the existing inflation of currency and credits and the consequent high prices, and what further steps it purposes to take or recommend to mobilize credits in order to move the 1920 crop.

That is the deflation resolution that opened the door to all the train of miseries that follow the destructive deflation policy ordered and carried out by the Federal Reserve Board under Republican rule. The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN], one of the authors of the great Federal reserve banking system, rose in the Senate on the following day and said:

The resolution of the Senator from Illinois, however, offers a hook and an invitation from the Senate to the Federal Reserve Board to declare a policy of "deflation." It carries the suggestion of deflation. The policy of deflation set by the Wall Street Stock Exchange control, which broke the stock market by high-interest rates, meets the approval of the same class of financial experts domiciled in Chicago, who might naturally advise the Senator from Illinois; but I warn the Federal Reserve Board and I warn the country that if a panic in this country results from their policy they are liable to have a North Dakota reaction, where a State bank was established to furnish money at fair and stable rates, using the credit of the State and the taxing power of the people of the State for that purpose. You can go too far in the matter of taxing the people of this country by high-interest rates and the "deflation" of credit. If the reserve board leads the procession of banks in fixing high rates on the people—that is, on their own depositors—and a great industrial depression follows, why should they wonder if the people of this country should demand as a remedy that the reserve banks be made banks of deposit and discount? I warn the Federal Reserve Board that this country is not going to submit to any depression brought about by the banks of the country or under the policy of the board or under the advice of financiers domiciled either in New York or Chicago.

The able and faithful Senator from Oklahoma saw and told what would happen.

Mr. President, following the passage of the resolution introduced by the Senator from Illinois, the prophecy made by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] was fulfilled, and here is what occurred: Loans and discounts and bought paper held by all of the 12 Federal reserve banks May 28, 1920, page 748, Federal Reserve Bulletin, 1920, $2,938,000,000 in round numbers; August 31, 1921, page 1240, Federal Reserve Bulletin, 1921, $1,527,000,000 in round numbers; January 25, 1922, $932,882,000.

Contraction of credits for 12 Federal reserve banks May 28, 1920, to August 31, 1921, $1,421,000,000. May 28, 1920, to January 25, 1922, $2,005,000,000 in round numbers.

Contraction of Federal reserve notes in circulation May 28, 1920, to August 31, 1921, $625,000,000; May 28, 1920, to January 25, 1922, $923,000,000.

That is what happened following the deflation arrangement made by the resolution of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCCORMICK]. The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN], a Democrat, rose in this Chamber and stated just what would follow the passage of that resolution, and it did follow. Instead of the Federal reserve banks issuing Federal reserve notes to meet the demands of business in the South and West, it withdrew the notes already issued and left the people helpless in the hands of those who desired to pillage and plunder them from one end of the country to the other, and the Senator from Illinois comes in with his face all wreathed in smiles, and says, "I intend to see that you make the League of Nations the principal issue."

If I had been the author of a resolution that had deprived hundreds and thousands of farmers of their farms, if I had been the author of a resolution that had driven 7,000,000 of men out of employment, if I had been the author of a resolution that had turned 500,000 ex-service men in the streets, I, too, would want to make the League of Nations, or some other outside matter, the burning issue of the campaign.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President——

Mr. HEFLIN. I am glad to yield to my friend from Georgia.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, how does the Senator from Alabama think the Republicans are going to answer when the people ask them what about that bonus for the soldiers?

Mr. HEFLIN. My friend from Georgia reminds me of another thing. If I had participated as did the Senator from Illinois in taking off the calendar the adjusted compensation bill, just ready to give justice to the soldiers, to treat fairly those who saved the life of the Nation—if I had participated as he did in carrying it back into the committee room and putting it to sleep forever, I, too, would want some other issue in the campaign that is about to burst upon us.

I do not know what Republicans on the other side are going to do if their leader [Senator McCORMICK] continues to lead them as he is undertaking to lead them to-day. I wonder if his leadership over there is universally accepted?

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield further to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. When the campaign opens and the people learn that the Secretary of the Treasury is holding office in violation of a law made under the Presidency of George Washington, which law was obeyed by General Grant when he was President and which caused the resignation of A. T. Stewart after his nomination had been confirmed by a Republican Senate, what does the Senator think will be the answer of Republicans when they are charged with the willful, deliberate, and continuous defiance of the law?

Mr. HEFLIN. I do not know what the average answer will be on the Republican side, but if my friend from Georgia should confront the Senator from Illinois with the interrogation that he has presented to me, he would say, "The League of Nations must be the issue." That would be his answer. He would not discuss vital domestic issues that affect the very life of the American people. They have not yet been able to answer the Senator's proposition. The Senator read the law here. I think there is a great deal in his contention, but they wave it aside—why? Because this news does not go back to the voters. Thousands and hundreds of thousands of men never know anything about what we discuss here. They are dependent upon the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and a few papers that are free from the clutches of the interests that are controlling the press situation in the main.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President——

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I remind the Senator from Alabama that the Republicans not only have retained in a high financial office a man who is violating the law every day that he holds it, but they put him on an international debt funding commission to handle the biggest debt that ever existed in the history of mankind and where the opportunities to make more money are quite ample.

Mr. HEFLIN. Yes, Mr. President; and in spite of it all we see ruin around us, industries standing still, smokestacks idle from whose tops the black smoke used to curl when we Democrats were in power, the hum of industry was heard, prosperity flowed like a river, farmers riding in automobiles, everything lovely and the goose hanging high. The average man had money in his pocket and most of them had a bank account, and now you can go to church on Sunday and observe that the preacher feels the pinch of the hard times you have produced. They send the collection basket around and they get coppers and nickels and Republican promises whereas they used to get a $1 and $5 bill and the like even out in the country when we Democrats were in power. All that has disappeared, and is it any wonder that the Senator from Illinois wants to make the League of Nations the issue? [Laughter.]

We want to tell the people what you have done and what you have not done and try you on your record. We want to quote the Scripture and say that "The tree is known by its fruit," and measure you by that standard.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield further to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield with pleasure.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I remind the Senator from Alabama that the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES] the other day boldly proclaimed the doctrine that the President of the United States was not bound by law.

Mr. MOSES. Oh, no, Mr. President.

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield for the purpose of allowing the Senator from New Hampshire to defend himself against the charge.

Mr. MOSES. I spoke solely with reference to the civil service law.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Is that law any less binding than any other law?

Mr. MOSES. The law had been interpreted by the court to the effect that it did not apply to the President, but applied to the heads of departments and bureau chiefs. I ask the Senator to read the RECORD.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I heard what the Senator said at the time. It is not necessary for me to read the RECORD. Of course, he is "crawfishing"; he has seen the untenable position which he has taken. Mr. President, as I understand the law, even our Chief Magistrate can not remove a civil service employee without giving that employee a chance to be heard.

Mr. MOSES. He certainly has done it.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Yes, he has; and the Senator from New Hampshire, Mr. President, says that he has a right to do it, even defying the law when he does it.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I intended to say but a word or two, but the Senator from Illinois [Mr. McCORMICK] walked over toward this side of the Chamber, begging that somebody reply to him, and state his position upon the existing situation, that I felt a desire to say a few words in reply to his earnest appeal to make the League of Nations the main issue. As a rule, Mr. President, when a man who has occupied a place in this Chamber or in the other stands for reelection he runs upon his record. He says, "I invite you to study the votes I have cast; I ask you to read the utterances I have made on public questions; I ask you to judge me by the record that I have made"; but the Senator from Illinois after months and months of absolute power rises to-day in all the majesty of his leadership on the other side and says that he proposes to make the League of Nations the issue for the Democrats in the coming campaign. Well, I repeat, if I had been the author of the deflation resolution which he caused to be passed, and had thereby brought about all the misery that has followed the adoption of that resolution—the ruin of business, the destruction of property values, the denying to millions of people the actual necessities of life—I, too, would want to inject a new issue into the campaign this fall.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, I want to read for the benefit of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES] and for the benefit of the country at large the following provision of the law, which is found in the Statutes at Large, section 4, under the general title of "Judicial":

In the event of reductions being made in the forces in any of the executive departments, no honorably discharged soldier or sailor whose record in said department is rated good shall be discharged or dropped or reduced in rank or salary: And provided further, That any person knowingly violating the provisions of this section shall be summarily removed from office, and may also, upon conviction thereof, be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000 or by imprisonment for not more than one year.

I understood the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY] to say that among the 28 employees who were discharged summarily from the Bureau of Engraving and Printing were several ex-soldiers.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, the Senator from Georgia [Mr. WATSON] this afternoon stated that Mr. Wheeler, counsel of the Anti-Saloon League, had written a letter to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS], offering, if the Anti-Saloon League might name the judge, to assist in securing an additional judge in Tennessee. I called the attention of the Senator from Georgia to Mr. Wheeler's letter, and I stated that I did not believe the Senator from Georgia would intentionally misrepresent anybody. We all make our mistakes, Mr. President, in the heat of debate, and I make my share of them, but I had supposed that every Senator upon this floor, when his attention was called to a misstatement which involved a gross injustice to any individual, would be willing to correct the statement. The Senator from Georgia read the letter, but the Senator from Georgia refuses to correct the statement. It is not for me to judge of the conduct of any Senator, but I ask unanimous consent to have the letter of Mr. Wheeler to the Senator from Tennessee printed in the RECORD at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I object, unless the remarks of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS], at the point where I took them up, also go into the RECORD.

Mr. LENROOT. Very well. I wish to hurry on, and I will read Mr. Wheeler's letter to the Senator from Tennessee, which the Senator from Georgia deliberately stated to the Senate contained an offer upon the part of Mr. Wheeler to assist in securing a judge provided the Anti-Saloon League might name the judge. That was the Senator's statement, repeated twice upon this floor. Mr. Wheeler's letter reads as follows:

DEAR SENATOR SHIELDS: I notice that you have been quoted in the paper as being under the impression that the Anti-Saloon League was opposed to an extra judgeship in Tennessee. Permit me to inform you that we now are and always have been in favor of having an extra judgeship for the State. As I remember it, the Chief Justice went on record in one of the hearings in favor of it. I have a letter from the United States attorney in the middle district of Tennessee in which he says:

"In this district the docket is fearfully congested, so that it is almost impossible for a case to be called for trial until a year and a half old, and, of course, this greatly militates against successful prosecution.

"So far Congress has failed to pass the bill creating an additional judgeship, and until it does no results in the enforcement of law in this district can be very successful."

It is very clear to me that you need an extra judge in that district, and I hope that you will urge the adoption of an amendment to provide for it. I will gladly do anything I can to aid you in securing this amendment. Our only interest in this measure is to secure, if possible, a better enforcement of the law.

That is the letter, Mr. President, which the Senator from Georgia says contains Mr. Wheeler's offer to aid in securing the judge, provided the Anti-Saloon League may name the judge. I will permit the readers of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD themselves to form their own conclusions with respect to the matter.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President, as the Senator from Wisconsin has read the letter which was a part of the speech of the Senator from Tennessee, I should like to read from the RECORD some remarks of the Senator from Tennessee in the very same speech and found on the same page of the RECORD:

Right here I wish to go a little further into the activities of the Anti-Saloon League in interfering with this legislation. A few days ago, when this bill was under discussion, I stated that there was evidence of pernicious activity upon the part of the paid lobbyists of the Anti-Saloon League to control legislation concerning the judiciary, and especially that of my State. I referred to the fact that when this bill passed the House a provision was made for a district judge for the middle district of Tennessee, but that at the last meeting of the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate, when I was ill and absent, this provision was stricken from the bill. In the same connection I called attention to the fact that it was generally conceded in Tennessee that Mr. John J. Gore, a prominent lawyer of Tennessee and one of the leaders of the Republican Party of that State, would be appointed judge in the event the office was created, and because he had been opposed to the prohibition amendment the Anti-Saloon League was already waging a war upon him and protesting against his appointment. I called attention to the coincidence between the striking out of the middle Tennessee district and the protest against Colonel Gore, and left it to Senators to infer whether there was any connection between them. I then made and now make no charge against anyone.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, when any Senator on this floor undertakes to teach etiquette and the rules of propriety to a brother Senator, he assumes a serious responsibility. I am the guardian of my own honor, and I allow it to be impugned by no man.

I stated distinctly, Mr. President, that I was not pretending to quote the language of Wayne B. Wheeler's letter, but the substance or meaning, the true purport of it. Having been referred to what was said by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] before he read the letter and after he read it, I felt convinced that I had not been materially mistaken as to the real purposes in the mind of Wayne B. Wheeler when he sought to get into communication with the Senator from Tennessee in connection with the creation of a new judgeship in his State.

What does the RECORD itself show, Mr. President? It shows that Wayne B. Wheeler, according to the Senator from Tennessee, had been trying to influence the President of the United States in the appointment of district judges. It shows that Wayne B. Wheeler had made it his business to find out the condition of the docket in the middle district of Tennessee with a view to speeding up prosecutions, of course, under the Volstead law. It shows that Wayne B. Wheeler has always been in favor of a new judgeship and an additional judge. Who is it who needs to be told that such a judge would be the kind of a judge that the Anti-Saloon League wanted? Why need we beat about the bush and pretend not to understand what Wayne B. Wheeler was after? Would he interest himself in the appointment of a judge who would not be a partisan enforcer of the Volstead law? Your common sense tells you, "No."

Of course, the Senators do not appoint judges; of course, the Senator from Tennessee would not appoint a new judge; and it followed necessarily when Wayne B. Wheeler tendered his services to the Senator from Tennessee to assist him in getting a new judge that Wayne B. Wheeler was going to throw the entire influence of the Anti-Saloon League to have appointed a judge that suited them. Who can dispute that?

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Certainly.

Mr. BROUSSARD. If the Senator will permit me, I should like to read another quotation.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I shall be very glad to have the Senator do so.

Mr. BROUSSARD. I resume reading from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD where I left off a few moments ago, what the Senator from Tennessee said with reference to this very question:

Mr. Wayne B. Wheeler, described, as I shall read later, in a circular issued by the superintendent of Tennessee as one of the greatest American lawyers and diplomats, stationed here in Washington in charge of this matter, and in whose office, it is said, all legislation in regard to prohibition is initiated, gave out an interview to the Tennessee papers concerning my statement, from which I will read:

Here is the interview given out by Mr. Wheeler and quoted in the Tennessee paper:

Wayne B. Wheeler, legislative agent of the Anti-Saloon League, when questioned about the matter, admitted that protests against Gore had been sent to the Department of Justice.

"These consisted of letters from certain people in Tennessee, which were forwarded to me by our State superintendent," said Wheeler. "I merely filed them with the Department of Justice. I don't suppose they ever got to the Senate committee."

Wheeler denied that he or his organization had influenced the committee in striking Tennessee from the bill.

"On the contrary, we believe Tennessee needs and should have the additional judgeship," said he. "If Senator SHIELDS will offer an amendment to the bill to take care of the Tennessee situation, we will use our influence to put it through."

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, I thank the Senator. That is simply cumulative testimony that Wayne B. Wheeler was willing to have a new judgeship in Tennessee and intended to put in a partisan of the Anti-Saloon League. Construing the whole thing together, as must be done—the understanding of the Senator from Tennessee, the letter itself, and the interviews which Wayne B. Wheeler had been giving out denouncing certain judges because of their lax enforcement of the Volstead law—my mind can reach no other conclusion than that Wayne B. Wheeler wanted another judgeship in Tennessee to speed up these prosecutions, and would, of course, support with all the power of the Anti-Saloon League a nominee who would carry out the wishes of the league in regard to the Volstead Act.

AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10780) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, the Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE] was called out, and I am offering for him his amendment in a modified form in lieu of the one which was sent to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment as modified.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. At the proper place in the bill it is proposed to insert the following:

Study of standardization of farm machinery: To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to cooperate with the Bureau of Standards in the study of the problem of the standardization and simplification of farm implements and machinery, and of the repair parts for the same, with a view to the possible more economical manufacture and use of the same, $10,000.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I desire to suggest to the Senator from Washington, as I did to the Senator from Maryland when he was present, that that properly should follow the word "products," on page 65, line 11. It appertains to a kindred subject.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator from Maryland desired it to go in at the proper place in the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McNARY. I ask unanimous consent that the Secretary be authorized to make all necessary changes in the totals of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment on page 57, line 25.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from Mississippi that the bill is not now open for general amendment.

Mr. HARRISON. I should like to have the amendment offered and pending.

Mr. LENROOT. I suggest to the Senator from Mississippi that it can be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi will be printed and lie on the table. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Assistant Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 4, line 20, to increase the appropriation for rent of buildings and parts of buildings in the District of Columbia for use of the various bureaus, divisions, and offices of the Department of Agriculture from "$165,666" to "$181,866."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I should like to ask, in regard to the Weather Bureau, how the footing, $351,400, compares with the amount appropriated for the present year?

Mr. McNARY. Last year the amount of salaries was $346,580. This year it is $351,400. The increase is practically $6,000.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Is that all in the District here?

Mr. McNARY. That is in the District and at different parts of the country where the observations of weather conditions are made.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. How many of those district stations are there where observations are made?

Mr. McNARY. I will say to the Senator that I have not the districts classified. Most of the work is done here in Washington, however. Some observations are made in different parts of the country. A study of the bill that I have before me does not show minutely the location of these various stations.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Will the Senator be so kind as to prepare himself on that subject to-morrow? I suppose this bill will have to go over until to-morrow. I should like to know where those stations are, and how many of them there are. I will say that I am inquiring especially because my attention has been called to the fact that the town of Alliance, Nebr., which is near the western boundary of the State, is considered by the head of the Weather Bureau a very desirable point at which to develop weather observations, but that the appropriation for the current year was not sufficient to enable them to do anything.

Mr. McNARY. I will state to the Senator from Nebraska that the first paragraph of salaries under the Weather Bureau is for salaries in the District of Columbia. The item to which the Senator is now addressing himself is the following item, carrying an appropriation of $115,575. That is for general work in connection with the bureau outside of the District of Columbia.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That is, the expenditures outside the District of Columbia are $1,573,835?

Mr. McNARY. That is $115,575, which is a reduction from the bureau's estimate, but an increase over the bill of 1922.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I see on the page to which the Senator refers that the total Weather Bureau appropriation is $1,925,235.

Mr. McNARY. That is the total; but if the Senator will look on page 7, line 18, he will observe an appropriation of $115,575. That is approximately $9,000 under the estimate of the Director of the Bureau of the Budget.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That is for expenditures in the city of Washington?

Mr. McNARY. No; if the Senator will go back and read the whole of that paragraph, he will see that it covers the States in general.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think the chairman of the committee is mistaken, probably, and that he will find on page 8 an appropriation for necessary expenses outside of the city of Washington.

Mr. McNARY. Oh, yes.

Mr. JONES of Washington. It reads:

> For necessary expenses outside of the city of Washington incident to collecting and disseminating meteorological, climatological, and marine information—

And so forth. I think that will cover what the Senator from Nebraska asks.

Mr. McNARY. Yes; pardon me.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

If I understand my colleague's question, it is one in reference to the various weather stations. I will say to my colleague that they are not fixed by law. The department has power to establish them without having a place designated. It is chiefly a question of supplying instruments. Most of these reports are made by people without any expense, but the Government supplies the instruments that make the measurements and get the necessary data.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the Senator is right about that. These are the general weather stations all through the States, and the method of initiating a new one is through a petition to the department showing the necessity of it. That is the general policy.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes. I have forgotten now what the expense of the instrument is; but there are different kinds of instruments, some more expensive than others, and the Government supplies them to most of the stations. There are other places where they do not get as much information, and have a cheaper grade of instruments.

Mr. WARREN. As the Senator says, many of them are simply voluntary as to service costing nothing, the Government furnishing the machinery; but in others they have the full equipment of weather experts, and the information thus gathered through the minor offices is forwarded to Washington and disseminated from the main office here.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; it comes here to Washington, and from Washington it is disseminated all over the country.

Mr. McNARY. The estimate of the department shows that there are 47 of these stations, located in different parts of the States.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes. I will say to my colleague that I think, though, there will be found out in the anteroom here on the map all of the locations.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I should like to ascertain this fact: Is the appropriation for the year embodied in this appropriation bill larger than for the current year, and if so by how much, for the maintenance of Weather Bureau stations?

Mr. McNARY. For the stations alone? The estimate made by the Bureau of the Budget is $1,346,610.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. What is that for?

Mr. McNARY. I will read to the Senator the current bill. The bill last year carried $1,300,110. This bill carries $1,327,240, a very slight increase—an increase of practically $27,000 for the bill of 1923, that we are now considering, over the bill covering the present fiscal year.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. And that is expended under the discretionary power of the chief of the service?

Mr. McNARY. Throughout the various parts of the States.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I will say that the reason I make this inquiry is because the director of the service, writing me some time last fall, stated that the bureau had maintained limited facilities at Alliance at a very small expenditure, etc.; and he added:

> I realize that because of the growing importance of this city the present service does not fully meet the local demands. I recognize that Alliance would be a good point, because of geographic position, from which daily observations would be helpful in forecast work; also, a station there would be of real service to farmers—

And so forth.

Mr. McNARY. I can say to the Senator from Nebraska, as he well knows, that that is an administrative matter, properly to be taken up with the Weather Bureau.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yes.

Mr. McNARY. We could not cover that in this bill.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. But the bureau chief stated to me that the reason why he could not at that time extend the service was because of a lack of appropriation, and I am now endeavoring to find out by how much the appropriation was increased.

Mr. McNARY. In round figures, $27,000 over the current bill.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I will say that Alliance is equipped with a Federal building, and the facilities are all at hand for the establishment of a weather bureau; and it is the chief city in a very wide area of country that I believe has not as yet been supplied with any adequate weather service.

RECESS.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I move that the Senate stand in recess until 12 o'clock to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to, and (at 5 o'clock and 44 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Wednesday, April 12, 1922, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, April 11, 1922.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Lord, how excellent is Thy name in all the earth. We therefore acknowledge Thee to be our everlasting Father. Because Thou dost live, we live. This is our faith and the sum of our hopes. Even with a knowledge of our failures we still draw near to Thee, for we are Thine through the ages and through the periods of eternity. With us may life, with its priceless values, never be vague nor vain. We ask Thee to help us in our study of things which make for a greater country, a happier people, and that exalteth a nation. Through Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 11228, making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 11228, with Mr. TOWNER in the chair.

The Clerk reported the title of the bill.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LINTHICUM].

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to scrapping the Navy beyond what the treaty requires. It is the men of the Navy who do the fighting, and if you scrap the personnel by granting an insufficient number of men to man the ships then you reduce our naval defense below the 5-5-3 ratio as provided in the treaty. I am in favor of having the treaty Navy fully manned and fully equipped, as efficiency may require. I want it sufficiently equipped, manned, and trained that it may hop off at any moment.

The American people want economy, not parsimony. They want an adequate defense of their country; less than that would be dangerous and well-nigh criminal on the part of Congress. The people of the country look upon the Army and the Navy as the great force to maintain peace, not alone among the nations of the world but among the people even of our own country. They do not want us to take any chances as to safety. I am not sufficiently informed in naval affairs to discuss it from a scientific standpoint, but when the President of the United States, the Secretary and Assistant Secretary of the Navy, the General Board of the Navy, and all the experts say that the 67,000 men provided in this bill are not sufficient to properly man the ships and that not less than 86,000 will be sufficient, I am unwilling to take even the word of the distinguished committee which reports this bill against their recommendation. The basis upon which this bill is drafted and from which 67,000 men are suggested is determined by the arbitrary date of February 1, 1922, the committee taking the number of men actually manning the ships on that date as their basis for the requisite number provided in this bill. The committee knows well that for every 1,000 men actually at sea 500 men has been found the quota necessary of those on land and otherwise occupied. I believe in the English Navy as high as 600 out of every 1,000 are not at sea at one time.

The committee is therefore depending upon certain reserve officers and men, and upon others who have seen naval service. I am unwilling, and I know my constituents are unwilling to depend so absolutely upon men not now in the service. What my people want is a treaty Navy 100 per cent equipped in men and every other necessity which goes with an equipped naval force. The taxpayer is vitally interested in the amount of money we appropriate and the effect it has upon his taxation and income, but he is not willing to risk the safety of the country, and the peace not only of his country but of the world by the parsimony established in this bill.

I shall vote in accordance with the recommendation of the minority report, which says, "We recommend as an irreducible minimum that the enlisted personnel of the Navy for the next fiscal year be fixed at 80,000 men and 6,000 apprentices, and that adequate provision be made to maintain the Navy on this basis." This, I believe, will meet every requirement, and give us a fully equipped treaty Navy of men and money, guaranteeing safety and efficiency at all times. If an emergency should occur then it will be time enough for us to depend upon our reserves and upon those who have seen service. We must always remember that the disarmament conference has not prohibited the building of smaller craft such as submarines, and so forth, nor has it prohibited the construction of aircraft which many persons believe will perform a very important if not a decisive part in future wars. I wish to adhere to every feature of our treaties, but to live up to everything allowed us as I am sure the other nations party thereto will do.

Mr. Chairman, I shall vote for the Navy fully equipped, 100 per cent, and not 20 per cent less than is necessary, as provided in this bill for the battleships. [Applause.]

Mr. LAZARO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LINTHICUM. I yield.

Mr. LAZARO. The Secretary of the Navy in his statement to the Committee on Appropriations on March 6, 1922, compared the Arkansas in 1913 and the Arkansas in 1922. In 1914 the number of men on the Arkansas was 984, and in 1922 1,259. That is because of the developments in maritime warfare and the experience gained during the World War. In time of emergency it is estimated that it would require 10 per cent more on this battleship. Where would we go for these 10 per cent more? Would it not be necessary to have a trained force to make good that 10 per cent, and would it not be true that if you had green men on there it would cause confusion and make the battleship inefficient in time of war?

Mr. LINTHICUM. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] said that the bill at present was based upon the number of men now on the battleships, and that that was 20 per cent less than the requisite number. He said they would draw these extra men necessary from the reserve force and from men who had seen sea duty, but I entirely agree with the gentleman from Louisiana that if you bring men from the reserve force and men who have seen sea duty but who have never seen any duty on this ship, they would not fit in in a time of emergency, and that there ought to be trained men working on these vessels, allotted to them.

Mr. LAZARO. In other words, in order to keep up with the battleship as it is being developed, you have to have this trained reserve force on the ship or near the ship constantly, so that these 10 per cent could be added in case of emergency.

Mr. LINTHICUM. If you want efficiency, that is true. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOODRUFF].

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

(During the remarks of Mr. WOODRUFF his time was extended by additional time being granted to him by Mr. KELLEY of Michigan and Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina.)

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Chairman, I am sending to the Clerk's desk a resolution, which I will ask him to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 323.

Resolved, That the Speaker of the House of Representatives be, and he is hereby, directed to appoint from the membership of this House a select committee of 15 members, for the Sixty-seventh Congress, and which said committee is hereby authorized to fully investigate all contracts and expenditures made by the War Department, or under its direction; the Navy Department, or under its direction; and the Alien Property Custodian, or under his direction, during and since the late war with Germany, and the settlement of any of such contracts by any officer or agent or department of the Government, and to investigate the criminal and civil prosecution, or lack of prosecution, of any or all of the claims of the Government arising out of such contracts, or the settlement thereof, by the Attorney General, the Alien Property Custodian, the Secretary of War, or the Secretary of the Navy; and, in addition to the powers herein conferred, shall have the same powers and authority as are now conferred by the rules of this House upon the standing Committee on Expenditures in the War Department; said committee is hereby authorized to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths and affirmations, to take testimony, to sit during the sessions of the House and during any recess which may occur during its sessions, and may meet at such places as said committee deems advisable. Said committee is also hereby authorized and empowered to appoint such subcommittees as it may deem advisable, and such subcommittees, when so appointed, are hereby authorized to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths and take testimony, and to meet at such times and places as said committee shall from time to time direct.

Resolved further, That said select committee shall report to the House, in one or more reports, as it may deem advisable, the result of its investigations, with such recommendations as it may care to make.

Resolved further, That the Speaker of the House is hereby authorized to issue subpœnas to witnesses, upon the request of said committee or any subcommittee thereof, during any recess of Congress during the sessions.

Resolved further, That the Sergeant at Arms of the House be directed to serve all subpœnas and other processes put into his hands by said committee or any subcommittee thereof.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Chairman, I have to-day introduced in the House the resolution which has just been read. I was impelled to introduce this resolution by information which has come to me recently, and which is of such a nature as to require the immediate attention and immediate action of the Congress. This information I propose to give to the House, in part at least, in the time which has just been yielded me by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY].

On March 22, when the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had under consideration the Army appropriation bill, I attempted to secure the adoption of an amendment to the bill which would give to the contract audit section of the office of Chief of Finance of the War Department sufficient funds with which to efficiently and expeditiously audit the 100,000 war contracts. I showed on that day, Mr. Chairman, that the contract audit section, with a personnel of 87, had audited in the year and a half it had been engaged in this work approximately 15,000 of these contracts. I also showed that nearly all of these contracts had been the smaller ordnance contracts, and that there had been only a very few of the larger contracts audited. In spite of the fact that but a few of the larger contracts had received the attention of this department, it was shown that the Government was given the information upon which to base a recovery from the contractors sums totaling approximately $46,000,000. Included in the contracts audited were a few of those of the Air Service.

In the auditing of these contracts it was disclosed that in almost every instance overpayments running into the millions in individual cases had been made by the Government. In addition to the overpayments, it was found in nearly every instance that the contractors had been guilty of acts which clearly called for action by the Department of Justice. Notwithstanding the fact that much of this information has been in the hands of the Department of Justice for months, no determined action looking either to the recovery of the money due the Government or to the criminal prosecution of the offenders has been taken. From time to time it has been intimated by Members of Congress and others that there was to be no real prosecutions of these offenders, Mr. Chairman, but somehow I could not quite believe that. It did not seem possible to me that any man in a high Government position could or would deliberately close his eyes and his ears to the demands of a clear public duty. It did not seem possible to me that any man could so far forget his duty to the whole people of the country under his oath of office as to hesitate for one minute in instituting the proper proceedings to bring to justice those who have been guilty of gross criminal conduct, particularly when this conduct had either directly or indirectly resulted in the loss of life. And I have in mind, Mr. Chairman, our "bird men," and thousands of our men on the firing line in France, who waited and died while waiting for the American fighting and bombing planes which never came.

During the 19 months of war with Germany the Congress expended for Signal Corps and aviation purposes more than $1,000,000,000, and notwithstanding the fact that early in the war our allies sent to this country many experts in aircraft construction to assist in the manufacture of planes, which were then in use by the allied armies, and known to be efficient, not one battle plane and not a single bombing plane of American manufacture, either of American or foreign design, was placed upon the battle front. The hearings of the Frear subcommittee developed the fact that for the great sum mentioned the Aircraft Service produced the following machines used by American aviators on the French fighting front:

[Pp. 178, 179, 180, 185.]

American-built pursuit or combat planes	None
American-built bombing planes	None
American-built observation planes (D. H. 4's)	213
Machines bought from our allies	527
Total planes on French front, November 11, 1918	740

The Hughes investigating committee, as well as the Senate Thomas Committee and the House Graham Committee, all developed facts and leads which clearly indicated that hundreds of men had been guilty of criminal conspiracy in handling these aircraft and other war contracts. As a result of the investigations of the subcommittee handling the cantonment contracts, the House, by a yea-and-nay vote of 299 to 4, requested the Attorney General to institute investigations before grand juries for the purpose of securing the indictment and prosecution of such persons as are guilty of criminal conduct. I believe the statute of limitations, together with the neglect of the Attorney General's Department, has operated to defeat this clearly expressed wish of the House.

The resolution requesting the Attorney General to act in these cases also requested him to institute civil suits for the recovery of Government funds, which have been fraudulently or illegally paid on account of the cantonment contracts. The majority report of the committee which investigated these contracts stated that if the conclusions of the majority members of the committee were correct, the Department of Justice should be able to recover by civil suits sums totaling more than $50,000,000. The statute of limitations does not operate against this class of cases, and yet, although there has been no thorough investigation of these matters by the Department of Justice, Mr. Abraham F. Myers, former office boy, later ordinary law clerk, and now the man in the Attorney General's office through whom all departmental information relative to war fraud cases must be secured, has announced to the men working on these cases that the cantonment cases have been closed.

Intimately connected with the camp and cantonment cases was the sale of surplus lumber, much of which was found upon these projects at the conclusion of the war. In this connection, and as illustrative of the conditions of which I so seriously complain, I wish to call attention to the contract made with Messrs. Phillips & Stephens covering the sale of surplus lumber. Mr. Phillips is the chairman of the Republican State central committee of Georgia. It appears from official data that the transactions under this contract were audited by the contract audit section of the Office of the Chief of Finance, and final report submitted on September 8, 1921, and then transmitted to the Attorney General for appropriate action. This report showed many gross irregularities and that the sum of $1,854,076.04 was wrongfully withheld from the United States. So far as can be ascertained, no proceedings whatsoever, either civil or criminal, have been instituted in this connection. I have a copy of a memorandum under date of March 11, 1922, written by Ernest C. Steward, in charge of the contract audit section. It is as follows:

MARCH 11, 1922.

Memorandum: For Captain Sullivan.
Re: Director of sales contract No. 1, covering the sales of surplus lumber to Messrs. Phillips & Stephens.

It appears to be essential to the public interest to again call the above contract to your attention.

The transactions under this contract were audited by the contract audit section of the office of the chief of finance, and a final report was presented on September 8, 1921, and was transmitted to the Attorney General for such action as might be deemed necessary.

The general facts in connection with the inception and functioning of this sales contract are herewith presented again in the hope that some definite action may be taken, as after the lapse of time which has occurred between the presentation of this audit and the facts incident thereto there has, so far as the writer can inform himself, been no tangible endeavor on the part of the Department of Justice toward preparing this matter for the action of a grand jury.

Shortly after the armistice in November, 1918, a meeting was held in Washington, D. C., of the representatives of the principal lumber corporations of the United States for the ostensible purpose of so regulating the disposal of surplus stocks of lumber then held by the Government as not to disrupt or injure the transactions of the commercial trade. After many conferences it was finally decided by the representatives of the lumber interests to appoint as their agent for dealing with the Government in this transaction Messrs. Phillips & Stephens, with whom the director of sales in the office of the Quartermaster General finally made this contract.

In January, 1919, a request was made of the various bureaus of the War Department to submit an accurate statement of the amount of lumber remaining on hand at all of the various projects and stations for the purpose of ascertaining the total amount to be considered in connection with this contract, and a more or less complete inventory developed the fact that there was approximately 188,000,000 feet of lumber which was not required for the immediate needs of the Government, and upon that basis, as shown in Schedule A of the contract, the agreement in question was made. There is a provision in the contract, however, that prior to the actual sale of the lumber at any project the same might be withdrawn from sale when required for the use of the Government, and acting under this provision the chief of the construction division withdrew from sale nearly 60,000,000 feet of lumber. Much of this lumber that was withdrawn by the construction division was over the violent protest of Messrs. Phillips & Stephens, and your attention is specifically invited to certain correspondence relative to this matter between Gen. R. C. Marshall, jr., chief of the construction division, the director of sales, and the contractor.

It is a well-established fact that this contract in its entirety was drawn up by Messrs. Phillips & Stephens and brought to the director of sales with instructions to sign on the dotted line. It can therefore be readily seen that any and all indefinite provisions in the contract were placed there with the expectation and belief that any further elucidation or definition thereof would be for the benefit of the contractor and not of the Government.

A list of base prices for the four kinds of lumber specifically named in the contract, to wit, spruce, pine, fir, and hemlock, was supposed to have been submitted for the various localities in the United States in which the surplus lumber lay for each month during the life of the contract, and presumably those base prices were to bear some definite relation to commercial prices for similar lumber in the said localities, but the audit of this contract has determined the fact that these base prices were arbitrary and in nearly all instances were widely different from the prices which were current for commercial transactions, all of which was set forth in detail in our audit.

In spite of the fact that the original contract called for the purchase of only the four kinds of lumber before mentioned, there was sold over 30 varieties of lumber, and by questionable agreement between the director of sales and the contractor there was also included many millions of feet of mahogany, cherry, walnut, and other very valuable hardwoods.

In connection with the inclusion of hardwoods under the terms of this contract, the facts as developed by our audit warrant the presumption of gross fraud and collusion between the contractor and Frank T. Sullivan, of Buffalo, N. Y., who was ostensibly the direct purchaser from Phillips & Stephens. In nearly every case where shipping orders were received from the contractor the purchaser named thereon was not the ultimate consignee and the price returned to the Government for the lumber did not in any instance represent the amount received from the ultimate consignee, but was supposed to have been the price received from the purchaser named on Phillips & Stephens's shipping order, who in many cases was believed to be a dummy, and was in reality an agent of Phillips & Stephens, thereby accomplishing their purpose of obtaining a higher price for the lumber than the one which they reported to the Government, less their commission.

It has been demonstrated that where prices have been given for two or more grades of lumber from a certain project that lumber of the highest grade has been sold at the price of the lowest grade, thereby again defrauding the Government.

The audit by our accountant shows:
1. Value of lumber sold, $4,697,171.13.
2. Amount received by United States, $2,843,095.09.
3. Balance due United States, $1,854,076.04.

From the foregoing it will be seen that the Government has been defrauded by Phillips & Stephens and their confederates in large amounts, aggregating $1,854,076.04, and the evidence and official statements on which to base civil and criminal actions were prepared by our accountants and forwarded to the department some eight months ago.

From time to time two representatives of the Department of Justice have called at my office and I have during that period time and again urged upon them the necessity of action and have offered to be of every possible assistance to them or the Department of Justice. If it is the intention of anyone to act in the premises, it is most urgent that immediate action be taken, before the witnesses are scattered and the evidence dissembled and the men who have faithfully and loyally labored to save the Government throw up their hands in disgust.

Although over 15,000 contracts have been investigated and audited by our office, it can be stated beyond argument that the contract in question is one which for criminal ingenuity is surpassed by none. Over 14 months of painstaking and diligent labor were consumed in making this audit and all of the facts contained therein have been explained in detail to representatives of the Department of Justice, and great pains have been taken to follow every development that might show the criminal intent of the contractor, and it is to be regretted that up to this time there has been no tangible action taken.

The writer stands ready at any and all times to assist in every way the prosecution of this case with a view of recovering money wrongfully withheld from the Government, and if possible to punish those who are guilty in this connection, and it is respectfully and earnestly urged that such action may be taken by your office as will attain this end.

ERNEST C. STEWARD,
In Charge Contract Audit Section.

Mr. MANN. To whom was that letter written?

Mr. WOODRUFF. It was written to a superior officer in the office of the Chief of Finance.

On April 12, 1920, when a resolution instructing the Attorney General to—institute investigations before grand juries for the purpose of indicting and prosecuting such persons as are guilty of criminal conduct, and to institute civil suits for the recovery of any Government funds which have been fraudulently or illegally paid * * *—

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] made the following observations:

We started the investigation of these expenditures soon after the Republican Congress met. This was done in answer to a general demand from the people. Why? First, the people have a right to know how the money they are paying in the form of taxation was and is being expended. * * *

Secondly, there is an inherent right in this Government to find the culpable party who takes advantage of his Government in time of war.

If there has been anyone guilty of moral turpitude, taking advantage of the war to profiteer at the expense of this Government, then we have a right not only to point it out but we must prosecute the men who have done it.

People from every section of this country are demanding prosecution. Congress can uncover the facts. It is doing so. The Justice Department must prosecute.

It is generally believed that there will be no prosecutions. That an administration will not find itself guilty. There is a basis for this statement.

In the investigations thus far there was a report from the special commission upon aircraft, appointed by the President in response to the general outcry of the Nation for the actual situation.

That report was made by Justice Hughes, whose commission was confined to finding facts. It made recommendations which were indorsed by the Attorney General of the present (Wilson) administration. The report was sent to the Secretary of War with the recommendation that certain specific men therein named be court-martialed, which recommendation was based on the facts submitted. In spite of the facts and recommendation, the Secretary of War decided it was not a sufficient case to submit for court-martial proceedings, although we had spent $1,055,000,000 for aircraft and had not a single American-built battle plane at the front, and only 196 other American-built planes, and yet we were told there was no ground for court-martial procedure.

This action of the War Department indicates what is to be expected from the administration in the prosecution of such cases. Congress can not go further than make the investigation.

The Department of Justice, which, in the aircraft case, indorsed the Hughes recommendation, must necessarily make the prosecution, when brought under the civil authority. The indictments secured by the Shipping Board's investigation show what can be done. Another reason why we must uncover these irresponsible expenditures is to compel a repayment, wherever it can be shown that funds have been collected under false contracts or where advantage has been taken of the Government. There are numerous cases of this sort already promised.

Still another reason why we must continue to make the investigation is to lay the foundation to cut off the unnecessary and continuing war agencies that still exist. We are bitterly assailed by the country because we have not been able to separate all the thousands of war workers who are still on the pay roll and who are employing every influence to continue on it.

If you do not lay this foundation, we will not succeed in our efforts to get back to normal, and we are subject in Congress to the criticism that we are maintaining these war agencies.

Our business here is not in any way to discredit men nor an administration because they do not happen to be on our side politically, but our business is to know how the money was spent; to let the public know it; to prosecute where there is guilt; to recover where there is fraud; and to lay the foundation to cure the disease that the whole Nation to-day is still suffering from.

What has already been accomplished justifies us in an expectation that more will still be done. That is why I will vote for the rule. Our duty as Congressmen is to get at the facts. It is then up to the Department of Justice to prosecute the guilty parties. Indictments have already been secured in some cases and trials are awaited. If, as in the aircraft cases, the findings of a presidential commission are ignored, the only recourse left us is an appeal to the people, which will not be long deferred.

This was good doctrine and good morals, Mr. Chairman. This is good doctrine to-day; it will be good doctrine as long as civilization exists, whether it comes from a Republican during a Democratic administration or from a Republican during a Republican administration. This is doctrine which will be approved by every man and woman in the country, except, of course, those who illegally or criminally profited as a result of the war.

The resolution was adopted because it was found during the investigation of war-time irregularities that the irregularities and evils complained of still existed.

Two years have elapsed and the purposes of that resolution have been defeated. There has been no cessation of pernicious activities on the part of the small group of aircraft manufacturers whose activities were condemned as late as August, 1918, by the Senate subcommittee headed by Senator Thomas, as being—

Vicious and designed to make large profits by taking advantage of the necessities of the Government.

And as—

Subjecting manufacturers to onerous requirements by its beneficiaries, such as assessments for the use of plans and specifications, the purchase of material and accessories from favored houses, the assignment and surrender of valuable patents and patentable devices to the (manufacturers) aircraft association upon terms prescribed by itself, the discouragement of invention, and the inevitable control of the aircraft industry by that association or by some other interest through its agency * * *.

That conditions have not changed in regard to the prosecution of these war criminals and in regard to the recovery of millions of dollars to the Treasury from the war contractors I propose to show. The following is a letter I have recently received from an agent of the Department of Justice who was assigned the task of clearing up the aircraft cases. It is self-explanatory:

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 8, 1922.

Hon. R. O. WOODRUFF,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Being aware of your military service during the World War and reposing confidence in your Americanism, I am handing to you a memorandum dated March 18, 1922, pertaining to the aircraft investigation which I have officially conducted as an officer of the Department of Justice, and I request that this memorandum be brought to the attention of Congress and that it be made a public document.

I am aware that this request on my part may appear unusual, but I am unwilling to be a party to a perfunctory Government investigation without exhausting every effort to see that the machinery of justice functions. If this is to be a Government "of the people, for the people, and by the people," when the regular and orderly processes of the law have fallen down Congress and the people are entitled to know the facts. During the past few years the disclosures of Government investigations have meant little or nothing, and the time has come when there must be a reform. The real remedy for many of the evils of to-day is the administration of the law with even-handed justice, and, above all, a respect for the law by those in authority. As matters now stand the weak feel the hand of the law while powerful interests are protected and go unscathed. The tendency has been for those who administer the law to make influential and powerful offenders immune from punishment, and this condition must be remedied.

On October 4, 1921, I began an official investigation of the Air Service, continuing the investigation which was begun by the Hon. Charles E. Hughes. By the close of the year many important cases were being developed and the audits by Government accountants began to involve men of high position in the present and past administration, men in high financial circles, and certain concerns represented by law firms wielding powerful influence. Since January 4, 1922, the aircraft investigation has been to a large extent completely blocked. The investigation has been interfered with by high officials of the Government, sworn to uphold the law, and the due administration of justice has been hindered, delayed, and obstructed. All of these matters are covered in reports filed by me in the Department of Justice dated, respectively, February 6, 1922, February 24, 1922, and in the memorandum of March 18, 1922, which I am now handing to you, after having failed to bring about proper remedies through the authorities directly responsible.

Bringing these matters to the attention of Congress has not been without due warning and prolonged opportunities for reform. In an official report filed in the Department of Justice on December 6, 1921, attention was called to interferences with the investigation, as follows:

"I recommend that the higher officials of the Government be informed that these aircraft cases are heavily loaded with potential scandals which may be made public at any time, and that the importunities of these men, if listened to, may result in serious embarrassment to the administration. These men have been largely responsible in bringing discredit on the previous administration, and any leniency shown them now, as the cases against them are completed, will not restore the confidence of the people in the Government, which confidence has been well-nigh lost. A large number of these cases are coming up, and a firm stand now will avoid difficulties for the administration which otherwise will be sure to follow."

In my memorandum of February 24, 1922, I requested that my reports be placed in the hands of the Attorney General and that they be transmitted to the President. The Government's interests are suffering in these matters, and interferences with the investigation will no longer be tolerated. However, I can not be justly charged with failing to exhaust every effort to obtain corrections before submitting the matter to Congress and to the people.

The investigation and reports of Government audits show overpayments by the Government on aircraft contracts in enormous amounts. In no case has suit been brought. According to the reports filed by Government accountants to date, the following is a list of overpayments made to several of the aircraft contractors:

Wright-Martin Aircraft Corporation	$5,267,476.75
Lincoln Motor Co. (amount ascertained at time of last report, $5,794,135.15), report of completed audit	9,188,561.98
American Electro Products Co	2,057,261.72
Dayton Wright Co	2,554,383.27

The contract audit section of the War Department has filed its report in the case of the Standard Aircraft Corporation and the Standard Aero Co., controlled by Mitsui & Co., Japanese bankers, showing overpayments as follows:

Total payments by the Government	$16,461,680.15
Amounts unsupported by property records or other papers	9,948,028.42
In case supporting papers are produced there would remain the following amounts to be recovered from the contractors for reasons stated in the individual audits	6,586,774.61

In the sale of surplus lumber to Phillips & Stephens, the Contract Audit Section of the War Department reported this concern to be indebted to the Government in the sum of $1,854,076.04. The case has been in the hands of the Department of Justice many months and no suit has been instituted to recover this money. In spite of the fact that the contract called for the purchase of only four kinds of lumber (spruce, pine, fir, and hemlock) there was delivered to these people, according to the report of the audit, over 30 varieties of lumber, including many millions of feet of mahogany, cherry, walnut, and other valuable hardwoods.

The attention of Congress is directed to the following action of Hon. John W. Weeks, Secretary of War:

(1) On October 26, 1921, the case of the Wright-Martin Aircraft Corporation, with a report of audit by Government accountants setting out overpayments in a large amount was transmitted by the War Department, through regular channels, to the Attorney General, with the request that he institute such action as he deemed necessary to protect the interest of the Government. The case was placed in the hands of the United States attorney in New York for the necessary action in the premises. Later, through the activities of Mr. Charles Hayden, of Hayden, Stone & Co., a director of the Wright-Martin Aircraft Corporation, the Secretary of War attempted to delay action in the case, as will be seen from a memorandum from the Hon. J. M. Wainwright, Assistant Secretary of War, dated November 21, 1921 (Exhibit A), hereto attached, who informed the Secretary of War that the case was beyond the jurisdiction of the War Department. Later, at the request of the Secretary of War, the case was withdrawn from the hands of the United States attorney, further hearings were given and no suit has been brought, although every hearing in the War Department and in the Department of Justice was decided in favor of the justness of the Government's claims.

(2) In the case of the American Bosch Magneto Co., information was received that certain records with which the investigation was concerned were about to be removed. The case was immediately placed in the hands of a grand jury for a complete investigation. Again, the Secretary of War interceded with the Department of Justice in behalf of persons under investigation in this matter.

(3) While the matter is not connected with the aircraft investigation, I feel it my duty to report that the circumstances under which Carden & Herd obtained a large payment in connection with the purchase of certain Austrian ships, through the activities of the Secretary of War, ought to be thoroughly investigated.

In all of the aircraft cases developed, only two of these cases were placed in the hands of the United States attorneys for action, to wit: The cases of the Wright-Martin Aircraft Corporation and the Lincoln Motor Co. Both of these cases were withdrawn from the hands of the United States attorneys, not on the initiative of any person connected with the Department of Justice, but because of influence exerted by parties outside of the Department of Justice.

The conditions under which the Department of Justice is handicapped are of long standing. On April 6, 1922, as a protest against these conditions, I voluntarily tendered my resignation. After tendering my resignation I was asked if I would accept other employment in this department, which I refused. The only alternatives are to tolerate these conditions or expose them. The American Government shall function, and the matter is of sufficient importance to call it to the attention of Congress.

Respectfully,

H. L. SCAIFE.

EXHIBIT A.

NOVEMBER 21, 1921.

Memorandum for the Secretary of War.

With reference to attached letter from Mr. Charles Hayden in connection with the final settlement of the Wright-Martin Aircraft Corporation's contracts 2250 and its supplements 2250–1, 2250–2, 2250–3, 2250–4, 2250–5, 2250–6, and 2250–7 for the manufacture of 5,798 Hispano-Suiza motors and spare parts, involving the expenditure of $36,101,752.08, will state that these contracts were given a complete audit by accountants of the Air Service under the terms of contract 2250 and supplements. Claim was then placed before the Air Service section, War Department Claims Board, for action. The contractor was given every opportunity to appear before that section on June 24, 25, 26, and 27, 1921, gave oral testimony in support of their claim, and a further hearing was granted on August 18, 1921, whereon the contractor submitted further oral testimony and placed in evidence a great many exhibits. The audit and investigation of these contracts covered a period of about two years.

Under date of October 14, 1921, the contractor requested an appeal. The request was brought to my personal attention. In view of the extensive investigations, covering a period of two years, I felt that nothing more could be gained by administrative action. The contractor and the Government were wide apart in their conclusions to the contractor's liability. Under such circumstances it seemed to me that only a court which possessed full powers to render a final decision and enforce it can satisfactorily cope with such a situation. For this reason I directed the vice chairman, War Department Claims Board, to deny the appeal. This action was taken. It may be remarked that this matter is quite similar to that of the Dayton Wright Airplane Co., in which the conclusion was reached by the Air Service section, War Department Claims Board, that instead of the Government being indebted to the claimant, the claimant was indebted to the Government in the sum of $2,550,000. In that case, by my direction, the record was transmitted to the Department of Justice, requesting that action be taken to protect the Government's interests. I am advised that suit is about to be instituted in the Government's behalf.

On October 26, 1921, the file in the case of the Wright-Martin Aircraft Corporation was forwarded to the Department of Justice, requesting that litigation be instituted to protect the interests of the United States. The Attorney General advises me that the papers have been referred to the United States attorney, New York City, for action. Officials of the Air Service will probably proceed to New York City in a few days to advise the United States attorney in this matter.

It will be noted that the case is now in the hands of the Department of Justice, which is engaged in the necessary investigation to determine the course of litigation. In view of this state of affairs the case has passed beyond the control and jurisdiction of the War Department.

I feel very strongly that the viewpoint of the contractor having been presented to the Air Service section by its principal officials and by its counsel at a number of meetings and in many papers, that the contractor's viewpoint is thoroughly understood by the Government.

J. M. WAINWRIGHT,
The Assistant Secretary of War.

I now come to the memorandum.

Mr. MANN. Whose memorandum is it?

Mr. WOODRUFF. It is the memorandum of a man appointed officially by the Government to investigate these aircraft cases:

MARCH 18, 1922.

Memorandum for Col. Guy D. Goff, Acting Attorney General.
In re: The aircraft investigation.

1. For an understanding of the inquiries which finally culminated in the present investigation of the Air Service by the Department of Justice, it should be stated that soon after the Government undertook the production of aircraft for the announced purpose of "winning the war in the air" complaints were made that the Government's interests were suffering from disloyalty, dishonesty, and graft, and the prediction was made by persons in a position to know that the undertaking would result in enormous expenditures and a failure in the program to produce a fleet of "25,000 airplanes which would be decisive of the war months before an effective army could be put in Europe."

2. Among the first to publicly call attention to the necessity of immedite remedies to forestall impending disaster in the undertaking was Gutzon Borglum. Through the activities of Mr. Borglum the Senate took official cognizance of the matter, and finally there were several hearings in which some 25,000 pages of testimony were taken. The findings in the principal investigations of the Air Service are set out in the reports of the Senate committee (Rept. No. 555, Sixty-fifth Congress, second session), the subcommittee of the House, known as the Frear committee (Rept. No. 637, Sixty-sixth Congress, second session), and the report of Hon. Charles E. Hughes to the President, dated October 25, 1918.

3. Collectively these reports show the failure of aircraft production, wholesale graft and malversion, reprehensible official misconduct, and the squandering of enormous sums of money without the production of a fighting plane, all of which was carried out on such a scale as to jeopardize the success of our armies and the cause of our Nation and its allies. The Senate investigation and the investigation of Judge Hughes took place during the war and the House investigation began soon after the war. All of these reports stressed the fact that the true state of affairs had not been fully developed and the reports of the House and that of Judge Hughes urged further investigation.

4. The findings in these investigations and the recommendations by Judge Hughes that Col. Edward A. Deeds be court-martialed and that others be prosecuted resulted in official protection and exoneration and in no activities on the part of the Government to follow up the investigations or bring to justice those who had been found amenable to prosecution. An historical sketch and a résumé of those investigations is unnecessary, as the more important facts, disclosures, and findings were briefed by me in an article prepared for historical purposes in which the records are cited and which has since been filed in the Department of Justice as an official document (Current History Magazine, April, 1921; CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, March 12, 1921, volume 61, page 1352).

5. Unfortunately the disclosures in regard to the Air Service became a political matter and numerous Government officials, Army officers, and several Members of Congress are on record as having defended the conditions which were disclosed. Widespread propaganda in defense of the Air Service has been definitely traced to persons having relations with interests which have been criticized in the official investigations. The subject finally came into issue in the last presidential campaign, when, on September 23, 1920, Mr. Harding committed himself in writing with the following pledge:

"Certainly the investigations should go on, but it should go on when our party is in power and in position to command the presentation of a testimony which will establish our contention. Until that time I bespeak your patience."

6. Under these unusual circumstances, on October 4, 1921, I was employed by the Department of Justice and charged with the duty of conducting an investigation of the Air Service, being first assured that my work would be unhampered and my directions personally given by both Mr. William J. Burns and yourself, was to find the guilty, no matter who the guilty might prove to be.

7. In my memorandum of October 12, 1921, I submitted plans for the investigation which received your approval, and in compliance therewith this investigation has been conducted, as far as it was possible for me to conduct it, strictly in accord with the recommendations of Hon. Charles E. Hughes, who, in the concluding paragraph of his report to the President, indicated how the work should be coordinated, to wit:

"6. Permit me also to suggest that a special division or subdivision of the present Bureau of Investigation in the Department of Justice should be assigned to the consideration of suggested delinquencies in connection with aircraft production so that the work already done may be appropriately followed up."

8. Upon undertaking the work it was ascertained that there were no funds available in the Department of Justice to employ accountants and an adequate corps of assistants. It was therefore arranged with the Chief of Finance Control of the Air Service to enlarge its organization out of appropriations available until a force of some 50 accountants were at work on the necessary audits in close touch with and in cooperation with the Department of Justice. In addition to this, assistance has also been rendered by the contract audit section of the War Department. In fact, the entire force furnished me by the Department of Justice has consisted of a secretary and one assistant. The estimated total cost of this investigation to the Department of Justice from October 4, 1921, to March 1, 1922, is $1,961.92.

9. While I am charged with no duties outside of the investigation of the Air Service, attention should be called to the fact that the entire War Fraud Bureau is deserving of severe criticism for the financial arrangements under which it is forced to operate. Here we find inexperienced men, with no ratings or very poor ratings, as attorneys drawing salaries up to $5,000 per year, while other men working in the bureau and who are really doing the work are on the pay roll at $7 per day. The employment of incompetent men at high salaries, and starvation wages to those who must be depended upon if results are to be accomplished, does not make for efficiency. There is no semblance of adjustment between the salaries of the few patriotic men who are struggling to serve the Government on salaries of $7 per day and the salaries paid to inefficients and the emoluments of attorneys who handle the cases after they have been prepared. It is recommended that these inequities in salaries be adjusted and that only competent men be permitted to handle the war fraud cases. It should also be stated that in very responsible positions in the war graft bureau are a number of young men who obtained exemption from the draft, and it is needless to say that young men who were unable to respond to the call to arms in a national crisis can hardly be considered eligible to assignment in the investigation of war crimes. It is recommended that no person who was within the draft age and was not connected with the military service be allowed to take part in the investigation of war frauds.

10. In the aircraft investigation a large number of cases are being carefully examined, both as to civil liability and criminal acts. Although the handicaps prevent the work being dignified by the name of a Government investigation, some tangible results can now be reported. According to the reports filed by the auditors to date, the following is a list of overpayments made by the Government to several of the contractors, which cases are prepared and are now ready for the necessary action to protect the Government's interest:

Wright-Martin Aircraft Corporation	$5,267,476.75
Lincoln Motor Co. (other sums yet to be added before final balance is stated)	5,794,135.15
American Electro Products Co	2,057,261.72
Dayton Wright Co	2,554,383.27
Total	15,673,256.89

11. I have been informed by an officer of the Treasury Department that there is approximately $1,000,000,000 charged against disbursing officers of the War Department for which it was impossible to obtain accountings that would be accepted by the Comptroller of the Treasury, and I am attempting to ascertain what amounts have been misappropriated from the funds disbursed by the Air Service. There have been payments made running into millions of dollars to a single contractor with no supporting voucher whatever, and under these conditions the door has been wide open for every variety of graft and fraud. On these contracts men have boldly and openly robbed the Government, and when they had emptied the till they have endeavored by political influence and bold propaganda of the most insidious character to prevent an investigation which would lay bare their misdeeds and dishonesty.

12. While the audits of only five of the large aircraft contracts have been completed, the estimated overpayments, based on examinations of accounts which are not yet complete, indicate that the Government has been the victim of wholesale and systematic frauds perpetrated by a small group of contractors who, through political influence, obtained the control of aircraft production to the exclusion of experienced concerns who were brushed aside when this raid on the Public Treasury began. It might be stated that recently, when publicity was given to the activities of the Department of Justice in these matters, one of the concerns which was on the list compiled for investigation, after having the money for three years, voluntarily tendered to the Government its check in a large amount to cover the overpayments it had received and before an actual investigation of its accounts was begun by this department.

13. The audits being made involve cost-plus contracts where the contractors assumed no financial risks, and in most all instances, aside from the legitimate profits, the undertakings were financed by the Government and sufficient salaries paid to the officers of these companies to warrant efficient and honest management. The relationship these contractors bore to the Government was one of trust, and they were bound by good morals and the law to protect the Government against imposition and fraud. The contracts provided that things charged to the Government were to be at the best prices obtainable. Aside from the corruption and graft and the legitimate profits and salaries paid, these men operating behind the firing line owed a peculiar duty to the country and to the men who were laying down their lives when the same paymaster was allowing them $30 per month. It may be said that so far as my investigation has disclosed, most of the contractors have no stain against their records, and that the men who thus betrayed their country belonged to a relatively small group. Had the war been planned and carried on for their special benefit their personal gain could hardly have been greater.

14. In the audits involving the enormous amounts which are being disclosed, there will be items concerning which there may be honest differences of opinion and as to the correctness of the charge in such cases only the courts can determine. These cost-plus contracts in time of war were something new, and there are no legal precedents for guidance. However, in the main the contractors were paid these enormous amounts because of the inefficiency, unfaithfulness, or actual dishonesty of Government officials who permitted the unconscionable payments.

15. In several cases investigations begun in the Air Service developed leads running into other branches of the Government, and in each instance these matters have been developed sufficiently far to get an outline of the case and place the facts in the hands of the proper officials. To indicate the scope of the investigation, the character of the disclosures and the results that are already accomplished, several of the more important cases will be summarized with a very brief statement:

I. WRIGHT-MARTIN AIRCRAFT CORPORATION.

The report of the audit of the contracts of the Wright-Martin Aircraft Corporation shows overpayments by the Government in the amount of $5,267,476.75. It was found that the minutes of this company, at the time it was negotiating for a Government contract, stated that an "8 per cent profit was a proper profit to the company on Government contracts." The report of the Government audit states that the profits actually charged and collected amounted to 270 per cent. Illustrative of numerous items disallowed by the auditors were the following:

Accountants' fees (prices ranging from $10 to $60 per day, and $5 per day expenses for work which was of no concern to the Government)	$101,047.23
Fees for attending executive committee meetings (an examination of the minute books disclosed that officers had made charges for attending meetings when the company's records showed their absence)	4,294.96
Capital stock tax	14,864.97
Salaries, employees compiling income-tax data	922.33
Cigars	995.29
Dinners	848.78
Expenses of company's Washington office for August, 1918:
Meals	262.96
Laundry	46.12
Tips	27.45
Box of La Corona cigars for Mr. G. H. Houston	3.25

The audit disclosed the fact that this company maintained a secret-service organization under the guise of a plant protection force, which it was in no way authorized to do, although the company collected therefor $91,925.60. Notwithstanding the fact that the Government had its own plant protection organization which took care of the company's plant, at one time the names of 195 men were carried on the pay roll of the corporation in this connection. Five secret-service men were taken from the Treasury Department and the following schedule will show what the Government paid them while working in the Treasury Department and what the Government paid for the same men after they transferred their services to the Wright-Martin Aircraft Corporation:

Name.	Yearly salary in Government employ.	Yearly salary in contractor's employ.	Retainer.	Penalty for cancellation.
J. W. Wheatley	$4,220	$12,000	$10,000	$25,000
N. G. Van Doren	3,600	6,000	.....	5,000
P. J. Sullivan	3,600	5,000	.....	5,000
E. J. Lewis	3,600	5,000	.....	1,500
E. S. Kyte	2,520	5,000	.....	1,500

The penalty for cancellation was eventually reduced. Wheatley compromised his claim for canceling his contract with the Treasury Department for $17,500, which with his salary of $12,000 and his retainer of $10,000 netted him $39,500 for one year's work. It is understood that after the Government's contract with the Wright-Martin Aircraft Corporation was terminated, Wheatley continued in the employ of that company, but at a salary of $5,000 per annum. The function of this secret service organization seems to have consisted to a large extent of counterespionage against the Government and keeping the company informed as to the Government's business.

After the Government's contract was terminated, the contractor proceeded to buy back from the Government certain property, as evidenced by public vouchers Nos. 5947 and 5957. Public voucher No. 5947 covered the sale of semifinished tools and work in process, involving material which cost the Government $792,865.03, and for which the Wright-Martin Aircraft Corporation paid the Government $24,379.37. Public voucher No. 5957 covered the sale of special tools and patterns which cost the Government over $1,000,000. This property was bought from the Government by the Wright-Martin Aircraft Corporation for $10,642.64. In these transactions George H. Houston and J. H. Anderson acted for the company, and, on behalf of the Government, these vouchers were approved by Charles T. Menoher, James A. Mars, C. G. Hall, O. Westover, Horace M. Benstead, and Bert Winters. In the last transaction it is true that the special tools and patterns related to articles on which the contractor owned patent rights, and that this property was worthless to anyone else except for the value of the material, but it is stated by the auditors that had the company bought them in any other way than from the Government they would have cost the contractor a sum in excess of $1,000,000, and since the contractor acquired title they have continued to use them in its usual course of business and in connection with the later contracts which it has had with the Government.

During the conference between the contractor and Government officials in efforts to procure a settlement of the money due the Government the attorneys for the Wright-Martin Aircraft Corporation have disclaimed responsibility for the change of the contract from a fixed-price contract to a cost-plus basis, and have attempted to show that this was done at the instance of the Government. The facts are that the contractor took advantage of the Government's necessities and forced it into a cost-plus contract. In complete refutation of such contentions it was disclosed that these attorneys collected large fees which were paid by the Government, and among the items they collected money from the Government for, through the Wright-Martin Aircraft Corporation, was for services in getting the contract changed from a fixed-price contract to a cost-plus basis. The law firm of Chadbourne, Babbitt & Wallace collected $23 per hour, the records show, when on the company's business, and the following items are taken from accounts which were paid in the settlement of their charges by the Government. (Report of audit, pp. 46 and 47.)

July 25. Mr. Wallace in Washington on above matter. Mr. Chadbourne went to see Potter, of Aircraft Production, to get him to give up insistence that 150–180 HP contract must be flat price, and he succeeded. This negotiation was of vital importance to the company, and company officers had not been able to bring it about; 21 hours.

July 31. Mr. Wallace left for Washington 11 a. m. on United States contracts. Conference there with Colonel Downey, Lieutenant Schnacke, Messrs. Houston and Hoyt on 1867 D Pierce-Arrow sublicense and new cost-plus 2250–5; also with Mr. Hoyt on Levering & Carrigues testing building contract, and in evening on 1867 D and $7,000,000 war credits loan. The 2250–5 was changed from a flat price to cost-plus as a result of Mr. Chadbourne's negotiations with Potter; 21 hours.

How Mr. Wallace could leave New York for Washington at 11 a. m. and put in 21 hours of work that day, and how these attorneys can contend that the Government was responsible for changing these contracts from a fixed price to a cost-plus basis, are matters which they should be called upon to explain before the grievance committee of their bar association. It should be noted that Mr. Thomas L. Chadbourne, one of these attorneys, was and is a director of the Wright-Martin Aircraft Corporation. Disbarment proceedings against Mr. Chadbourne are now pending in New York in connection with matters where the Government and the Wright-Martin Aircraft Corporation were not his clients. These men, while the beneficiaries of Government fees, have stood by and permitted the Government to be defrauded, if not actually participating in the frauds, and it would be proper for the Bar Association of New York to consider the action of these men in this behalf, and it is recommended that the facts be given to the grievance committee now investigating Mr. Chadbourne's professional conduct. It is also proper to point out the great influence which men can obtain by being large contributors to political funds, Mr. Chadbourne being reputed to have been one of the largest contributors to the political party in power when these outrages were perpetrated on the Government. During the last campaign he was facetiously referred to, because of his activities in these particulars, as one of "Gold Dust Twins."

2. DAYTON WRIGHT CO.

The audit discloses that the Dayton Wright Co. has been overpaid $2,554,383.27. This company was one of those of which Col. Edward A. Deeds, formerly the head of the Bureau of Aircraft Production, was an incorporator. The acts and doings of Mr. Deeds were quite fully reviewed in the report of Judge Hughes, who reported him guilty of reprehensible conduct and recommended that he be court-martialed. Before taking charge of the Bureau of Aircraft Production Mr. Deeds had been convicted before a jury on an indictment including counts of bribery and corruption, after which the case was returned to the lower court for retrial and the matter dropped. The evils of corrupt politics and large political contributions and later some financial disaster of the Government present themselves so frequently in this investigation that they can not be ignored. There is testimony of record by various witnesses that prior to the time Mr. Deeds was placed in charge of aircraft production he and his associates had made political contributions in Ohio to the extent of $37,000, and that on the day after he received his commission a personal note of Governor Cox, of Ohio, for $5,000 was discounted, and that it was later paid by the Dayton Metal Products Co. (Hearings pursuant to S. Res. 357, 66th Cong., 2d sess, pp. 2709–2829.) I have not had an opportunity to critically investigate the audit of the Dayton Wright Co. for evidence of fraud, which feature, under all of the circumstances, deserves to be carefully considered. The audit and all papers in this case have been placed in the hands of a special attorney and are having his consideration.

3. AMERICAN ELECTRO PRODUCTS CO.

The American Electro Products Co. is a Canadian concern, and the contract provided for the erection of a plant at Shawinigan Falls, Canada, for the production of glacial acetic acid, the loan of $1,750,000 by the United States Government, the plant to remain the property of the contractor at all times. On December 22, 1920, the Hon. Newton D. Baker, Secretary of War, requested an opinion of the Attorney General as to the validity of the contract and stated, among other things:

"In the opinion of the Judge Advocate General the foregoing provisions as to obligations upon the part of the Government are so wasteful and extravagant and, in view of the location of the plant in a foreign country, so inimical to the interests of the Government as to be beyond the power of any agent of the Government to incorporate them in a binding contract. Herewith is transmitted a copy of such opinion, together with all pertinent papers."

On April 20, 1921, Hon. J. M. Wainwright, Assistant Secretary of War, communicated with the Attorney General, requesting that such litigation be instituted as deemed advisable to protect the Government's interests. Among other things, the communication stated:

"I consider the terms of the contract as unconscionable and that suit should be instituted to recover from the company the sum of $1,750,000 loaned by the Government, plus unpaid interest from February 28, 1918."

It will be seen that this case has been in the Department of Justice for about a year, but so far no action has been taken in the matter.

4. AMERICAN BOSCH MAGNETO CO.

This investigation began with an aircraft contract, but shortly disclosures were made involving the administration of the office of the Alien Property Custodian, who seized the property of the Bosch Magneto Co. on May 1, 1918. Subsequent to the armistice, on December 31, 1918, the stock of the Bosch Magneto Co. was sold by the Alien Property Custodian to Martin E. Kern for $4,150,000. On January 17, 1919, the assets and liabilities of the Bosch Magneto Co. were sold by Martin E. Kern to the American Bosch Magneto Co., a corporation organized on that date under the laws of the State of New York. The report of the auditor who has investigated this matter stated—

"That the business was a profitable one is revealed by the fact that from the small capital investment of $25,000 in 1906 its books showed on April 30, 1918, after deduction for dividends, taxes, and other similar charges, a combined capital and surplus of $8,492,457.61. Furthermore, for a period of seven years preceding April 30, 1918, its net income averaged approximately $110,000 per month.

* * * * * * *

"Exhibit A, Schedule 3, or balance sheet of the Bosch Magneto Co. as of December 31, 1918, prior to taking over the company by the American Bosch Magneto Corporation, is the last balance sheet of the company while under the régime of the Alien Property Custodian. It will be noted that the capital and surplus which on April 30, 1918, was $8,492,457.61, now appears as $5,856,091.93, a net decrease of $2,636,365.68. As this was during the period of the sale of the company to Martin E. Kern for $4,150,000, one would naturally infer that the assets were deliberately written down so as to cause the net worth of the company to appear approximately near the sales price. The details of this decrease are shown in Exhibit A, Schedule 5."

An examination of the report of William J. Barry, C. S. A., and schedules attached to his report will indicate manipulations and the juggling of the books of this concern. The investigation disclosed that Martin E. Kern was a former convict and had served terms of imprisonment on several charges, and that it now appears that he himself was a citizen of Germany. When the disclosures became public Kern immediately left the country. The proposition was underwritten by Hornblower & Weeks, and Exhibit B, which is the statement of loss, is hereto attached.

During the progress of the investigation it became known that important records in the case were about to be removed, and Hon. John W. Crim, Assistant Attorney General, promptly took the necessary steps to protect the Government's interests and to place the matter before a Federal grand jury. Efficient cooperation, with the prompt, able, and conscientious efforts of Mr. Crim in all matters which concern the Government's interests, is hoped for.

JAPANESE INTERESTS.

Standard Aircraft Corporation.
Standard Aero Co.
Mitsui & Co.

The Standard Aircraft Corporation and the Standard Aero Co. are enterprises of Mitsui & Co., Japanese bankers and the fiscal agents of the Japanese Government. During the period of the war the Standard companies were prominent members of the group of contractors which controlled American aviation. There has been much corroboration of the following testimony taken in the investigation of aircraft production by the Senate Committee on Military Affairs (pp. 339–346, 468).

"Senator FRELINGHUYSEN. What relation does the Mitsui Co. bear to the Japanese Government?

"Mr. WORKMAN. They are paymasters for the Japanese Government throughout the world, its financial agents, and they were also assisting the German secret-service work before the war, acting as paymasters for them."

Judge Hughes was correct in his statement to the President that these Japanese concerns received orders for almost every variety of airplane work, "a proceeding which had no justification from a production standpoint." The concerns were operated by Harry B. Mingle and Max J. Finklestein. While it has been established that these companies were controlled by Mitsui & Co., who owned the majority of the stock, Mingle testified before the Senate committee that Mitsui & Co. loaned him $3,500,000 to carry on the undertakings and that "all they have is a memorandum that in case I should die or anything should happen they could handle it in any way they wished." It was testified that Mingle made weekly report to the Japanese owners, and we have documentary evidence to show that early in the war the Standard Aircraft Corporation shipped five motors from San Francisco to Japan. The impropriety of such a situation needs no comment. This investigation has established the fact that agents of the Japanese Government are constantly collecting information of the most intimate character as to the industries, resources, harbors, and other information of a vital character concerning this country, and that these agents work through Mitsui & Co. Full particulars as to our information in this respect will not be reported in this memorandum.

A report by the contract audit section of the War Department shows the following as a result of its audit of the contracts of the Standard Aircraft Corporation and the Standard Aero Co.:

Total payments by the Government	$16,461,680.15
Amounts unsupported by property records or other papers	9,948,028.42
In case supporting papers are produced there would remain the following amounts to be recovered from contractors for reasons stated in individual audits	6,586,774.61

The statement showing settlement as of September 30, 1919, and known as Exhibit A, shows the following:

AMORTIZATION AND DEPRECIATION.

Total amortization on buildings, machinery, and equipment per Exhibit F, $2,266,479.35.

The comparative balance sheet after Government adjustments as of September 30, 1919, shows the following:

Assets:
Quick: Payments to Mitsui & Co	$4,770,000.00
Other payments and reserves set up for Mitsui & Co.:
Prepaid expenses—rents	370,499.92

The investigation has developed the fact that the Standard companies have never owned these buildings, and as the contractor has collected for both amortization and rent on the buildings, the fraud on the Government is apparent at a glance, and a searching investigation of all of the activities of these companies must be completed.

Subsequent to these statements Mingle is alleged to have paid to Mitsui & Co. other sums in excess of $2,000,000. Although largely indebted to the Government, the Standard Aero Co. is now in the hands of a trustee in bankruptcy and the Standard Aircraft Corporation is in the process of liquidation.

Mitsui & Co. are indirectly exercising powerful influence in this country which extends to Congress and departments of the Government, and they have on their pay rolls attorneys and politicians who are attempting to run roughshod over this country to whom they owe their first allegiance.

When an investigation of the Standard contracts began, the law firm of Cadwaledar, Wickersham & Taft notified the Chief of Finance of the Air Service that they had been retained by Mitsui & Co. (Ltd.) to represent their interests, and requested that certain accountants who had been in the employ of these interests be permitted "to work with the Government's representatives during the audit of the books of the Standard Aircraft Corporation." Their request was refused unless Mitsui & Co. would admit its liability in the premises.

In a few days after this letter was written, Abraham F. Myers, formerly an office boy in the Department of Justice, who had already received unusual advancement after becoming a law clerk in the department, was given general supervision of all of the war-fraud cases at a salary of $6,000 per year. Shortly thereafter this young man, who, it seems, was one of those who failed to do military service during the war, notified the Air Service that no further information was to be given to any person connected with the Department of Justice except through him. A few days later I established by conclusive evidence that the said Myers was placed in this key position through the influence of George W. Wickersham. Since that time the investigation of the Air Service has been blocked.

GLENN L. MARTIN CO.

In connection with another case, the Glenn L. Martin Co., it became necessary for me to procure an Air Service audit made at McCook Field, which was being suppressed. In this case I learned that the Glenn L. Martin Co. had made a profit of about $400,000 on a recent contract, involving approximately $1,180,000, and that the Glenn L. Martin Co. had been paid $59,000 for the same airship which another contractor was building for $18,900 each. It was also learned that the Glenn L. Martin Co. had kept its books in code, and that it was alleged to have defrauded the Government in the matter of its income taxes. Notwithstanding the arrangements which I have perfected and had operating with the War Department for cooperation when the Department of Justice announced that it had no funds, Mr. Myers sent for an officer of the Air Service and directed him that no further information should be given to persons connected with the Department of Justice except through him. On January 4, 1922, I received a memorandum from Mr. Myers informing me that the contract contained a clause that the cost records would be available for the information of the "contracting officer," and I was further informed by him that the "Martin Co. and Chief of Air Service both construe this provision to mean that as to all others, including other branches and officers of the Government, the records are to be treated as confidential." There has come into my possession an official copy of a letter written by Maj. Thurman H. Bane, the commanding officer at McCook Field, dated November 26, 1921, to Gen. M. Patrick, saying: "This just to let you know that the Department of Justice is actually operating."

OBSTRUCTIONS.

Aside from the aggressive and open obstructions by Mr. Myers, I have reported to you fully in my memorandum of February 24, 1922, the name of a high Government official who is deeply involved, and has been sufficiently powerful to seriously impede further investigation. Just at the time when we were closing in on these crooks and were in a position to close up the main features of the investigation, my only assistant, who was rendering a most valuable service in connection with the Bosch Magneto Co., Spruce Production contracts, Japanese activities, and other matters, was suspended and for which, notwithstanding persistent inquiry, no reasons have ever been given. In another case indirectly connected with the aircraft investigation, an agent of the Department of Justice a few days ago filed with his report a check which he alleged had been offered to him as a bribe. The next day this agent was discharged.

CONCLUSION.

On February 15, 1922, I handed to you a comprehensive report of the cases in which my investigation has resulted in tangible developments and with it a large amount of documentary evidence to support my findings. Numerous cases of great importance, not mentioned in the memorandum I am now writing, are discussed in that report at length. Among these cases was documentary evidence which showed that a part of the $100,000,000 fund, which was voted by Congress to relieve starvation in Europe, was employed to finance a counter revolution in Russia, and I exhibited to you the bill of lading showing army trucks and supplies which were delivered to the Northwest Russian Army. I also exhibited a cablegram signed by an official of the American Relief Administration, referring to the captain of the Shipping Board vessel who delivered these goods, and was decorated by the commander of the Northwest Russian Army for arriving in time for the offensive against Petrograd, stating "Retained in command General Wahl thinks unsafe for him to return London to give evidence." Two days later this same official sent through Government channels a second cablegram containing numerous charges against this captain which resulted in his dismissal, all of which charges were later officially pronounced by a Government investigation to be false. The report lays bare intrigues connected with the Air Service and running out into other branches of the Government, backed up by indisputable documentary evidence which would shock the Nation. Half of the time spent during this investigation has been in efforts to overcome obstructions and fighting to get a chance to fight. Unless the corruption which infests this Government is checked, it is a serious question as to how long it can survive. The Government is being overthrown, not by bolshevists, but by crooked politicians and trusted officials who know what is going on and have not the courage to fight or expose the conditions. So far as the Department of Justice is concerned, it no longer functions except in the capacity of first aid to crooks.

It would be wrong to officially file this communication without stating that you and Mr. Burns are not responsible. Your hands are tied the same as mine. I have never observed more faithful, efficient, and zealous officials than Mr. Crim and Mr. Burns, but insidious interests are so firmly intrenched that honest efforts are circumscribed by seemingly impassable barriers. On February 24, 1922, I fully reported the situation to you, mentioning the names and evidence to connect high Government officials with these obstructions and I requested that you call that memorandum and my report of February 6, 1922, to the attention of the President.

It is no longer a question of fidelity to party. Both political parties are corrupt, and both are controlled by the same interests. The situation is one of serious concern. When the law ceases to function for any cause, just so far the Government is overthrown. After endeavoring for months to get the obstructions to my investigation removed, and without success, I have determined to submit this memorandum as my last effort within the department. Unless the recommendations in my former reports are acted upon and the situation is immediately cleared up I shall without further notice transmit a copy of this memorandum to Congress, lay it before the proper grand juries, the American Legion, and other patriotic organizations and furnish copies to the press. At the same time I intend to demand an investigation of the Department of Justice and shall volunteer my services to Congress for that purpose. The American Government shall function, and I pledge myself to observe my oath of office, and in doing so to go to the limit.

Respectfully,

H. L. SCAIFE.

Mr. Chairman, so that the House may know the sort of a man and patriot he is, I wish to state that when war was declared Mr. Scaife, although past 46 years of age, volunteered for service with the Army. He was given a commission as captain in the Air Service, later was transferred to the Infantry at his request, and in that capacity served his country throughout the war. The following biographical sketch sheds some light upon this man's standing and ability:

[From Clinton (S. C.) Chronicle, November 22, 1917.]

MR. H. L. SCAIFE.

Mr. H. L. Scaife was born at Spartanburg, S. C., in 1872, and his people were among the Colonial settlers in Virginia and South Carolina. He is a descendant of "Gentleman" William Thomson, who was among the early settlers in Spartanburg County. He is a grandson of Maj. John Sharpe Rowland, a distinguished citizen of Georgia in ante bellum days. On his mother's side he is descended from the Lewis family, which furnished 22 soldiers to fight in the Battle of King's Mountain. The Lewis family is unique in its history in that seven of its members and connections have been Presidents of the United States. His grandfather, Col. Ferdinand Scaife, led the first troops which left Union County for the Civil War.

Mr. Scaife graduated from the South Carolina Military Academy in 1892, and was engaged in educational work for eight years, being superintendent of the city schools of Laurens, and later commandant of cadets in a military school in Kentucky. He was admitted to the bar in 1898. Mr. Scaife engages in the general practice of law only to a limited extent, being in charge of the legal work in this State for several concerns. He is the originator of a system of investigations for the prevention of litigation in connection with insurance frauds. He is attorney for several concerns having mining interests in Mexico, and has spent much time in that country. He organized and is now first vice president of a hospital for miners in the district in which he is interested.

He takes an active interest in scientific and economic subjects, and papers written by him have appeared from time to time in scientific journals and have been read before associations of which he is a member. He has organized several business enterprises which have been managed with success.

Mr. Scaife is a member of the American Bar Association, the South Carolina Bar Association, the American Society of International Law, the American Association for the Advancement of Science, and other societies.

In 1916 he was appointed by President Wilson as associate member of the Naval Consulting Board and a director of the Industrial Survey for South Carolina. At the present time he is acting on the Government fuel committee for Laurens County.

As soon as a state of war was declared to exist he tendered his services to the Government, and his name is now carried on the rolls of the War Department as having qualified for a commission with the rank of major.

He has given active support to all of the efforts which have been put forth for the good of the community.

SPRUCE FOR AIRCRAFT.

Mr. Chairman, on February 16, 1920, subcommittee No. 1 of the Select Committee on Expenditures in the War Department of this House submitted its report. (Rept. No. 637, 66th Cong., 2d sess.) That report, among other things, dealt with the expenditures in connection with spruce production in the Pacific Northwest. Accompanying the report were thousands of pages of testimony and a vast number of exhibits offered during a careful and exhaustive examination which supported the findings of the majority of the committee. This report and the evidence accompanying it disclosed a situation and a series of transactions which clearly called for prompt and drastic prosecution, both civil and criminal, of the many persons and interests involved. It disclosed an unparalleled condition of waste and inefficiency in connection with spruce production. It disclosed the connection of sinister influences and powerful individuals with operations in the Pacific Northwest, in which millions of dollars were expended upon enterprises which directly and primarily benefited private interests and which, from the viewpoint of the Government, wasted public funds and delayed for selfish, mercenary purposes the airplane program. The instances and transactions which fall easily within these criticisms are too numerous to be at this time specifically mentioned. I refer you to the report for an enumeration of the scandalous details.

So far as I am informed, not a single proceeding, either civil or criminal, has been instituted by the Department of Justice in connection with these frauds. I am further informed that the settlement of these various transactions has been left in the hands of the Spruce Corporation and the Air Service, which were directly concerned with their initiation and execution during the time when the frauds were perpetrated. Speaking with a gentleman the other day concerning these matters, I asked him what were the feelings of the people of the Pacific Northwest in regard to the failure of the present administration to follow up the investigations of the committee of this House and the repeated promises made by responsible party leaders during the last presidential campaign. His reply, in substance, was that the people were sadly disillusioned and that they were rapidly reaching the conviction that persons and interests powerful enough to loot the Government during the last administration were powerful enough to retain their loot under the present administration and that war grafters and their immunity from prosecution had bipartisan characteristics.

In this connection I refer to an editorial appearing in the New York Times of May 2, 1918, under the heading "A Federal grand jury for the airplane inquiry," and from which I quote the following paragraph:

> These conditions plainly point to an organized conspiracy—bold, powerful, numerous—made up of men able to formulate a great and definite plan and embracing within their number men sufficiently high placed and influential to have the ear and the confidence of the Secretary of War.

Are we to be now forced to the reluctant conclusion that the men referred to in this editorial are still sufficiently high placed and influential to have the ear and the confidence of and to influence the course of action of men now in authority whose duty it is to investgate and prosecute them?

BOSCH MAGNETO CO.

Another illustrative case, indeed typical of many, many others, is that of the Bosch Magneto Co. The successor to this company had a contract with the Aircraft Bureau, and in connection with that contract it appears that disclosures were made of an astounding character in relation to the seizure and subsequent sale of the capital stock of the Bosch Magneto Co. by the Alien Property Custodian. On December 31, 1919, nearly two months after the armistice, the capital stock of the Bosch Magneto Co. was sold by the Alien Property Custodian to one Martin E. Kern for $4,150,000. Mr. Kern was a close personal friend and client of Mr. Palmer, Alien Property Custodian at the time of the sale. It appears that Mr. Kern was not an American citizen, but was apparently of German birth and citizenship. It would also seem that he had served three years in prison in the State of New York for felonies committed by him, and I hold here in my hand copies of his photograph appearing in the Rogues Gallery in New York City. Apart from the fact, which seems to be admitted, that Mr. Kern was not an American citizen, his conviction of a felony would deprive him of his civil rights, and it does not appear that through pardon or other Executive clemency such rights have ever been restored. The trading with the enemy act, under the provisions of which the property was seized and subsequently sold, prohibits the sale of property to other than American citizens. A violation of the provisions of the act may be punished by a fine of $10,000 or imprisonment not exceeding two years, or both. The sale to Mr. Kern was in direct and palpable violation of the act. It was a violation in which both the official who made the sale and the persons concerned in receiving the transfers were equally guilty. No prosecutions have yet occurred, and although newspaper publicity some time ago seems to have stirred the Department of Justice to some show of activity, nothing yet has come of it.

It has been charged in this case, and the known facts seem fully to warrant the charge, that the property was worth at least twice the figure at which it was sold. The facts would seem clearly to support the charge that a gross fraud was committed against the United States in connection with this sale. Shortly after the property was sold to Mr. Kern a corporation called the American Bosch Magneto Co. was organized, to which the properties were transferred. One of the chief actors in these transactions was the firm of Hornblower & Weeks, a banking and brokerage house of New York and Boston. It appears from information obtained from reliable sources and from figures taken from the books of the American Bosch Magneto Co. that the profits realized by the firm of Hornblower & Weeks from its connection with this transaction was probably $1,000,000 or more, and that the profits which Mr. Kern realized ran to many hundreds of thousands of dollars. Neither the Department of Justice nor any other department has as yet instituted any civil proceedings to set aside this sale.

Mr. Kern returned from Europe some time ago. He still is at liberty enjoying the profit and fruits of the manipulations. While he was in Europe it appears that he wrote some letters which were intercepted and finally passed into the hands of the public authorities. To show the audacity of the man and the influence which he thinks he and his associates can exert upon public officials, I will quote from these letters. Writing from the Hotel Maurice, Paris, under date of January 27, 1922, to one of his attorneys in a Pennsylvania town, he says, among other things: "Call Griffiths in. You can trust him. Of course, he wants to look out for himself. He always does. Surely there must be some way to make the Attorney General see reason." Again, writing from the same place to the same person, he says: "Murray seems to have lost his head entirely, as have I. * * * Why don't Murray and all interests take John W. Weeks to Daugherty and put a quietus on this thing?" The Murray he refers to was one of the men who was associated with him in a deal, and who was afterwards president of the American Bosch Magneto Co. The other gentlemen he refers to are, respectively, the Secretary of War and the Attorney General, and the thing upon which he wished a quietus put evidently was the agitation in the public press for criminal prosecution by the Department of Justice in connection with the matter and civil proceedings to set the sale aside.

AMERICAN ELECTRO PRODUCTS CO.

The American Electro Products Co. is another typical case. This concern was organized under the laws of Canada, and erected a plant in Canada for the production of war supplies, among other things, glacial acetic acid. It obtained contracts from the Government. It also obtained a loan of $1,750,000. I call special attention to the fact that as early as December 22, 1920, Mr. Baker, then Secretary of War, requested an opinion from the Attorney General as to the validity of the contract, and in the communication making such request he said:

> In the opinion of the Judge Advocate General the foregoing provisions as to obligations upon the part of the Government are so wasteful and extravagant and, in view of the location of the plant in a foreign country, so inimical to the interests of the Government as to be beyond the power of any agent of the Government to incorporate them in a binding contract. Herewith is transmitted a copy of such opinion together with all pertinent papers.

Official action was not taken under the last administration to effect the cancellation of this most extraordinary contract, or even to recover the amount which the United States had loaned. Shortly after the incoming of the present administration—that is to say, on April 20, 1921—Mr. Wainwright, Assistant Secretary of War, communicated the facts to the Attorney General and requested that appropriate action be taken, among other things stating:

> I consider the terms of the contract as unconscionable and that suit should be instituted to recover from the company the sum of $1,750,000, loaned by the Government, plus unpaid interest from February 28, 1918.

Nearly a year has passed since this matter was officially called to the attention of the present Attorney General with request for proceedings adequate to preserve and enforce the rights of this Government. I understand that no action has been brought. I do not know what the reason is. I do not know what influences, if any, have intervened between the Attorney General and the undoubted rights of the Government. I do know that in this case, as in scores and hundreds of others, nothing has been done, and the hope of recovery is disappearing with lapse of time.

JAPANESE INTERESTS.

I will call specific attention to another typical instance where it appears from official records that the Government was defrauded out of millions in connection with war contracts, where men high in political circles have intervened in behalf of the contractors against whom the charges have been made, and where as yet absolutely no civil or criminal proceedings have been instituted to redress the wrongs perpetrated on the Government. Some phases of the matter to which I now refer are so unusual and extraordinary as to command the serious attention of everyone interested in the welfare of our Government.

The Standard Aircraft Corporation and the Standard Aero Co. were both given large and various contracts for the Air Service during the war. It appears that both of these companies were active and influential members of the group of contractors which controlled the aviation situation during the war. Both of these companies were financed in their entirety by Mitsui & Co., Japanese bankers, and the fiscal agents in this country and elsewhere of the Japanese Government. These facts have been known and have been a matter of official record for several years. It was testified before the Senate Committee on Military Affairs in the investigation of aircraft production concerning Mitsui & Co. that—

> They are paymasters for the Japanese Government throughout the world, its financial agents, and they were also assisting the German secret service before the war, acting as paymasters for them.

The report of Judge Hughes, made as the result of his investigations of aircraft production in 1918, called attention to the fact that these concerns were financed by Japanese capital; that they had received orders for almost every variety of airplane work; and he stated that this was "a proceeding which had no justification from a production standpoint."

A report by the Contract Audit Section of the War Department which has been in the hands of the Department of Justice for a considerable time shows that payments were made by the War Department to these concerns in the aggregate amount of more than $16,000,000, and that of this amount $6,586,774.61 was made up of undoubted illegal overpayments, which should be recovered. The investigations made, and which have been reported to the Attorney General, show the fraudulent character of these overpayments and the methods employed to obtain them. For instance, the Government paid as a part of the cost of carrying forward the contracts the sum of $370,499.92 as rental for buildings occupied by the company. Obviously and admittedly the buildings were not owned by the companies. Later they claimed and were paid a large sum by way of depreciation or amortization on these same buildings which they did not own.

Some months ago when the investigation of these contracts by the contract audit section had reached a very interesting stage the well-known law firm of Cadwallader, Wickersham & Taft, a member of which firm is a former Republican Attorney General, appeared on the scene as attorney for Mitsui & Co. A few days later Mr. Abraham F. Meyers, formerly an office boy, later a law clerk in the Department of Justice, was given general supervision over war fraud cases, including the Standard Aircraft and Standard Aero cases, at a salary of $6,000 per year. Not long thereafter this man notified the Air Service that further information concerning aircraft cases so far as the Department of Justice was concerned was to be given only through him. I am informed on reliable authority that Mr. Wickersham recommended the appointment of Mr. Meyers to the place he now holds. Up to this time no criminal proceedings have been brought against any person connected with these transactions, and no civil proceedings have been brought to recover the fraudulent overpayments. In the meantime, so I am informed, both of these companies have disbursed and disposed of the moneys obtained from the Government, several million dollars having been paid directly to Mitsui & Co. I am also informed that one of these companies is now going into bankruptcy and the other through the process of liquidation. Thus, through lapse of time, inexcusable delay, and official nonaction the situation is being created where the hope for possibility of recovery will be gone.

In view of Mr. Wickersham's activities in connection with this case an editorial in the Washington Times of April 6, 1922, will be interesting. It is, in part, as follows:

WOLVES IN LAMB'S GARB.

The British propaganda goes on unabated in this country. Recently in Maine there appeared two notorious British propagandists, speaking to American audiences. One of them is the notorious Rathom, of the Providence Journal, whose connection with the British secret service was exposed not long since. The other is George W. Wickersham, Attorney General of the United States under Taft because he was the partner of Taft's brother.

Wickersham has been a British propagandist in this country for some time. He has spent a great deal of his energy in behalf of the League of Nations, which the British wanted, and in behalf of the present four-power treaty, which the British desperately want.

He got up a big petition for the four-power treaty, which he sent to Washington. He spoke for it everywhere. But nowhere did he reveal to the people his British connections. Therefore, it is the duty of this paper to call attention to them.

He is the American attorney for the biggest steel company in Great Britain and the largest munitions maker. His sister is married to the head of one of these firms.

* * * * * * *

When will the standards of honor of American public men require them either to decline to express publicly an opinion concerning a public question in which they have a private personal interest; or, when expressing an opinion, to reveal their personal interest so that the public may make appropriate discount?

A man with Mr. Wickersham's connections would not be allowed to sit on a jury in any case in which the British were interested. Why should he consider it honorable, for the purpose of promoting a secret personal interest, to exploit the fact that he has been Attorney General of the United States?

It is these secret connections, these private, personal interests, which are the curse of American public life.

We do not know when a man to whom we have accorded highest honors is rendering us a good return by giving us the benefit of his experience and ability without personal interest or an evil return by giving us an opinion biased by a strong financial interest concealed from our view.

The time is coming when we shall outlaw public men who do such things and even make it criminal. It is not only morally atrocious, but it is a very great public danger.

CHEMICAL FOUNDATION CO.

Subsequent to February 26, 1919, the Alien Property Custodian transferred to the Chemical Foundation Co., a Delaware corporation, about forty-five hundred patents, patent applications, and so forth, principally relating to chemicals, dyes, medicines, and so forth. The consideration agreed to be paid by the company was $250,000, an amount no doubt much less than the aggregate Patent Office fees. The patents, and so forth, so transferred were easily worth upward of fifty times the consideration received. There is no doubt that single or isolated patents included in the number transferred were each worth many times the total amount of the consideration paid.

The first order authorizing the transfer of these properties bears date of February 26, 1919, and was executed by Franklin L. Polk, under some sort of authority conferred by the President. Mr. Polk signed the document in his individual and not in an official capacity, although he at the time was Acting Secretary of State. A supplemental order covering additional properties was signed by Mr. Polk April 5, 1919. Neither of these orders described the particular patents, patent applications, and so forth, that were to be transferred. They each contained the most extraordinary provision that the Alien Property Custodian was authorized to transfer to the Chemical Foundation Co. any and all patents, patent applications, trade-marks, and so forth, to be selected by the Chemical Foundation Co. and which might be germane to the general purposes of the corporation. It is understood that from the early part of March, 1919, and for a couple of years thereafter, the Chemical Foundation Co. has from time to time selected and designated patents and trade-marks which have been transferred. In other words, a private arrangement was made in the early part of 1919 by which, for the nominal consideration of $250,000, the Chemical Foundation Co. would receive a transfer of any and all patents which it might select from among those seized by the Alien Property Custodian.

The Chemical Foundation Co. was organized after the armistice. Official data shows that it was organized by arrangement and cooperation with the Alien Property Custodian, and for the announced purpose of taking over these patents, applications, and so forth. The most active person in connection with the organization of the company was Mr. Francis P. Garvan, who became its first president, and who has continued to be such since that time. A voting trust was established in respect to the capital stock, and the first voting trustees consisted of five persons—Otto Barnard, Cleveland H. Dodge, George L. Ingraham, Ralph H. Stone, and Benjamin Griswold, jr.

At the time the company was formed and the plan for the transfer of these properties to it was formulated, Mr. Palmer was Alien Property Custodian and Mr. Garvan was the chief investigator of the Alien Property Custodian and in charge of the New York office. The men who made up the voting trustees were, in 1919 and prior thereto, the advisory sales board in the organization of the Alien Property Custodian, having the duty and the assumed obligation of passing upon and advising the Alien Property Custodian with respect to proposed sales, the adequacy of consideration, terms, expediency of making sales, and all other factors bearing upon the propriety of any proposed sale.

Mr. Joseph H. Choate, jr., was the attorney who very largely looked after the incorporation of the Chemical Foundation Co. and subsequently the transfer to it of the various patents, patent applications, and so forth. At the time the Chemical Foundation Co. was organized he became its attorney and thereafter continued in that capacity. At the time the Chemical Foundation Co. was formed, and for some time prior thereto, and for a considerable time thereafter, he was connected with the office of the Alien Property Custodian, and to quote from the testimony of Mr. Choate before a committee of this House:

Mr. GREEN. Just what were your duties with the custodian of the alien property?

Mr. CHOATE. In the Bureau of Investigation; I had charge of the investigation of the chemical business.

A few days prior to March 1, 1919, Mr. Palmer, then Alien Property Custodian, was nominated for the office of Attorney General. He was not confirmed until some days later. On March 4, 1919, Mr. Garvan became Acting Alien Property Custodian and assumed full charge of the office. Shortly thereafter he received a permanent appointment to the position. It will be remembered that February 26, 1919, is the date upon which the first order was made authorizing the transfer of any property to the Chemical Foundation Co., and that April 5 following was the date upon which the second order was made. Up to March 4, Mr. Garvan was the chief investigator for the Alien Property Custodian. On and after March 4 he was in fact the Alien Property Custodian. He was the president of the Chemical Foundation Co. from the date of its organization a couple of months before. Many of the patents, trade-marks, and so forth, were in fact transferred to the Chemical Foundation Co. after March 4, with the result that Mr. Garvan, as Alien Property Custodian, was bargaining with Mr. Garvan as president of the Chemical Foundation Co.

The Alien Property Custodian was, of course, by reason of the terms of the trading with the enemy act, trustee of the seized property. Mr. Garvan, Mr. Choate, and the members of the Advisory Sales Board were a part of the organization of the Alien Property Custodian. They had assumed obligations in respect to the properties which the custodian seized and administered. In a broad and equitable sense they occupied a fiduciary, a trust relation to such properties, and the obligations arising under such a relationship required a scrupulous observance of the principles of honor and square dealing.

Clearly it is a situation where persons occupying a position of public trust in relation to valuable properties employed the device of a corporation organized by themselves to sell to themselves for a grossly inadequate consideration these properties, which, at the time, they were under moral and legal obligation to administer as a public trust.

It seems too clear to admit of doubt that these acts constitute both a civil and a criminal fraud against the United States. In a legal sense the property held in trust by the Alien Property Custodian was and is the property of the United States, if it was in fact seized from enemy aliens falling within the provisions of the trading with the enemy act. The seizure of the property was authorized. By the provisions of the original act and the amendments thereto, the Alien Property Custodian, under regulations prescribed by the Executive, could exercise all the rights of ownership, including the power of sale.

The alien enemy has no rights in the property which he could judicially enforce. The final disposition of the property under the law was and is dependent upon congressional action. Obviously this complete dominion over the property is inconsistent with any legal title remaining in the alien enemy. The seized property was to be held in trust by the Alien Property Custodian of the United States subject to congressional action, hence it was a public trust. In a legal sense the fraud was perpetrated in connection with property held in trust by the Alien Property Custodian. It was without doubt a fraud upon the United States.

Section 37 of the Federal Penal Code provides that—

If two or more persons conspire together to commit any offense against the United States, or to defraud the United States in any manner or for any purpose, and one or more of such parties do any act to effect the object of the conspiracy, each of the parties to such conspiracy shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than two years, or both.

The case of the Chemical Foundation Co. falls easily upon the provisions of this section, as construed by the Federal courts. That the various persons whom I have mentioned concerted and conspired together to transfer to the Chemical Foundation Co., a corporation of their own creation, a great number of patents, trade-marks, and so forth, for a very small fraction of their value must be admitted. That this constituted a fraud upon the United States is also perfectly clear, and the character of the offense is made the more inexcusable by the fact that the conspirators were occupying public positions and charged with a public trust in relation to such properties.

It will be observed that the statute which I have quoted makes criminal any conspiracy to defraud the United States in any manner or for any purpose. The word "fraud" is given the broadest and most comprehensive meaning. Federal courts have quite uniformly held that any willful, fraudulent, or corrupt conduct on the part of a public official that operates in any way to impair the administration of the affairs of the Government or of any department is within the meaning of the statute. The statute is not confined to pecuniary rights, although it includes them. If through any conspiracy any right of the United States is injured or impaired, the statute applies. (Haas v. Henkel, 216 U. S. 462; Stager v. U. S., 223 Fed., 510; 7 Fed. Stat. Ann. 345, second edition; id. 546; id. 554.) The Attorney General in 1919—then Mr. Palmer—ruled that it was unlawful for the Alien Property Custodian to sell property held by him in trust, except for a fair and reasonable consideration. This opinion was rendered in connection with negotiations by one of the departments of the Government to purchase a patent from the Alien Property Custodian. Apparently it was not lawful in 1919 for the custodian to sell one patent to another branch of the Government except for a fair and reasonable consideration, while it was deemed proper to sell 4,500 patents to himself and his associates for a very small fraction of their value. (31 Op. Atty. Gen. 463, 1919.)

The offense embraced within section 37 of the Penal Code, to which I have referred, is an infamous offense, and properly so, because it embraces frauds against the United States which are essentially subversive and contemptible, particularly when participated in by public officials. The penalty may exceed imprisonment for a year, therefore it authorized, in connection with other statutory provisions, confinement in a penitentiary. These characteristics make it an infamous crime. Whether or not a crime is an infamous one depends upon the penalty which may be inflicted and not what is in fact inflicted in a particular case. (Macklin v. U. S., 117 U. S. 348; U. S. v. Wells, 163 Fed. 313.)

It does not require the refinement of legal argument or the learning of a lawyer to perceive the essentially immoral, dishonest, and criminal character of the transactions by which the Chemical Foundation Co. became possessed of these patents, trade-marks, and other properties. A mere statement of the undisputed facts, without argument or embellishment, enables even the lay mind to see instantly the illegal character of the transaction.

The Government could and should cancel the transfer to the Chemical Foundation Co. The fact that persons occupying a trust relation to the property were also officers and agents of the corporation to which the property was transferred also creates a presumption of fraud and illegality. The inadequacy of consideration should make the presumption conclusive. That proceedings to cancel the transfers could be successfully maintained will not be honestly challenged by anyone who understands the facts.

It could hardly be expected that Mr. Palmer, who was Alien Property Custodian when the conspiracy was conceived, and who subsequently became Attorney General, would bring proceedings either civil or criminal based upon fraudulent transactions to which he was a party. It was confidently expected by all those who believe in the honest and decent administration of public affairs that with the coming into power of the present administration the present incumbent of the office of Attorney General would promptly bring proceedings to set aside this stupendous fraud and initiate steps looking to the criminal prosecution of the guilty participants. Twelve months and more have passed since the present incumbent took office, and, so far as can be learned, absolutely nothing has been done by his department in connection with this matter. It can not be said that this is due to ignorance of the facts or that the matter has not been repeatedly called to his attention. All of the essential facts were fully developed in hearings before committees of both Houses long before he took office. This specific transaction, among others, was the subject of discussion in the press and on the platform during the presidential campaign in 1920, and in addition was called directly to his attention, as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 18, 1921.

Hon. HARRY M. DAUGHERTY,
Attorney General, Department of Justice,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR GENERAL: Herewith please find House Resolution No. 148, also extract from testimony taken from hearings on H. R. 2706, Ways and Means Committee, June 18 to July 18, 1919, and on H. R. 8078, Senate Finance Committee, December 8, 1919, to January 12, 1920.

The resolution sets forth specifically that Francis P. Garvan, Joseph Choate, jr. (and Ramsey Hoquet), were employed by the United States Government as officials in the Bureau of Investigation, office of the Alien Property Custodian, in charge of alien patents. That several months after signing of the armistice and about February or March, 1919, they negotiated a sale by the Government and prepared necessary documents for a conveyance to themselves and their associates at private sale and at a nominal purchase price of 4,500 alien chemical patents. The pretended sale was made to the Chemical Foundation Co., a private company, of which they were organizers and principal officers, and was made without notice to the public, without any competition, and for a consideration of $250,000, although reputable men declare 2 of the 4,500 patents were worth $10,000,000, and the others, though of less value, would add to that total.

Reference is made to original public documents for additional evidence regarding the chemical company, of which company Mr. Garvan was president while serving as Alien Property Custodian. After the sale and as such public officer by public acts he confirmed the sale previously made to him and his associates when they were in charge of the Bureau of Investigation and while he and they were substantially in control of such property. Extracts of testimony herewith discloses the public position of the parties and activities when negotiating the sale on the part of the Government to themselves. Absence of substantial consideration will be furnished by reputable witnesses. A refusal of Alien Property Custodian Garvan to file any report of his administration as such officer while at the same time he was and now is president of the private Chemical Foundation Co. will give an understanding of methods pursued.

Attempted justification of the sale is offered by saying that the alien patents are held by this private company for the benefit of stockholders in dye companies who are privileged to use such patents on payment of royalties or licenses at prices fixed by the chemical company. * * * I have charged in the resolution that the pretended sale was fraudulent and simply amounted to a seizure of such alien patents by such public officers and holding of the property to their own private use. That conclusion is inevitable from the testimony.

A violation of a well-known principle of international law occurred when these alien patents belonging to private parties were seized long after the armistice was signed, not as a war measure nor for protection or aid of the Government but seized for use of a private company by public officers who secured the transfer and possession to themselves for private purposes as stated. The legal responsibility of the Government to the real owners of the patents presumably extends to a return of the patents, or, in any event, their equivalent value. Apart from the violation of principles of international law here involved occurs responsibility by the Government for alien property taken over by these public officials to themselves in a private capacity at a private sale practically without consideration.

The Chemical Co., I am informed, in order to foreclose the Government's right of recovery, recently sought through its officers to have inserted in the peace resolution a provision validating all sales by the Alien Property Custodian, which effort failed through the watchfulness of committee members. It is represented that the Chemical Foundation, through its stockholders, represents a majority of the chemical interests of the country, and by its absolute control of patents and royalties the public is without protection from its exactions. Its power rests with the patents fraudulently acquired, and if the sale is set aside the other question largely will be settled by action. Probability of securing an early expression from the House on the resolution seems doubtful because of proposed recess, and it was offered only to secure added support for your action in the matter.

Your public announcement that your department would vigorously prosecute fraudulent sales made during or since the war has been hailed by the country as a vindication of its judgment last November. As a member of the House investigating committee, I aided in securing evidence which I believe warrants prosecutions and recoveries by the Government in different cases disclosed, but in all the thousands of pages of testimony taken by the House committee I know of no case that presents such a flagrant violation of official duties by men who served on both sides of a contract. From their own undisputed testimony these men violated not alone ethics of public trust and confidence but acted in defiance of well-established principles of law, and also of international law, that directly affects the good name of our Government with all other nations of the world.

The great power and influence of the chemical monopoly will be thrown against any effort to compel restitution to the Government of many millions of dollars in property, for which the stockholders paid only 2 per cent value, and this same power which sought to force validation by Congress of this sale, and spent over $100,000 for lobbying in order to secure dye legislation, will attempt to reach administrative as well as legislative action.

The public complains over punishment of "little fellows," and those skeptical of motives often question prosecutions that may serve political ends, but the case presented by the resolution is bipartisan in character; it challenges the confidence of the people in the integrity of public officials; and it affects prominent ex-officials who set an example of public irresponsibility before their subordinates and before the country.

Any information I may have is at your command, and I trust you will do all in your power to vindicate the law and to right the wrong that in its attempts to validate and "cover up" has reached even to the doors of legislative halls. Such efforts to foreclose the Government's right to inquire and to prosecute are as vicious and "indefensible" in character as was the original fraudulent sale.

Very sincerely yours,

JAMES A. FREAR.

A resolution directing the Attorney General to proceed in the above case also appears in the RECORD of July 11, 1921, but no action was asked on such resolution, presumably, because the record laid before the Attorney General was sufficient to apprise him of the facts. The resolution so introduced and appearing in the RECORD is as follows:

Whereas the official record of hearings before the Ways and Means Committee discloses that during the year 1919 a sale of 4,000 alien chemical and dye patents was made by the Alien Property Custodian to the Chemical Foundation Co.; that said sale was conceived and arranged by Francis P. Garvan, Joseph Choate, and Ramsey Hoquet, officials of the Bureau of Investigation of such custodian's office; that these officials were also, respectively, the president, attorney, and patent adviser of the Chemical Foundation Co. and at the said time were in charge of alien patents in the Government office; that at such time they prepared, or caused to be prepared, an order wherein they were permitted to buy said patents at such price as might be determined by the Alien Property Custodian, whose advisers they were, and they thereupon fixed a price of $250,000 as a consideration to be paid by them for property which was easily worth over $10,000,000; that said parties concerned arranged by order that such sale should be made privately, without notice or competition; and that they thereupon sold to themselves as officers of such corporation the property at a price fixed by them as such Government officers; and

Whereas said sale was fraudulently made by such public officials at a price fixed by them of only 2 per cent of the actual value of such property: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Attorney General be, and he is hereby, requested to begin legal proceedings to set aside such sale made by the Alien Property Custodian to the Chemical Foundation Co. because of fraud, and that he be further requested to receive from said Chemical Foundation Co. all licenses, fees, and royalties, or other receipts over and above the amount of consideration actually paid by such company as the purchase price of said patents.

The following official record accompanied the letter to the Attorney General, according to the RECORD of July 11, 1921:

[From p. 88, dyestuffs hearings, Senate.]

Mr. CHOATE. I appear here as counsel for the Chemical Foundation, into which I shall go in a moment, and also I have been asked to represent the American Dyes Institute, which is an association of all the dye makers in the country, because they have practically the same point of view presented by the Chemical Foundation to-day, and are, therefore, properly represented by the same counsel. I came into this case, gentlemen, through my service in the office of the Alien Property Custodian. * * *

I am a life-long Republican * * * (p. 106), and so although it was none of our business as members of the Alien Property Custodian's staff, but purely for what we conceived to be reasons of public spirit, all of us who had the knowledge thus derived there very early began to scratch our heads to see if we could not find some way of helping this industry here.

A sale to the Graselli Co. of 1,100 patents and other property for $5,400,000 made them realize they would stand little danger in taking over 4,500 patents for $250,000.

Hearings before the Ways and Means Committee, dyestuffs, on H. R. 2706, July 14 to 20, 1919, Mr. Joseph Choate testifying (pp. 110–111):

Mr. CHOATE. The one thing the Alien Property Custodian had power to do without further help from Congress was to sell them (the German dye patents). * * * Now, it was obvious that the wisest thing for us to do was to sell to good American purchasers, and what could we do? * * * It was then that the fertile brain of Mr. Garvan, the present Alien Custodian, then in charge of the Bureau of Investigation, conceived the high idea of getting an industrial organization to act as a trustee corporation to buy the patents. I was present at every detail of every one of the consultations that resulted in that organization. * * * It took the form it did for this reason: In the first place we had to get an organization that could never fall into the control of any one body, any one company, any one man, or any group of men. For that purpose we made the stock nontransferable without the consent of the company. * * * For that purpose we provided that the whole stock must be placed in the hands of a voting trustee. * * *

Mr. OLDFIELD. Can anybody use these patents (p. 114)?

Mr. CHOATE. Not everybody, but every good American citizen can make application for a license and get it on equal terms, and they have to pay a royalty in each case.

Mr. OLDFIELD. You effect the license system, because all of these patents are controlled?

Mr. CHOATE. Oh, no; they are only controlled by the Chemical Foundation to a very minor extent.

Mr. Hoquet, who furnished the "soft stuff," as he calls it, must be called as a witness. Again quoting (p. 116):

Mr. CHOATE. As to Mr. Garvan being connected with this matter, that happened in this way: We were casting about to get a man to take hold of it, and so Mr. Hoguet, a very ardent Republican, and myself were discussing it as thoroughly as we could as to who could handle it. It was evident that whoever took that position (manager of the Chemical Foundation) would have to have a certain familiarity with the Germans in this country. There was no other man except Mr. Garvan who had a tenth of his qualifications in that respect.

Mr. MOORE. How did he acquire that influence?

Mr. CHOATE. As head of the Bureau of Investigation of the Alien Custodian's office from the start. * * * I should say that Mr. Garvan is a dollar-a-year man, and has no need to ask for any other compensation, and is, therefore, serving with the Chemical Foundation without compensation.

Mr. GREEN. Just what were your duties with the custodian of the alien property?

Mr. CHOATE. In the bureau of investigation; I had charge of the investigation of the chemical business.

* * * * * * *

Mr. CHOATE. The Bayer Co. was sold for over $5,000,000. Of course, they had large properties.

Mr. GREEN. You knew that the patents had large value?

Mr. CHOATE. I knew that the patents had a value which no man could calculate, because no man could say which were valuable except in rare cases. I suppose of the 5,000 taken over a great many were absolutely worthless.

* * * * * * *

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Garvan occupied what position?

Mr. CHOATE. He was head of the bureau of investigation.

Mr. GREEN. And you at that time were working under him?

Mr. CHOATE. I was.

Mr. GREEN. These companies, by virtue of their operation, whether in connection with these patents or not, and although while holding these patents, have made immense profits in this country?

Mr. CHOATE. Large profits, I should say.

Mr. GREEN. And profits that both you and Mr. Garvan were aware of?

Mr. CHOATE. Yes.

Mr. GREEN (p. 118). And learned it in the course of your operations for the Government?

Mr. CHOATE. Certainly. You understand the business was not large. The total amount of imports before the war was under $12,000,000. * * *

Mr. GREEN (p. 118). Now, after these discoveries had been made by virtue of the connection with the Government (value of the German patents) this corporation called the Chemical Foundation was instituted and it was concluded to place as its president Mr. Garvan, a very capable gentleman, and to retain an exceedingly capable lawyer as the corporation counsel, in the person of yourself. * * * Now, this company, having bought these patents, you say would have a considerable power over the imports as the result of its control of the patents?

Mr. CHOATE. It would have the power to control to a certain extent the operations under the patents. It can, if it can induce people to take out revocable licenses, revoke the licenses if the licensee behaves badly. Whether people will take licenses out in that form remains to be seen.

* * * * * * *

Mr. GREEN (p. 120). If, then, he who is a manufacturer in a small way comes before the Chemical Foundation and it appears to the foundation that he has so far not manufactured dyes to their satisfaction, and because he could not manufacture them under these patents without having a license, or for any other reason that appeared to them to be sufficient, he could be excluded?

Mr. CHOATE. He would be excluded if the Chemical Foundation did not believe he was in a position to make dyes that would be a credit to the American industries.

Mr. GREEN. This is a matter entirely in their discretion and judgment?

Mr. CHOATE. Precisely, as it is in the discretion of any other owner of patents.

* * * * * * *

PUBLIC AND PRIVATE SALES.

Mr. KITCHIN (p. 121). Now, in the sale of these patents by the Alien Property Custodian, I believe you said that one chemical company purchased how many?

Mr. CHOATE. Twelve hundred before the organization of the foundation.

Mr. KITCHIN. At public sale?

Mr. CHOATE. Yes, sir; at public sale.

Mr. KITCHIN. Were there any other bidders for them except this chemical company?

Mr. CHOATE. A great many of them, I think.

Mr. KITCHIN. How much did this company bid?

Mr. CHOATE. When the property was sold en bloc the whole property of the Bayer Co. was sold for $5,300,000. I forget the exact figures.

Mr. KITCHIN. That property included also the stock?

Mr. CHOATE. Yes, sir; that carried the company and its patents.

Mr. KITCHIN. Now, has that company turned over to your company these 1,200 patents?

Mr. CHOATE. No, sir; we hope they will. (Neither has the Dupont Co. or others controlling patents.) They are among the underwriters and good American people, and I think they will try to do the best they can to strengthen the foundation.

Mr. KITCHIN (p. 122). Now, your company (Chemical Foundation), after the purchase by this chemiccal company of these 1,200 patents, was organized, and then the other patents were put on sale at public auction?

Mr. CHOATE. They were not sold by public sale by the custodian, because it would have been impossible to do that for a variety of reasons. All the possible available bidders who could have bid in good faith for these patents as real manufacturers were already in the enterprise, because they were members of the American Dyes Institute. The only other kind of bidder there could have been would be a hold-up artist who would buy the patents either for the benefit of his own pocket or who would buy them to hold them up from use. It required an Executive order from the President to effect that transfer.

Mr. KITCHIN. I simply desire to get the facts on the record. Now, were these patents offered separately or were they en bloc?

Mr. CHOATE. They were sold in one transaction to the Chemical Foundation.

Mr. KITCHIN. What was the actual amount of cash that was paid for them?

Mr. CHOATE. Two hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

Mr. KITCHIN. Now, did your patents cover any other part of the chemical products except dyestuffs?

Mr. CHOATE. Yes, sir; all chemical products we could lay our hands on, but it is only in the dyestuffs that the patents are of great importance—dye and pharmaceutical goods—because it is only there that the patent is especially important. They cover salvarsan and other products and all the rest that we could get our hands on. * * *

Mr. Francis P. Garvan testified as follows:

Mr. MOORE (p. 332). I want again to call your attention to a matter that may be referred to later on, which I did not personally care to stir up too much, and that is the compatibility of the Alien Property Custodian serving also as the president of the Chemical Foundation (Inc.), which intends to enter actively into the business and the control of business, and which seeks legislation for that purpose. Is it not, in your judgment, incompatible for one man to hold those two offices, one being administrative and the other being an office where the administrator can assist the president of the corporation?

Mr. GARVAN. Can you point out any point where they conflict?

Mr. MOORE. Is it not possible that questions affecting the integrity of the Chemical Foundation might come before the Alien Property Custodian for administration?

Mr. GARVAN. Can your imagination suggest such a position?

Mr. MOORE. Yes.

Mr. GARVAN. I would like to hear it. If there is anything inconsistent in my two positions, I certainly will resign one or both. * * *

Mr. MOORE. Is it not possible that the Attorney General of the United States might call upon his very efficient Assistant Attorney General whom he is now about to appoint, in the person of the present Alien Property Custodian (Mr. Garvan), to investigate the business of the Chemical Foundation (Inc.), of which the Assistant Attorney General (Mr. Garvan), now Alien Property Custodian (Mr. Garvan), is president?

Mr. GARVAN. No; it is not.

Mr. MOORE. You think that is impossible?

Mr. GARVAN. Absolutely impossible.

Advisory committee of Alien Property Custodian are now Foundation trustees. The same committee passed on sale from Government for the private company that bought. (Dyestuffs hearings, Committee on Finance, United States Senate, H. R.

8078, December 13, 1919. Mr. Garvan had not resigned after six months.)

Mr. Francis P. Garvan, Alien Property Custodian, a witness before the Senate committee (p. 520):

So I conceived the idea of forming the Chemical Foundation and putting all of these patents into a quasi public corporation, which would develop them and give them to chemical companies throughout the country. The way salvarsan had worked out encouraged us. * * * So then we had this board of trustees, composed of Mr. Otto Bennard, president of the New York Trust Co., Mr. Cleveland H. Dodge, * * * Judge George L. Ingraham, * * * Ralph H. Stone, president of the Detroit Trust Co., * * * Benjamin Griswold, jr. * * * These gentlemen had consented to act as the advisory committee for the Alien Property Custodian on questions of the sale of German property. * * *

Senator CALDER. How many patents did they take over?

Mr. GARVAN. Four thousand.

Senator CALDER. The Alien Property Custodian sold them these patents?

Mr. GARVAN. It was by private sale by the President.

Senator CALDER. For how much money?

Mr. GARVAN. Two hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

Mr. GARVAN (p. 522). I am very anxious to make this statement as fully as possible, because I do not want to have any rumors or anything to interfere with this case. I am pleased and delighted to answer questions to the fullest.

Senator CALDER. I am very anxious to have information, because the situation would indicate there is a great possibility of tremendous profits for some people.

VALUE OF FOUNDATION PATENTS.

Relating to the value of the 4,000 German patents bought by the Chemical Foundation, the following testimony on page 255 is in point.

Mr. MOORE. Would you care to deny the statement, since Mr. LONGWORTH has raised the question, that one of these 4,000 patents (salvarsan) is worth $50,000 a year royalty?

Mr. GARVAN. I would be grateful to have you tell me the name of it.

Mr. MOORE. A one million dollar patent, and you bought 4,000 of them for $250,000.

Testimony can be had that two patents included in the sale were worth several million dollars.

Relating to the exclusive power possessed by this Chemical Foundation monopoly over the 4,000 patents under its control the following testimony is relevant:

Mr. GREEN (p. 360). Reading from the charter of the Chemical Foundation "The board of directors may refuse to issue any license or may revoke any license granted by the corporation and may prescribe the terms and conditions of such license." * * *

Mr. GARVAN. Do you claim that we could use arbitrary power to refuse licenses?

Mr. GREEN. I have not the slightest doubt of it. In the first place, it says the board may issue; second, it shall prescribe the terms; and, third, it may revoke it at any time it wants to * * *.

Again referring to the dual relationship of Mr. Garvan in a public and private capacity:

Mr. GREEN. A considerable portion of the persons connected with the Chemical Foundation are connected also either directly or indirectly with the Alien Property Custodian's office.

Mr. GARVAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. GREEN. And you consider it entirely ethical that having obtained information through their connection with the Alien Property Custodian that they shall then sell to an institution controlled by themselves?

Mr. GARVAN. It was by virtue of our connection with the Alien Property Custodian office that we saw it as our public duty not to let this thing revert to where it was.

Mr. Garvan complains that he was not in fact Alien Property Custodian when the sale was made to his company. Technically this is true in name, but as officer apparently in charge of this property he arranged all the details for the sale, aided by Mr. Choate, to a company of which he was president and by his subsequent promotion to position of Alien Property Custodian he confirmed by acquiescence that same sale.

The following letter also appears in the same RECORD and has a bearing on the case:

A SELF-EXPLANATORY LETTER.

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 4, 1921.

Hon. WILLIAM H. KING,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: In accordance with your request I am pleased to have the opportunity of furnishing you with the following facts precedent to the investigation as called for in your recent resolution introduced in the United States Senate:

Mr. Francis P. Garvan, former Alien Property Custodian, is president of the Chemical Foundation (Inc.); Col. Douglas I. McKay, late colonel, General Staff, vice president of J. G. White & Co., is vice president; Mr. George J. Corbett, assistant secretary of Central Trust Co., is secretary and treasurer. Mr. Corbett was a director in a number of the alien-enemy concerns taken over by Mr. Garvan as Alien Property Custodian during the recent war. Mr. Joseph H. Choate, jr., who was an examiner of chemical and dyestuff concerns in the Alien Property Custodian's office during the recent war, is counsel for the Chemical Foundation (Inc.). Mr. Ramsey Houget, who acted as attorney for various alien-enemy concerns taken over by the custodian's office during the war, is patent counsel for the foundation.

The following gentlemen who comprised the sales committee which passed upon all the sales of the alien-enemy concerns made by the Alien Property Custodian's office during the war are the trustees of the Chemical Foundation (Inc.):

George L. Ingraham, New York; Otto T. Bannard, president New York Trust Co.; Cleveland H. Dodge, New York; B. Howell Griswold, jr., of Brown Bros., bankers, Philadelphia; Ralph Stone, president Detroit Trust Co.

Mr. Joseph H. Choate, jr., is counsel for the American Dyes Institute. Judge Covington, who was attorney for a number of alien-enemy concerns seized by the Alien Property Custodian's office during the recent war, is also counsel for the American Dyes Institute. Mr. Choate engineered the naming of the advisory committee of the War Trade Board from the Dyes Institute. This same committee is the advisory committee of the Textile Alliance. Employees of the Du Ponts were shifted to the Textile Alliance and represented them in Europe and then went back with the Du Ponts. Dr. Thomas H. Norton, who was formerly with the Department of Commerce, also became connected with the Du Ponts. Mr. B. R. Price, who had charge of most of the color end of the Textile Alliance, is now with the A. C. D. C. So you can see how the combination has been interchanged, and everywhere that you turn there is a Du Pont representative. Some of the members of the executive committee of the American Dyes Institute are as follows:

Mr. Morris R. Poucher, chairman, E. I. Du Pont de Nemours Co.; Mr. E. R. Baldwin, the Allied Chemical and Dyes Corporation; Dr. Samuel Isermann, Van Dyke & Co.; Dr. J. Merritt Matthews, Grasselli Chemical Co.; Mr. Jeffcott, Calco Chemical & Color Co.; Mr. Klotz, Newport Chemical Co.

Thanking you for this opportunity, I remain,

Very truly yours,

_____.

The following letter written to Hon. Boies Penrose, chairman of the Senate Committee on Finance, by the Hon. JAMES A. FREAR is taken from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of August 12, 1921, and possibly explains the influence which has operated to prevent appropriate action by the Department of Justice against the Chemical Foundation Co.:

WASHINGTON, D. C., August 6, 1921.

Senator BOIES PENROSE,
Chairman Committee on Finance,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: To-day's press states that dye interests now seeking to secure a three-year dye embargo from your committee have persuaded Secretary of War Weeks and Secretary of Navy Denby to write your committee urging continuance of the war dye embargo for an indefinite period, in order that this country may be provided with chemicals in case of war. If correctly reported, this preposterous claim is only another evidence of the enormous power of the dye monopoly headed by the Chemical Foundation Co., which has already sought to exercise its influence on three Cabinet members, including Attorney General Daugherty, who thus far has failed to acknowledge or act on my letter to him of July 18, copy of which is hereto attached. No invisible government has ever shown more brazen effrontery than this dye monopoly, which was driven to cover in the House on July 21 by a vote of 209 to 193, including in the majority vote 96 Republicans and 113 Democrats. I am sure a much larger majority would have been recorded had the vote been needed, and I do not believe any dye embargo proposal can pass the House, whatever action may be taken elsewhere.

We may well be concerned over the power of these dye interests that reach to three Cabinet officers in their effort to perpetuate their present exclusive power in this country. Not one line of evidence in all the hearings, I am informed, suggests that this Government depended upon or received aid from any dye establishment in the country during the recent war, and the argument that we should preserve this half billion domestic dye monopoly, with its excessive prices and enormous power, because of approaching war and through need of private protection, is both preposterous and ridiculous. Secretaries Weeks and Denby are reported by the press to have written your committee simultaneously that the dye embargo should be continued for that reason. If so, they certainly had little information on which to base such statements, and caution is thrown to the winds when dye interests bring these two letters to your committee on the same day to influence committee action. I have no fear of their influence, either on your committee or on the body you represent, but I do express concern over any power that can secure such letters from such high sources, and more important that apparently has endeavored to smother efforts made to have the Government bring legal proceedings in order to set aside the Chemical Foundation Co. sale. Failure for practically three weeks to receive any reply from the Attorney General is an unusual oversight by the department that represents the Congress as well as the administration, and it is impossible to believe failure to acknowledge receipt of an official courteous letter was due to an oversight.

In my letter to Attorney General Daugherty, as you will note from the attached copy, I have stated that Francis P. Garvan and Joseph Choate, jr., while employed by the Government in the Alien Property Custodian's office in positions of control, conceived the idea of seizing alien patents then on file in the Patent Office and taking them over to themselves and their associates in a private capacity under the name of the Chemical Foundation Co., a Delaware corporation. They did this several months after the armistice was signed and seized some 4,500 patents, worth $10,000,000 or more, taken over at "private sale" for $250,000, or about 2 per cent of the actual value of such patents.

A copy of the testimony taken at congressional hearings attached hereto contains undisputed admissions of this fact by the parties who negotiated the sale to themselves. Thereafter I am informed and evidence will be produced, if need be, that they sought to validate this fraudulent sale by having a general provision in the Versailles treaty and after rejection of the treaty by the Senate, these same interests, acting through a prominent official of the present administration, who was advertised as vice president of the Chemical Foundation Co., again sought to secure validation of such contracts by insertion in the peace resolution recently passed by Congress. This effort was defeated by members of the Foreign Affairs Committee, as set forth in letter to Mr. Daugherty, hereto attached.

I do not speak of the international aspect of seizing such patents long after the war was closed, because that is a matter which carries its own argument, but the astounding proposition of covering up this alleged sale made by these public officials to themselves while apparently representing the Government is now further emphasized by threats from the Chemical Foundation Co. to sue the Government for a large amount of money, reputed to reach a half million dollars or more, in an effort to secure license payments made to the Government before the alleged sale.

The character of this dye embargo effort that put through the House last session a bill drawn by Mr. Choate, according to information in my possession, and paid $100,000 in lobby fees suggests what power lies behind these interests which obtains indorsements from high administrative officers, and apparently prevents action upon the facts stated.

The dye embargo can not be put through Congress, in my judgment, but these interests should be called to account and the fraudulent contract set aside in order to protect the Government's interests, and I ask your cooperation in trying to secure prosecution on such charges as are contained in my letter to Mr. Daugherty.

I am sending copies of this letter to the President and to others who would seem to speak with authority on matters herein set forth.

Very sincerely,

JAMES A. FREAR.

Congress and the country are entitled to know the facts and have prosecutions brought by the Government wherever overcharges or fraud have been perpetrated. During the war it became impossible to protect the public interest by proper accounting methods, and among thousands of contracts for war purposes, aggregating many billions of dollars, over seven hundred contracts were for aviation alone of $100,000 and upwards in every case. Four aircraft contracts have been disclosed containing many millions of dollars in fraudulent overcharges based on the facts here presented. It is not unfair to assume that if these prosecutions were brought and recoveries made, that many times the amount of overcharges contained in the four contracts set forth would be found in the 700 contracts of $100,000 and over which are given by the congressional aviation investigation in detail as follows:

[1] Estimated.

[2] Transferred to General Staff.

Mr. FREAR. I have here, for the next exhibit, a two-page statement, entitled "Construction at Air Service Stations," and says it gives the amounts under "Cost of buildings" to cover everything in construction at the several stations. There are several columns, and the first one is "Location," and the next one "Class or character," and the next one "Date of contract," and the next one "Date of purchase," and the next one "Cost of land," and the next one "Cost of buildings," and the next one "Payments to July 15, 1919," and the next one "Balance due," and the next one "Officer in charge, July 15, 1919," and the last one "Remarks." These columns have not been totaled, so I will not refer to them at this time, nor to this statement further than to say that I will introduce it as an exhibit; and apparently this gives the cost of the buildings and everything in the matter of construction at the several stations. That is your understanding, is it?

General MENOHER. Yes, sir.

Mr. FREAR. I will ask that it be marked "Exhibit No. 103 (General Menoher, Exhibit D)" and inserted in the record.

(The paper referred to is printed in full in the record, and is as follows:)

Mr. FREAR. The next exhibit which I have to offer is entitled "Summary of contracts, United States Spruce Production Corporation." That we asked for in question 6 on June 23, and it provides, first, the name of the contractor, and then the address, and then the date, and then the amount, and then the kind of lumber, and so on. This relates entirely, as I take it, to the spruce item; it does not relate to any other expenditures, for railways or anything of the kind, that were constructed. The general purpose was to include all expenditures, and I wonder if you could furnish us, in addition to that statement—and I did not discover until now that it was lacking—I wonder if you could furnish not only what was in the spruce-production contract; not only the spruce material alone, because that does not cover anywhere near the expenditures in the western section, and the committee expects to conduct some investigation there—but all expenditures out there?

General MENOHER. I can not right offhand say whether it does or does not include all expenditures.

Mr. FREAR. I have the totals of the various subjects, but they are not itemized in this way. I thought they would be of some value to us if we could get them in that way. Outside of strictly spruce production, if we could have the items of expense that are given under these various items mentioned in the next statement, so far as could be furnished, it would be of value to us.

General MENOHER. We will furnish that. Is there any limit?

Mr. FREAR. Yes; $100,000 would continue to be the limit. I would like to have this paper introduced in evidence and marked "Exhibit No. 104. (General Menoher, Exhibit E.)"

(The paper referred to, composed of five sheets of a photostatic copy of statement entitled "Summary of contracts," is here printed in full in the record as follows:)

EXHIBIT NO. 104. (GENERAL MENOHER, EXHIBIT E.)

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR OF AIR SERVICE,
Washington, July 30, 1919.

Hon. JAMES A. FREAR, Capitol.

DEAR MR. FREAR: In response to No. 6 of your questionnaire of June 23, I hand you herewith data on contracts taken over or entered into by the United States Spruce Production Corporation, together with a statement of cash receipts and disbursements of that corporation as of June 30, 1919.

I understood from our conversation of last Saturday that this data, for the present, will suffice for this question (No. 6), and that you will notify me if you later desire data on hardwood contracts.

Very truly yours,

DAVID S. SEATON,
Captain, A. S. M. A., Liaison Officer.

Report No. 637, Sixty-sixth Congress, second session, on Expenditures in the War Department, Aviation, gives many pages to a review of testimony of a hundred or more witnesses taken before that congressional committee, and throughout the report points out unauthorized charges made against the Government and paid by the Federal Treasury. Congressional investigations direct attention of the legal department of the Government to alleged violations of the law, and in that particular investigation, one of five separate investigations in War Department expenditures, the report on aviation specifically points out fraud and overcharges on the Government. Not one prosecution has resulted from such disclosures so far as can be ascertained.

The ablest attorney and jurist in the Cabinet is the Secretary of State, Hon. Charles E. Hughes, who made a report on aircraft frauds and profits during the war, acting under a commission from President Wilson. Mr. Hughes examined a few of the foregoing contracts and arrived at conclusions that warranted prosecution under the Criminal Code and civil proceedings to recover moneys to the Treasury, according to his report. Taking contracts for airplanes and aviation fields centered around Col. Edward A. Deeds at Dayton, his report states:

THIRD. PERSONAL INTERESTS.

There are no common-law offenses against the United States, and a charge of crime under Federal law must rest exclusively upon the violation of a Federal criminal statute. (United States v. Eaton, 144 U. S. 677, 687; United States v. George, 228 U. S. 422.)

The applicable statutes of the United States dealing with the question of personal interest of officers and agents of the Government in Government contracts are the following:

(1) Section 41 of the Criminal Code of the United States, formerly section 1783 of the Revised Statutes, provides:

"SEC. 41. No officer or agent of any corporation, joint-stock company, or association, and no member or agent of any firm, or person directly or indirectly interested in the pecuniary profits or contracts of such corporation, joint-stock company, association, or firm, shall be employed or shall act as an officer or agent of the United States for the transaction of business with such corporation, joint-stock company, association, or firm. Whoever shall violate the provision of this section shall be fined not more than $2,000 and imprisoned not more than two years."

Under this statute it is not enough that an interested person merely recommends or advises transactions with the Government. To constitute a violation of the statute, the interested person must "be employed" or "act as an officer or agent of the United States for the transaction of business with such corporation," etc.

(2) Section 3 of the act of August 10, 1917 (food and fuel control act), provides:

"SEC. 3. That no person acting either as a voluntary or paid agent or employee of the United States in any capacity, including an advisory capacity, shall solicit, induce, or attempt to induce any person or officer authorized to execute or to direct the execution of contracts on behalf of the United States to make any contract or give any order for the furnishing to the United States of work, labor, or services, or of materials, supplies, or other property of any kind or character, if such agent or employee has any pecuniary interest in such contract or order, or if he or any firm of which he is a member, or corporation, joint-stock company, or association of which he is an officer or stockholder, or in the pecuniary profits of which he is directly or indirectly interested, shall be a party thereto. Nor shall any agent or employee make, or permit any committee or other body of which he is a member to make, or participate in making, any recommendation concerning such contract or order to any council, board, or commission of the United States, or any member or subordinate thereof, without making to the best of his knowledge and belief a full and complete disclosure in writing to such council, board, commission, or subordinate of any and every pecuniary interest which he may have in such contract or order and of his interest in any firm, corporation, company, or association being a party thereto. Nor shall he participate in the awarding of such contract or giving such order. Any willful violation of any of the provisions of this section shall be punishable by a fine of not more than $10,000 or by imprisonment of not more than five years, or both: Provided, That the provisions of this section shall not change, alter, or repeal section 41 of chapter 321, Thirty-fifth Statutes at Large."

This section covers those who act in an advisory capacity. It has no application to transactions occurring before its passage.

It is apparent that the section was guardedly drawn and its limitations should be noted. The first sentence of the section applies to interested persons only where they "solicit, induce, or attempt to induce" any person or officer who is "authorized to execute, or to direct the execution of contracts," to make any contract or give any order for labor, services, materials, etc. The use of different expressions in the different clauses of the section suggest possible shades of meaning. The act of recommending does not come within the first sentence unless it is found to amount to "soliciting," "inducing," or "attempting to induce," nor does the first sentence cover solicitations addressed to others than the persons or officers duly authorized to make the contracts or give the orders.

The second sentence relates to "recommendations" by interested persons, but it is limited to recommendations made "to any council, board, or commission of the United States, or any member or subordinate thereof" in the absence of the disclosure described. Apparently this sentence does not cover recommendations made to individual officers acting under the authority conferred upon them by law, who are not members or subordinates of a "council, board, or commission."

The third sentence provides that the interested person shall not "participate in the awarding of such contract or giving such order." This would seem to relate to those who take part in the actual awarding of the contract or giving of the order and not to those who act in an advisory capacity only.

The section concludes with the proviso that its provisions shall not alter or repeal section 41 of the Criminal Code above quoted.

To come within these statutes an interested person must either (1) act as an officer or agent of the Government for the transaction of business with the concern in which he is interested, or (2) solicit, induce, or attempt to induce the person or officer who is authorized to execute or direct the execution of contracts to make a contract with, or give an order to, the concern to which the interest relates, or (3) take part in a recommendation to a "council, board, or commission" or subordinate or members thereof, without the disclosure stated, or (4) participate in the award of the contract or giving of the order.

In connection with these statutes attention may be called to the following provision, which appears as a rider in the appropriation act of March 3, 1917, immediately following an appropriation for the distribution of documents (39 Stat. p. 1106):

"Provided, That on and after July 1, 1919, no Government official or employee shall receive any salary in connection with his services as such an official or employee from any source other than the Government of the United States, except as may be contributed out of the treasury of any State, county, or municipality, and no person, association, or corporation shall make any contribution to, or in any way supplement the salary of, any Government official or employee for the services performed by him for the Government of the United States. Any person violating any of the terms of this proviso shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not less than $1,000 or imprisonment for not less than six months, or by both such fine and imprisonment, as the court may determine."

It will be noted that this provision, enacted in March, 1917, is not to be operative until July 1, 1919. It may be contended with force that this constitutes a legislative declaration, by implication, that the action described by the provision—that is, the mere supplementing of the pay of Government officials by private contributions—should not be deemed contrary to law prior to the date fixed.

INDIVIDUAL RELATIONS OF OFFICIALS.

* * * * * * *

OFFICERS OF THE SIGNAL CORPS FORMERLY IN CONTROL OF AIRCRAFT PRODUCTION.

(1) The Chief Signal Officer: It does not appear that General Squier had any interest in any corporation or concern transacting business with the Signal Corps. The defects in the organization, which was created under his direction for the purpose of aircraft production, are matters distinct from any question of personal interest and will be considered in another division of this report.

(2) Col. Edward A. Deeds: The charges pertaining to personal interest in Government contracts relate particularly to Col. Edward A. Deeds and grow out of the highly suggestive transactions with his former business associates at Dayton. These transaction have been subjected to careful scrutiny.

Colonel Deeds was born near Granville, Ohio, on March 12, 1874. There is testimony that he once said that his name originally was "Dietz." No public record has been found to this effect. Colonel Deeds denies making the remark attributed to him and states that his family has borne the name of Deeds for at least four generations—his great-grandfather of that name coming from Pennsylvania. For many years Colonel Deeds was an officer of the National Cash Register Co., and was one of several connected with that organization who were indicted in the Federal District Court for the Southern District of Ohio, in 1912, for violation of the Sherman Antitrust Act. Upon the trial Deeds, with other defendants, was convicted, but this conviction was set aside by the Circuit Court of Appeals (Patterson v. United States, 222 Fed. 599), and the prosecution went no further.

At the time of our entry into the war Mr. Deeds had large business interests at Dayton. His intimate business associates were Charles F. Kettering and H. E. Talbott. Mr. Deeds and Mr. Kettering (an inventor and engineer of ability) have been jointly associated in many enterprises with equal shares, it being their policy to organize corporations and to take their respective interests in stocks. Mr. Deeds has supplied the financial talent and Mr. Kettering, who is without any aptitude for business details, the engineering skill. They have had, and still have, a common agent of a highly confidential sort, George B. Smith, of Dayton, who holds the power of attorney of each, keeps their respective books, has charge of their bank accounts, signs their checks, and generally looks after their financial affairs. They are still associated in various undertakings and their relations are of the most intimate character.

In 1904 Kettering was employed in the National Cash Register Co. as a designer in the engineering department, and later he became associated with Deeds in the development of what is known as the Delco ignition systems for automobiles. In the course of this development Deeds and Kettering organized the Dayton Engineering Laboratories Co., known as the Delco Co. The enterprise was successful and the common stock was sold by Deeds and Kettering in 1916 to the United Motors Corporation for several million dollars in cash and certain shares of stock. Deeds and Kettering each retained a few shares of preferred stock; Deeds continued as president of the corporation, with a salary of $60,000 a year, and Kettering as vice president, with a salary of $50,000.

In April, 1915, Deeds, Kettering, H. E. Talbott, sr., and his son, H. E. Talbott, jr., organized the Dayton Metal Products Co. with a capital stock of $200,000. The stock was held as follows: Talbott, sr., 900 shares; Deeds, 500 shares; Kettering, 499 shares; Talbott, jr., 99 shares; Charles H. Mead, 1 share; and George B. McCann, 1 share. Prior to our entry into the war this company had profitable fuse contracts with the British Government and had accumulated a considerable surplus. It appears that in the spring of 1917 both Deeds and Talbott were appointed on the subcommittee on fuses and detonators of the Munitions Standards Board. In 1916 the company had a contract with the Navy Department for fuses, and it received other fuse contracts from the Navy and the Ordnance Department of the Army in 1917. As vice president of this company Deeds had a salary of $25,000 a year. The relation of the Dayton Metal Products Co. to aircraft production is that this company, in the latter part of the year 1917, acquired all the stock (save four qualifying shares) of the Dayton-Wright Airplane Co. and also has subcontracts for metal parts with contractors making airplanes and engines. The Dayton Metal Products Co. also subscribed and paid for 1,000 shares (par value $100,000) of the stock of the Lincoln Motor Co. which was organized to build Liberty engines and has a paid-up capital stock of $850,000.

In September, 1916, Deeds and Kettering organized the Domestic Building Co., of Dayton, for the purpose of erecting and financing plants for the use of various companies. The capital stock is now $1,000,000, of which all but four qualifying shares are held by Deeds and Kettering in equal parts. This company owned the land and erected the building acquired by the Dayton-Wright Airplane Co. for its principal airplane plant.

On April 9, 1917, the Dayton-Wright Airplane Co. was incorporated with a capital stock of $500,000 by Deeds, Kettering, H. E. Talbott, and H. E. Talbott, jr., in conjunction with Orville Wright. They had taken over the former Wright organization and thus had started an airplane enterprise at Dayton in a small way in the summer of 1916. The larger enterprise of the Dayton-Wright Airplane Co. was launched about the time of our entry into the war, manifestly with the expectation of obtaining Government contracts. While Deeds was one of the incorporators, he did not become a stockholder, the subscriptions for the first 5,000 shares being as follows: H. E. Talbott, 1,990 shares; C. F. Kettering, 2,000 shares; H. E. Talbott, jr., 900 shares; George H. Mead, 10 shares; and C. A. Craighead, 10 shares. In August, 1917, the capital stock was increased to $1,000,000 ($600,000 common and $400,000 preferred). The new common stock was taken by the Messrs. Talbott and Kettering in the proportion of two-fifths, two-fifths, and one-fifth. There were early negotiations for a Government contract, and as early as June 12, 1917, a contract with the company was recommended by the Aircraft Production Board. The contract was executed on August 17, 1917 (under date of August 1, 1917), and was for 40 Standard J–1 training planes at the fixed price of $6,500 each. For this, there was substituted the contract dated September 7, 1917, which was also recommended by the Aircraft Production Board and was approved by General Squier. This contract was for 400 Standard J airplanes, 2,000 De Haviland 9's, and 1,500 Martinsydes with spare parts. By later modifications the Martinsydes and De Haviland 9's were omitted and provision was made for 4,000 De Haviland 4's. These contracts were on a cost-plus basis, the estimated amount involved being upward of $30,000,000. There was to be a fixed profit of $620 on each Standard J plane and $875 on each De Haviland, making a total fixed profit of about $3,750,000, exclusive of fixed profit on spare parts covered by the contract, thus expected to be earned, according to the contemplated deliveries, before the end of 1918. The contract also provided for additional profits to the extent of 25 per cent of the saving under the bogey or estimated cost of the planes ($7,000 on the De Havilands), and it is estimated that the additional profit on this basis would have amounted to over $2,600,000. When the bogey cost of $7,000 was fixed letters were obtained from the Dayton-Wright Airplane Co. and from the Fisher Body Corporation (which also had a contract for De Havilands), that after 250 machines had been produced there would be an equitable adjustment if the bogey cost was found to be "materially wrong." Accordingly, a contract is now about to be signed reducing the bogey cost to $5,000 and the fixed profit to $625 per plane. Even at this rate the fixed profit on the 4,000 De Havilands will be $2,500,000, and it is believed that there will be an additional profit through saving under the bogey cost and on spare parts of not less than $1,000,000. In August and September, 1917, when the first Government contracts were awarded, the capital stock of the company ($1,000,000) had not been paid in. It was not paid in until December 1, 1917, when, in one transaction, the stock was paid for and all the shares, preferred and common, save five qualifying shares, were transferred to the Dayton Metal Products Co., which thus became and still remains the owner of the Dayton-Wright Airplane Co. As the latter company practically received nothing on the issue of its capital stock save the fixed property represented by its plants, it was lacking in working capital, and this at the outset was supplied by various loans and advances of the interested parties. In December the Government agreed to advance the company $2,500,000, of which $1,500,000 was advanced at once.

The name of Orville Wright was used in this enterprise, but his chief activity has been as a consulting engineer in connection with experimental work. He has not been responsible for production. Mr.

Kettering is an engineer of ability, but his work also has been that of experimental engineering; he is not a manufacturing or production expert. Much emphasis is placed by the parties concerned upon the fact that they were able to avail themselves of the old Wright organization, which had been continued as already stated. But this was a very slender basis for the prompt selection of this newly organized company, which had not even completed its financial arrangements, as one of the few companies immediately admitted to the advantages of large and highly profitable Government contracts. The promoters of this enterprise, not content with these profits which were to accrue to them, either directly or through their ownership of the Dayton Metal Products Co., at once took advantage of the opportunity to increase their gains by salaries as executive officers of the Dayton-Wright Airplane Co. Dating from August 1, 1917, the salaries thus allowed were as follows: H. E. Talbott, sr., $35,000; C. F. Kettering, $35,000; and H. E. Talbott, jr. (30 years old, who was made president of the company), $30,000. Talbott, sr., was at the time receiving, and continued to receive $60,000 a year as president of the Dayton Metal Products Co.; Kettering received a salary of $25,000 from the Dayton Metal Products Co. and $50,000 from the Delco Co.; and Talbott, jr., was also receiving a salary of $18,000 from the Dayton Metal Products Co.

There would seem to be no question but that the members of the Aircraft Production Board in recommending contracts had confidence in the capacity of those undertaking the venture, and the previous success of this group while Mr. Deeds had been associated with them was well known. But the fact remains that practically at the inception of the Government's aviation activity in connection with the war and within the sphere of Colonel Deeds's important, if not commanding, influence, his former business associates were placed at once through Government contracts in a position where they had the assurance of very large profits upon a relatively small investment of their own money, and in addition were able to secure generous salaries, which they charged against the Government as part of the cost of manufacture.

That Deeds, Kettering, and Talbott continued to be on the most intimate and confidential footing in connection with the prosecution of the Government work by the Dayton-Wright Airplane Co. is apparent from their correspondence, of which the following are excerpts:

[Letter Deeds to Kettering, June 13, 1917.]

WASHINGTON, June 13, 1917.

Mr. C. F. KETTERING,
City National Bank Building, Dayton, Ohio.

MY DEAR C. F.: You will be interested to know that the standard training machine is going to be called the U. S. primary training, and will not be called the Curtiss J. N. This was decided last week, and I forgot to tell you when in Dayton.

Provision will be made for either Mr. Coffin or myself to appear before the S. A. E. (Society of Automotive Engineers), and as I am one of the committee of arrangements, will see that the plans of the Aircraft Production Board get properly before the association.

Relative to the design of planes, I do not care to write what is being done, but will discuss it with you when I get home and you will see that we have already gone away down the pike in this matter. Everything is lining up now in pretty good shape.

Yours very truly,

E. A.

[Telegram Deeds to Talbott, July 3, 1917.]

JULY 3, 1917.

Mr. H. E. TALBOTT, Dayton, Ohio:

General Squier went direct to Detroit. Will probably spend Fourth at his old home in Michigan. May be in Dayton Thursday or Friday, arriving there from Detroit or from Champaign, Ill. Harold, Kettering, and Wright can take care of him. He will be interested in the Dayton-Wright factory and laboratory, Orville Wright laboratory, and especially Mr. Kettering's views on scientific subjects. In general, he is highly technical.

[Telegram Kettering to Deeds, August 4, 1917.]

DAYTON, OHIO, August 4, 1917.

E. A. DEEDS,
Room 527, Munsey Building, Washington, D. C.:

We believe all confidential telegrams should be sent to Mr. H. E. Talbott, sr., City National Bank Building, or George B. Smith, instead of the Dayton-Wright Airplane Co.

AUGUST 4, 1917.

Mr. C. F. KETTERING,
City National Bank Building, Dayton, Ohio:

Hereafter all confidential telegrams will be sent to H. E. Talbott, sr., instead of to the Dayton-Wright Airplane Co.

[Telegram Deeds to Talbott, September 16, 1917.]

OLD POINT, VA., September 16, 1917.

H. E. TALBOTT, Dayton, Ohio:

For your personal information as coming from your local attorney. Judge Advocate General has ruled it legal for Government to select one, contractor one, and the two a third, as appraisers of market value of plant at expiration of contract. If you care to raise the question the above will be found to be the final ruling.

E. A. DEEDS.

When this last telegram, which puts in a stronger light the relations of the parties, was sent, Deeds was an officer in the Army. This highly improper conduct in holding communication in this manner with his former business associate in a transaction pending between the Dayton-Wright Co. and the Government department in Colonel Deeds's charge demands the attention of the military authorities.

But evidence of favoritism, influence, or confidential communications of this sort, however otherwise reprehensible, do not make out criminal liability under the statutes above quoted, unless it appears that the representative of the Government has a pecuniary interest in the Government contract or order, or is an officer or stockholder of, or has a pecuniary interest in, a corporation, firm, or association which is a party to the Government contract or order. And the question is whether Colonel Deeds had such an interest. His statement is that he had no such interest, but, on the contrary, had given up large salaries to devote himself to the Government service.

The facts with respect to the disposition of Colonel Deeds's interests (so far as pertinent to this inquiry) and the method of disposition are as follows:

UNITED MOTORS CORPORATION, DAYTON ENGINEERING LABORATORIES CO.

* * * The only transfer made by him of any of his shares in that company was by gift to his wife. He indorsed, for transfer, the certificates for 17,500 shares on October 13, 1917, and they were transferred to Mrs. Deeds's name on October 17, 1917. * * *

* * * If there were evidence that Colonel Deeds had acted as officer or agent of the Government in the transactions with the Delco Co., or with the United Motors Corporation, prior to October 13, 1917, there would be ground by reason of his interest for charging a violation of the statute, and it may be doubted whether there was then or thereafter such a transfer as would avail to take the case out of the statutory prohibition. But there is no evidence that Deeds acted for the Government in any transaction with either of these corporations. So far as appears, the Government made no contracts for Delco ignition either with the Delco Co. or with the United Motors Corporation. The contracts for the Delco system were made by the contractors who were manufacturing the engines under contracts with the Government, and the dealings with the Delco Co. or with the United Motors Corporation in relation to the Delco system were had by these contractors. * * *

* * * His statement to the Aircraft Production Board on August 28, 1917, that he had made a bona fide transfer of all his stock in the United Motors Corporation, when the stock had not in fact been transferred, and at most he contemplated a gift of the stock to his wife, was neither candid nor truthful, and is certainly not to be regarded as a "full and complete disclosure." But in the absence of proof of solicitation, inducement, or recommendation by him, or action on his part as an officer or agent of the Government in transactions with the United Motors Corporation or the Delco Co., there are no facts bringing the case within the statutory prohibition.

DOMESTIC BUILDING CO.

In his letter of August 28, 1917, to the Aircraft Production Board, Colonel Deeds stated that he had made a bona fide transfer of his stock in this company. This was not true. It appears that on that date he resigned the office of president of the company, but he did not dispose of his stock. The stock of that company is still held in equal portions by Deeds and Kettering.

Colonel Deeds was plainly led to make the statement in his letter by the fact that the Domestic Building Co. had acquired the land and had erected the building which was in course of completion and was then occupied and intended to be used as the principal plant of the Dayton-Wright Airplane Co. for the manufacture of airplanes. It is said that in anticipation of a lease of the property to the Dayton-Wright Airplane Co. it had been agreed prior to August 28, 1917, that Deeds's stock in the Domestic Building Co. should be sold to Kettering. But there is not sufficient evidence of a definite and binding agreement to that effect, or of anything more than a loose understanding between intimates, whose arrangements could at any time be adjusted to suit their mutual convenience. Certainly there had been no transfer of the stock. It was not until November that there was an adjustment of accounts with this company, and then, instead of a sale of his stock by Deeds, he retained his stock in the Domestic Building Co., and the plant erected by that company was purchased by Talbott, sr., Kettering, and Talbott, jr., who at once transferred it to the Dayton-Wright Airplane Co. * * *

DAYTON-WRIGHT AIRPLANE CO.

Colonel Deeds's statement in his letter of August 28, 1917, that he had never been a stockholder in this company was true. The stock is owned by the Dayton Metal Products Co., and if Colonel Deeds had or has any interest through stock ownership in the profits on its contracts with the Government this interest must be derived from an interest in the stock of the Dayton Metal Products Co.

His relation to the organization of the Dayton-Wright Airplane Co. is this: He was an incorporator, and while he did not subscribe for stock and none was issued in his name, the payment of the stock of the company to the extent of upward of four-fifths of its par value was made, in substance, by the transfer to the company of the plant built by the Domestic Building Co., owned by Deeds and Kettering, and this company received therefor unsecured notes of Talbott, sr., Kettering, and Talbott, jr., only a small part of which has been paid. Thus, Deeds and Kettering, through the Domestic Building Co., virtually furnished the main plant of the Dayton-Wright Airplane Co. on a credit to the Talbotts and Kettering. The transaction was as follows:

The airplane factory was erected on a tract which the Domestic Building Co. had acquired from the Moraine Development Co. (a corporation in which Deeds and Kettering were largely interested) at a price little over $753 an acre. The building was intended for the use of the Domestic Engineering Co., another concern owned by Deeds and Kettering, which was engaged in the business of supplying Delco lights for general illuminating purposes. It was later decided that it should be used by the Dayton-Wright Airplane Co., which entered into possession.

Still later, it was arranged that the syndicate composed of Talbott, sr., Kettering, and Talbott, jr., should purchase the plant from the Domestic Building Co. and convey it to the Dayton-Wright Airplane Co. In November, 1917 (while the building was still incomplete), Mr. Allan R. Smart, a public accountant (of Barrow, Wade, Guthrie & Co.), made an adjustment of the accounts of Deeds, Kettering, Talbott, sr., and Talbott, jr., for various advances, and a balance was struck of $683,732.16 as owing to the Domestic Building Co. In this adjustment the land (25.55 acres) was taken at $1,200 an acre, and the building at the amount of the expenditures upon it, making the price of the plant (called the Moraine plant) $836,401.08. The balance of $683,732.16 was covered by three individual notes of Talbott, sr., Kettering, and Talbott, jr., in the proportion of two-fifths, two-fifths, and one-fifth, as follows: H. E. Talbott, $273,492.87; C. F. Kettering, $273,492.87; and H. E. Talbott, jr., $136,746.43. All of the notes were dated November 4, 1917, and were payable to the Domestic Building Co. one year after date with 6 per cent interest. The notes are unsecured. The makers of the notes have paid interest quarterly; and, in addition, Talbott, sr., has paid $3,492.87 on the principal of his note, reducing it to $270,000, and Talbott, jr., has paid $26,746.43 on the principal of his note, reducing it to $110,000. It appears that Mr. Kettering has made payments of $6,000. This transaction left the Talbotts and Kettering as the owners of the Moraine plant, which the Dayton Wright Airplane Co. was operating, and the stock of the Dayton Wright Airplane Co. for which they had subscribed had not been paid in.

The payment of the subscriptions for the stock of the Dayton Wright Airplane Co., the concurrent payment by that company for two plants (the Moraine plant, already mentioned, and another at Miamisburg), and the transfer of its stock, thus paid for, to the Dayton Metal Products Co. were effected by an exchange of checks on December 1, 1917. Shortly before, the Miamisburg plant had been acquired by Talbott, sr. (for the syndicate) for the sum of $60,000 and was turned over to the Dayton Wright Airplane Co. at $127,202, the profit being divided between himself, Kettering, and Talbott, jr., according to their respective interests in the syndicate.

To accomplish the desired result, the following procedure was adopted:

The Dayton Wright Airplane Co. gave to the syndicate its check for the sum of $955,071.25, made up of the purchase price of the Moraine and Miamisburg plants ($836,401.08 less an item of interest ($8,531.83) for the Moraine, or main plant, and $127,202 for the Miamisburg plant). The Dayton Metal Products Co. gave its checks to the syndicate for $183,459.55 for various balances of accounts and for $999,500, the purchase price at par of the stock of the Dayton Wright Airplane Co. (less five shares retained). The syndicate thus received checks to the aggregate amount of $2,138,030.80. The syndicate gave their check to the Dayton Wright Airplane Co. in payment of the capital stock of $1,000,000 and another check to the Dayton Metal Products Co. for $1,136,537.20 as the purchase price of certain securities which the Dayton Metal Products Co. sold to the syndicate, making the total of the syndicate's checks $2,136,537.20. The Dayton Wright Airplane Co. gave its check to the Dayton Metal Products Co. in repayment of advances for $44,928.75, the difference between the sum of $955,071.25 paid by the company for the plants and the sum of $1,000,000 received for its stock. The transaction was accomplished with a minimum use of cash (less than $1,500), and as a result the Dayton Metal Products Co. had all the stock (save five shares) of the Dayton Wright Airplane Co.; the Dayton Wright Airplane Co. had the Moraine and the Miamisburg plants; Messrs. Talbotts and Kettering had the securities which they had purchased from the Dayton Metal Products Co.; and the Domestic Building Co. (owned by Deeds and Kettering) continued to hold the notes which the Talbotts and Kettering had given to that company on the settlement in November.

* * * * * * *

DAYTON METAL PRODUCTS CO.

Colonel Deeds originally held one-fourth of the stock of this company, or 500 shares. It appears from the minutes of the board of directors that at a meeting of the board in Dayton on May 21, 1917, President Talbott stated that the company had been advised by the Ordnance Department of the Army "that, in all probability, the entire facilities of the company would be utilized for munition work, and, in all probability, contracts would be given to the company as soon as appropriations were made by the Government." It is further set forth "that Mr. E. A. Deeds explained that he had been called to Washington and requested to take place on some of the committees of the Council of National Defense; that he had been to Washington and that he had accepted the call; and he therefore desired it that he might act as uninterested, directly or indirectly, in any manufacturing plant which was contemplating business with the Government, and that he desired to offer his resignation as vice president and as director of the company." The minutes show the acceptance of this resignation and that Mr. Kettering was elected vice president. The minutes of the meeting of May 21, 1917, conclude with the following statement:

"At this meeting Mr. Deeds offered for sale and discussed probable purchasers for his stock in the Dayton Metal Products Co., and Mr. Deeds offered to the directors his entire holdings of stock at its book value less 15 per cent to cover costs and probable losses in view of the possibility of no future Government contracts being secured and the business of the company would have to be readjusted into lines being developed by the experimental department."

Some time subsequently—in the early part of the year 1918—the accountant drew a line across the last-mentioned statement in the minutes. He explains that he did not consider it "a corporate record," but a matter between the stockholders.

The testimony of the parties concerned is that Talbott, sr., Kettering, and Talbott, jr., purchased all Deeds's shares in the Dayton Metal Products Co. at their book value as of May 1, 1917, less 15 per cent, and gave in settlement of the purchase price their notes, as follows:

H. E. Talbott, 200 shares	$207,706
C. F. Kettering, 200 shares	207,706
H. E. Talbott, jr., 100 shares	103,853

The notes were dated May 22, 1917, were payable to Deeds's order one year after date, with interest at 4½ per cent, and were placed in the hands of George B. Smith, the confidential agent of Deeds and Kettering. The notes were wholly unsecured. According to the stock certificate book the old certificates were canceled and new certificates issued to the Talbotts and Kettering under date of May 22, 1917.

It is not only open to doubt whether the transaction described in the minute book took place on May 21, 1917, but on all the evidence it is reasonably clear that it did not take place on that date. The minutes are typewritten and pasted in the minute book. No one of the parties is willing to testify positively that the proceedings described in the minutes took place on that day. Mr. S. S. King, of the Dayton Lumber & Manufacturing Co., has testified that he and Deeds went to Washington on the same train on May 18, 1917, and that they were in communication every day in Washington, from May 19 to 23. Furthermore, it appears that on May 21, 1917, when Mr. Deeds is represented as making his statement at the meeting of directors in Dayton, he was making his first appearance, according to the minutes of the Aircraft Production Board, at a meeting held by that board on that day in Washington. He himself testifies that he was in Washington on that day. While Mr. Deeds is represented as resigning his office as vice president of the Dayton Metal Products Co. in May, 1917, he continued to draw his salary until the end of June, 1917. The notes were placed in the custody of the confidential agent Smith, but he made no entry in Deeds's bills receivable book of these notes until September. It does not satisfactorily appear, in view of the nature of some of the items, that the adjustment of accounts in fixing the book value and the determination of the amounts of the notes could have been made before June 30, 1917. There are stock certificates bearing the date of May 22, 1917, and purporting to have been issued after the issue of the new certificates to the Talbotts and Kettering for the Deeds share, but these certificates were issued to members of the Talbott family, dividing the shares he had formerly held.

Upon all the evidence it is not established that the stock was purchased as early as May 22, 1917, and there are many indications that the transaction was dated back to that date.

However, Colonel Deeds's stock was actually transferred on the books of the company, and the notes dated May 22, 1917, were given apparently not later than September, 1917.

On December 31, 1917, interest was paid by the makers on their respective notes to that date; and interest was paid quarterly thereafter. On January 18, 1918, Talbott, sr., paid $7,706 on account of the principal, reducing his note to $200,000; in February, 1918, Talbott, jr., paid $3,853 on account of the principal, reducing his note to $100,000, and on September 11, 1918, Kettering paid, on account of his note, the sum of $10,000.

If the transaction was a bona fide sale of the stock, Colonel Deeds thereby parted with all his stock interest in the Dayton Metal Products Co., and thus did not have, by virtue of an interest in that stock, an interest in the profits of the Dayton Wright Airplane Co. The parties all deny that there is any secret agreement or option or understanding of any sort for a retransfer of the shares to Colonel Deeds, or for a sharing of profits with him.

To conclude: The fact is that the transfer of the shares in the Dayton Metal Products Co., which owns the stock of the Dayton Wright Airplane Co., was made to Colonel Deeds's intimate business associates on their unsecured notes, which are overdue and unpaid save to a small extent. But there is no proof upon which it can be charged that Colonel Deeds retained an interest in the Dayton Metal Products Co., and thereby in the Dayton Wright Airplane Co.

OTHER AVIATION ACTIVITIES CENTERED AT DAYTON—THE WILBUR WRIGHT FIELD.

This is a tract of about 2,245 acres leased to the Government by the Miami conservancy district, of which Mr. Deeds was the head. It was a portion of the area selected by the Miami conservancy district for the impounding of waters in the event of a serious flood. The property was acquired by the Government for a flying field and was developed by the erection of hangars, barracks, a storehouse, and other structures. Upward of $3,000,000 has been expended by the Government in this development.

* * * * * * *

It appears from the testimony of Ezra M. Kuhns, the secretary of the Miami conservancy district, that at the time of our entry into the war the district had been able to secure options on only about 300 acres of the tract in question, but when negotiations with the Government began there was swift action. Mr. Deeds had brought the matter to the attention of Mr. Waldon as early as April 24, 1917, and had sent to him one of the district's engineers with maps. The following telegrams show the activity of Deeds and Talbott:

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 30, 1917.

EZRA M. KUHNS,
Miami Conservancy District, Dayton, Ohio:

Ohio State University is ordered to-day to cooperate with the Dayton school, and Magruder, Lord, and Knight instructed to report at Camp Borden, Canada, Monday to learn course of instruction. Publicity will follow these instructions, and no one outside of Signal Corps officers know of our plan for the larger school, and, so far as everyone is concerned, Dayton school is the Wright Field civilian school. Think you should advise Wright, Morgan, Harold Talbott, and Kettering, so that they will not disclose anything inadvertently. The civilian school will continue, regardless of what is done with the other plan, and Ohio State will give the preliminary instruction in military tactics and all classroom work, while the Wright Field Co. will give the instruction in aviation. Harold Talbott should be the channel through which publicity is given out, and there is no objection using the last statement, if called upon.

E. A. DEEDS,
Care New Willard, Washington, D. C.:

Contracts remaining secured to cover 2,500 acres will be closed by to-morrow evening. Will start Monday on immediate possession of land so the fields will be ready when buildings are finished. This applies to central 1,000 acres in front of building. Builders may retain use of buildings and barns for a few months, and in some cases until winter, but main fields must be prepared without delay if they are to be used this fall. Think best to give no reason for immediate possession, and feel sure we can arrange it. We can arrange financial matters as suggested. Wire if you approve.

With few exceptions owners can, if necessary, continue to live in their houses for a year, thus avoiding necessity of moving this summer. Their teams will be employed, giving revenue to them. District wants to try out flying on a large scale, and wants to try experiment at once. This is only a suggestion. You doubtless may have a better one. May be necessary to exercise option at once, and if so, I will gladly go on district's note for full amount.

Suggest Kuhns, Emmett, Grant, and Brown be here Monday morning for conference on conservancy bringing description of entire 2,500. Tax value and tax rate of property under discussion. Will be helpful. Publicity can be delayed at this end without difficulty. Everything moving nicely.

E. A. DEEDS.

The partiality for this site does not appear to have been warranted by any advantages it can be said to possess. Indeed, no satisfactory reason appears for the securing of so large a tract, as apparently 1,400 or 1,500 acres would have answered the purpose.

Fields of about 650 acres were selected at Rantoul and Detroit for two-quadron fields and the field at Dayton was for four squadrons. Both the leasehold interest and the option to purchase are subject to a flood easement. The evidence is that in case of a flood, such as that of the year 1913, the impounded water—that is, after the completion of the dam, which it is understood will be completed in two or three years—would cover the lowland to a depth of about 40 feet; the lowest hangar would have 24 feet of water—that is, over the eaves—and the highest hangar would have 13 feet of water. The barracks and various buildings which stand on higher ground would not be seriously affected. The warehouse itself—a large structure—is in a dry place; and the suggestion that some of the property stored there during the past year has suffered from moisture is not supported. Aside from the consequences of flood in the Miami Valley and the use of the area as a detention basin, it should be added that a considerable part of the tract consists of swamp land which is unsuitable for the use for which it was leased.

THE CONTRACT FOR THE DEVELOPMENT OF THE WILBUR WRIGHT FIELD.

The next step was the placing of the contract for development. The contract was signed by Captain Edgar under the direction of the Chief Signal Officer and its terms were not unreasonable. It was on a cost-plus basis with a sliding scale, which as applied to the amount actually expended gives the contractor a commission of 7 per cent with a maximum limit of $140,000. The contractor, the Dayton Lumber & Manufacturing Co., was recommended by Deeds. This company had done nothing in an extensive way for several years, having been engaged since the year 1908 in selling material, and in operating a planing mill and a lumber yard. Its capital stock was $75,000. Prior to April, 1917, one S. S. King had owned 117 of the 750 shares. King's holdings were then increased to 417 shares, and in acquiring these 300 shares King was backed by H. E. Talbott, who as president of the City National Bank of Dayton arranged for a loan of $60,000 for the purpose. King wrote Talbott on April 25, 1917: "As to the ownership of the stock, if you see fit to back me up in it this can be determined in any manner that you see fit." It was not long after the control of the Dayton Lumber & Manufacturing Co. was thus acquired that the arrangement was made for giving to this company the contract to develop Wilbur Wright field. King's narrative of the circumstances in which this contract was obtained is very illuminating, and affords a notable contrast to the difficulties of many who unavailingly sought contracts with the Government.

King was sent for by Talbott and informed that he (King) had been "recommended down at Washington to assume the responsibility of putting up some buildings for Wilbur Wright field," and suggested that he immediately set about effecting an organization for the purpose. This was on Saturday, May 17, 1917, and on Sunday Talbott telephoned to King, asking him to leave immediately for Washington. Accordingly King went to Washington on Sunday afternoon, taking the same train with Deeds. It was arranged that King should call the next day at Deeds's office, which he was informed was on the same floor with that of the contracting officer, Captain Edgar. Accordingly on the following day, May 19, Deeds introduced King to Captain Edgar, and in two or three days, on May 23, the contract was signed. As Colonel Edgar testifies: "King was brought down here by Colonel Deeds and recommended to us as a proper contractor, the most available in Dayton for the work."

The following is a portion of the correspondence between Deeds and Talbott relating to this contract:

JUNE 1, 1917.

DEEDS,
Aircraft Production Board,
United States War Department, Washington, D. C.:

Steam shovel and large trench digging machine now in place. Three cutting gangs at work. Teams and tractors on ground. Carpenters finishing sheds and office for construction purposes. Foundation excavation in progress. Have plant and equipment for six concrete gangs which will be at work early in the week. Sidewalks progressing. Repairing highways to facilitate trucking operations from Dayton. Purchased five new Packard trucks to augment transportation over the existing available trucks. Next week will see everything booming along. All material, lumber, cement, planks, board roofing located and on the way. Wish you would think over method of authority which can be given me to rush transportation of railway cars. This looks like the main point of congestion. All departments of construction now organized with experienced and competent supervisors and foremen. All this in spite of the fact that it has rained every day since Waring has been here.

Despite the indications of these messages, and of his transactions with King, Mr. Talbott testifies positively that he had no interest in the enterprise, except as a citizen of Dayton, and got nothing out of it beyond 6 per cent interest received by the Dayton Metal Products Co. on money loaned.

King had no capital available for the enterprise, nor had the Dayton Lumber & Manufacturing Co. King's testimony is:

"Q. Did you have the capital to swing that?—A. Not without assistance.

"Q. Where did you expect to get the assistance?—A. When I talked to Mr. Talbott he told me on the Saturday afternoon, I said, 'Well, this will take a good deal of money.' He said, 'Yes, but,' he said, 'you need not worry about that. We will work out some way for that.' He said, 'I do not know how we will work it out, but we will work out some way for that.'"

The financial assistance that King needed was obtained upon the credit of the Dayton Metal Products Co., supported by the personal guaranties of H. E. Talbott and C. F. Kettering. Notes of the Dayton Lumber & Manufacturing Co. to the extent of $400,000 were discounted by the Dayton Metal Products Co. with the American Exchange National Bank of New York. It was originally contemplated that these notes should be indorsed by Deeds and Talbott, as is shown by the following extract of a letter to Mr. Talbott from W. H. Bennett, vice president of the American Exchange National Bank, under date of June 25, 1917:

"Referring to the conversation which the writer had with you on Thursday, I have conferred with Mr. Kenzel, assistant cashier of the Federal reserve bank, and upon your statement that the Dayton Lumber & Manufacturing Co. is under contract with the United States Government for the preparation of the aviation field at Dayton, and that said company is to receive payments on the 10th of each month on the presentation of receipted vouchers for work completed in the previous month; and that it is the intention of the Dayton Metal Products Co. to make advances to said Dayton Lumber & Manufacturing Co. of amounts necessary to carry on the work, he ruled that the paper executed by the Dayton Lumber & Manufacturing Co. and indorsed by the Dayton Metal Products Co. to cover funds so advanced will be eligible for rediscount with the Federal reserve bank.

"Therefore we feel that it will probably be of mutual advantage to provide for the advance of $400,000 requested from us by a three-months' note executed by the Dayton Lumber & Manufacturing Co. to the order of the Dayton Metal Products Co. and indorsed by Mr. H. E. Talbott and Mr. E. A. Deeds. If you so desire, the indorsement of the individuals can be secured by an assignment from the Dayton Metal Products Co. of certain securities now in safe-keeping with us to the individuals referred to."

It was subsequently arranged that the indorsements should be those of Talbott and Kettering, who also gave their separate agreement of guaranty. The avails of discounted paper were passed by the American Exchange Bank to the credit of the Dayton Metal Products Co. It appears from the accounts between the Dayton Lumber & Manufacturing

Co. and the Dayton Metal Products Co. that, while the latter company ultimately paid the notes, their proceeds were used in large part from time to time for the benefit of the Dayton Metal Products Co.

The credit to the Dayton Lumber & Manufacturing Co. thus extended to it upon its notes was furnished without security, or, as Mr. Talbott put it, with "no further security except in the man (King). I trusted the man; I knew his contract." After the contract had been obtained, King increased his stockholdings in the Dayton Lumber & Manufacturing Co. by the purchase of 104 additional shares, borrowing for the purpose $20,000 from the Dayton National Bank.

It appears that the total amount paid by the Government under the contract with the Dayton Lumber & Manufacturing Co. to August 14, 1918, amounted to $3,115,161.94. This represents the amount paid for the cost of the work—that is, for lumber, materials, etc. The commission or profits of the contractor, which had been paid to that date, amounted to $102,436.04. There has been considerable trouble in connection with the contract, and the accounts are far from being in satisfactory shape. An audit of the books of the company was made by Barrow, Wade, Guthrie & Co. to November 30, 1917. They reported that they found "the pay rolls very incomplete, full of errors, corrections, and erasures," and that there was "abundant evidence that great laxity and carelessness has been exhibited by the employees of the company, especially those in the paymaster's department." These statements are amply confirmed by the evidence in this investigation, and the accounts are in course of being reaudited by Government accountants. The consideration of the various irregularities in the accounts and of the questions to which they give rise must await the result of this examination. It will be observed that the Government has withheld a large part of the compensation of the contractor until a satisfactory adjustment has been made. Of the profits received from the Government, it would appear that the moneys have been retained in the business of the company, except to the extent of a dividend of $37,500—that is, 50 per cent on the capital stock. Of this dividend, King was entitled, on the 521 shares acquired in his name, to $26,050, and of this amount it appears that he had received 70 per cent, or $18,235, to July 1, 1918. He had paid $11,000 on account of his loan ($21,000) to the Dayton National Bank. He had paid nothing on the $60,000 loan from the City National Bank. No agreement has been proved for a division of profits on this contract, and there is no proof that Colonel Deeds has had an interest in the contract or in the Dayton Lumber & Manufacturing Co. Even if it appeared that the Dayton Metal Products Co. was interested in the contract (which would explain transactions otherwise difficult to understand), this fact would not affect Colonel Deeds unless he were found to be interested in that company. The question would thus come back to the transfer of his stock in the Dayton Metal Products Co., which has already been considered.

M'COOK FIELD (FORMERLY KNOWN AS NORTH FIELD).

This is a field of approximately 200 acres in and adjacent to Dayton, which was leased by the Government from the Dayton Metal Products Co. and has been used for the purpose of making various tests. Lieutenant Colonel Vincent first suggested another field (South Field, or Moraine Field) and brought the matter to the attention of Colonel Deeds, by whom that field was principally owned. On September 27, 1917, Colonel Deeds sent the following telegram to Mr. Talbott:

WASHINGTON, D. C., September 27, 1917.

Mr. H. E. TALBOTT,
City National Bank Building, Dayton, Ohio:

Colonel Clark takes letter regarding Moraine flying field with him to Dayton to-night. George McCann has another letter for Mr. Kettering. Government will lease land, put up buildings, and operate experimental field. Lease will be for three years without privilege of purchase, as that is not necessary. Have complete description of property prepared; also statement of cost of buildings already erected and suggested monthly rent arrangement, and have George McCann bring them to Washington to complete lease. Have him prepare deed for this property to Mr. Kettering, who, in turn, will lease it to the Government.

DEEDS, Equipment Division.

Other contracts relating to aviation fields are discussed in the Hughes report, and many pages are devoted to selection of contractors, profits, and other matters relating to aircraft that challenged the attention of the country during the war. No word comes from the legal department of the Government that these charges have been investigated, although the investigator and the head of the legal department now sit at the same Cabinet table.

Mr. Chairman, I believe I have shown the necessity of employing many investigators and many attorneys on these war fraud cases with a view of clearing them up in the immediate future. It is clear the present force in the Department of Justice is entirely inadequate to properly handle the situation. It seems strange to me that the department has not long ago asked of the Congress sufficient funds for this purpose. On April 7, 1922, when the Department of Justice appropriation bill was being read for amendment under the five-minute rule, the gentleman from South Dakota. Mr. ROYAL C. JOHNSON, with whom I have for some time been working on these matters, offered an amendment to appropriate $500,000 for the purpose of carrying on these investigations and prosecutions. That no request for funds for this purpose has been submitted to Congress by the Attorney General is clearly shown by the following, taken from the RECORD of April 7, 1922:

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report:

The Clerk read as follows:

"Amendment offered by Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota: Page 27, line 15, insert: 'For attorneys, accountants, and clerical assistance in the investigation and prosecution of fraudulent war claims against the Government and investigation of settlements made on war contracts and prosecution in such cases as the Attorney General shall deem necessary, $500,000.'"

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, in this bill providing for the entire legal department of the Government I find no provision for the necessary clerical assistance and accountants that will be required if we are going to see that those men who grafted upon the Government during the war are prosecuted. Everyone who is at all familiar with the situation recognizes the fact that the Attorney General and some individuals in the War Department have had for some time under investigation many of these claims, and in at least one case with which we are familiar—a recent case—have taken legal action.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Was there an estimate sent in for an item of this sort?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Not so far as this is concerned.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The Department of Justice has not asked for anything.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. So far as I know the Department of Justice has not asked for it; but I will say that I want to anticipate, because it will not be a very great length of time before they will ask for such an appropriation, and I want to get it in in time; that is the reason I am offering this amendment. I had no idea that gentlemen would oppose it. We know in a recent case prosecution has begun, and I know that the entire department which has charge of the prosecution in this great class of cases is now in the hands of one clerk, who a few years ago was drawing a salary of $1,200, and in the hands of a few investigators, none of whom are receiving an adequate salary. These men are being opposed to-day by the best lawyers in the United States. In any one of these cases the Government would not be more than adequately represented if it had two of the finest and highest-priced lawyers in the United States.

I say without any hesitancy and without any reservations that these claims ought to be prosecuted, and if they are not prosecuted within a reasonable time the statute of limitations will expire and the men who have been guilty of these colossal war frauds will not be punished. After a thorough investigation, which lasted all of last year, I am thoroughly convinced of the necessity of an appropriation, so that the legal department of the Government will function in these prosecutions during the next two years.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I will.

Mr. MANN. As to the amount involved, has the gentleman made any estimate?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I have made somewhat of an estimate, that I do not have with me to-day, but I might present it to the House on another occasion. I do not know that I would be within a hundred thousand dollars of the necessary amount, and I make no pretension at this time as to the accuracy of the estimate or how much the Attorney General would need; it is a matter for him to determine, and I have such confidence in him that I feel he would not expend any more or any greater amount than is absolutely necessary.

Mr. MANN. Has the gentleman consulted the Attorney General or anybody in the department?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I will say that I have not consulted the Attorney General.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, I think I can say to the gentleman from South Dakota that he is out in his estimate just the amount carried in his amendment. The Department of Justice has not asked for this item, but the Department of Justice is engaged in this work, and has ample funds to carry it on at the present time. It does not need an additional dollar for this purpose, and if this money was appropriated it simply adds $500,000 to the amount carried in the bill which we would have to raise by taxation and which the department could put to no good purpose.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUSTED. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Inasmuch as the gentleman has just informed us that the Attorney General is engaged in the work of prosecution, will the gentleman state what prosecutions have been begun?

Mr. HUSTED. Well, the prosecution of Charles W. Morse is one which has had great attention in the public press.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Can the gentleman name any other?

Mr. HUSTED. I do not know what particular prosecutions have been carried on, but I know that they are engaged in investigating these cases. I know that is a large part of the work carried on by the bureau for the detection and prosecution of crime. These cases are in the hands of the attorneys for the department, and if prosecutions have not been instituted they soon will be.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if the Attorney General needs money with which to employ additional help in clearing up these cases, why has he not asked the Congress for the money? If he does not need additional funds, if he has all the assistants necessary to do this work, why have not some definite results been secured? Why have not suits, both criminal and civil, been prosecuted? The information upon which to base these suits have, in many cases, been in the files of his department for many months.

In view of the facts, one must conclude one of two things: Either the Attorney General does not propose to do the thing he was sworn to do when taking his oath of office—prosecute all criminals, big or little—or he does not know the facts as they exist. It pleases me to believe he does not know, because the head of a large department of this character must be there very largely in the capacity of an administrator. He can not know all the details, and such of those as do reach him must necessarily come to him through the medium of some subordinate.

LINCOLN MOTOR CO.

Following is a statement of the case as prepared by the Department of Justice for filing in the United States District Court at Detroit:

In the District Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Michigan, southern division, in equity.

In the matter of the receivership of the Lincoln Motor Co., Detroit Trust Co., receiver.

CLAIM.

The Lincoln Motor Co., Dr. to the United States of America.

1918–19.

To erroneous, wrongful, and unlawful payment of so-called profits on motors and spares under contract 1647 and supplements $4,963,361.98

To erroneous, wrongful, and unlawful payment of so-called special depreciation and amortization under contract 1647 and supplements	$3,225,200.00
To erroneous, wrongful, and unlawful payment of so-called anticipated or unearned profit on uncompleted portion of contract 1647 and supplements	1,000,000.00
Total	9,188,561.98

All as shown by contracts, audit, and report of War Department herewith filed and prayed to be considered as a part of this claim.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, United States of America, ss:

Thomas F. Lane, who being first duly sworn, makes oath and states that he makes this affidavit of claim against the Lincoln Motor Co., a corporation, as an agent of the War Department of the United States of America; that he is cognizant of the facts supporting said claim; that the Lincoln Motor Co. is justly indebted to the United States of America, after allowing all just credits and set-offs, in the sum of $9,188,561.98.

THOMAS F. LANE.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 27th day of March, A. D. 1922.

[SEAL.] THOMAS L. BIGHAM,
Notary Public, District of Columbia.

My commission expires 12th day of August, 1923.

Mr. Chairman, the Lincoln Motor Co., which during the war received large contracts for the Air Service, has been shown by the Government audit to have been overpaid to the extent of $9,188,561.96. This concern some time ago was thrown into the hands of a receiver. The receiver has sold this property to Henry Ford for $8,000,000 cash, which the receiver now holds. This case had been turned over to the Department of Justice and by it referred to the district attorney at Detroit for necessary action. The claim of the Government constitutes a first lien against the money now in the hands of the receivers.

We find the policy pursued in the past in some other cases now being pursued by the Department of Justice in the case of the Lincoln Motor Co. This case has been taken out of the hands of the district attorney at Detroit and has been returned to the department here; and there is to be another hearing given the attorneys for the receivers here in Washington to-morrow, April 12.

Inasmuch as an unbiased Government audit, conducted by men who have no personal interest in the case whatsoever, has shown this indebtedness to the Government, and inasmuch as hearings and rehearings had already been granted in this case, I wish to inform the House and the country that if history repeats itself in the case of the Lincoln Motor Co., and the Attorney General does not look fully to the interests of the Government in this case and allow the courts of the Nation to determine to what extent this company is indebted to this Government, I shall consider him guilty of misfeasance in office and shall move his impeachment upon these grounds. I appreciate the fact, Mr. Chairman, that it is impossible for the Attorney General to have the details of all these cases in mind, but I believe this case to be of such magnitude as to warrant the personal attention of the Attorney General himself.

Mr. Chairman, what I have said has been said in behalf of decency and fairness in government. It has been said in behalf of the four and one-half million ex-service men of the Nation. It has been said in behalf of everyone who wishes to see the laws enforced against the rich as well as the poor. [Applause.] Everything here presented is subject to proof, and much else besides. I have touched upon only the more flagrant cases. There are many others. The Federal prisons are full of petty thieves and grafters. They are filled with the small bootleggers, but I know of no instance where the big men, the men of wealth or political power who finance and direct bootlegging in a big way, have been prosecuted, although I do know that information upon which to base such prosecution is in the hands of the Department of Justice.

I have laid sufficient facts before Congress to-day to startle the Nation, and I believe if there is an unwillingness or inability on the part of the Department of Justice to function in the manner in which it should function that public sentiment should and will compel a change. It is incomprehensible that the President should be aware of these facts. I do not believe President Wilson was aware of the conditions that existed during his administration; I do not believe that President Harding is aware of the conditions as they exist to-day.

I most sincerely trust, Mr. Chairman, that the Congress will take immediate action upon the resolution I have introduced. I believe if the committee is appointed under this resolution its powers will be great enough to enable it to thoroughly investigate the conditions in every department of the Government in any way touching these war frauds. I believe the Congress will take this action. [Applause; Members rising.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has again expired.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Chairman, the country is asking what Congress has done to stop maladministration and waste of public funds.

The people are asking what has been done since April 12, 1920, when the House adopted the Republican resolution instructing the Attorney General to—institute investigations before grand juries for the purpose of indicting and prosecuting such persons as are guilty of criminal conduct, and to institute civil suits for the recovery of any Government funds which have been fraudulently or illegally paid. * * *

This resolution was adopted two years ago. Has anything been done? Were these evils stopped? Was the plundering of aircraft appropriations stopped? The answer, in the negative, can be found in thousands of newspaper articles printed by the American press during the past 12 months giving the unchallenged charges and testimony of the highest experts.

The answer can also be found in numerous reports of investigations of Air Service scandals and Air Service tragedies—the numerous tragedies that have taken place because our Air Service was prevented by the Air Trust from getting the best airplanes available which, experts testify, could be had by the Air Service at far less than was charged by the members of the Air Trust for inferior, dangerous aircraft.

Recognized authorities like Henry Woodhouse, the president of the Aerial League of America, who for 12 years has been recognized the world over as one of the foremost leaders in aeronautics and related sciences and national affairs; Gutzon Borglum, a pioneer in aeronautics, who was asked by President Wilson to and did investigate the aircraft scandals during the war; H. L. Scaife, who has had charge of preparing the cases for the war fraud section at the Department of Justice—these and scores of other authorities and leading organizations, like the Aerial League of America, representing thousands of Air Service officers and people identified with the aeronautic movement, have presented conclusive reports to Members of Congress and to the press.

Their charges, their facts, their reports telling the causes of the Air Service tragedies and exposing recent evils have been carried to the thousands of American newspapers by the Associated Press, the Universal Service, the International News Service, the Newspaper Enterprise Association, the United Press, and other reliable newspaper associations. The charges have not been denied.

Members of Congress have been at loss to find answers to the questions asked by the newspapers that are asking what has been done and what is being done to stop these evils, to end this wanton waste of taxpayers' money. We have been at a loss to find answers to such letters as the following, addressed by Mr. Borglum to Mr. Scaife and by Mr. Scaife to Members of Congress, asking whether anything is being done. Mr. Borglum's letter follows:

GUTZON BORGLUM STUDIOS,
Stamford, Conn., September 24, 1921.

H. L. SCAIFE, Esq.,
5419 Forty-first Street NW., Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SCAIFE: Thank you for your letter of September 14. I have received all your letters, I think, and have lost no interest whatever in the work that you are doing nor in the prosecution of the men now in the Government and out who were treacherous both to it and to the Nation, in the aircraft department, during the war and since; but I have been so busy with heavy work that requires every bit of my time, and on the other hand I have pressed the charges as far as dignity permits. The Government's criminal incompetence in the aircraft swindle is a matter of Government record, made in spite of both parties. I am satisfied with my services in this to date. So far, the Democrats, even of the Wilson administration, have acted with the finer political conscience. I shall neither do nor say more at present of my own motion. Certain promises have been made to me and to the overburdened, overtaxed voter; in the meantime, we must wait till this Congress goes to the country for reelection. I shall then know who to trust and just what to do.

However, I believe—I know, as much as one can—that there will be no convictions, and that we will get nothing but a political burial of a crime of which Republicans and Democrats are equally guilty. If there is a man holding a prominent official position in the United States Government to-day who is prepared to prosecute, say, one of the biggest banks in America, that fairly glutted itself on the proceeds of aeronautic engines, which in turn it used to inflate prices on unnecessary quantities of war material for our Army—if there is a man in authority at Washington who is prepared to prosecute or even mention the name of this bank publicly, I should like to know his name. I do not believe there is such a man. But I can name you several men, high in the Government's confidence, who will not let this institution be mentioned nor let anything be done which may embarrass powerful partisan supporters.

I am interested to some extent in what you say about the fight that was made upon me; some time you will tell me. I know the men who made the fight; they have since explained, after admitting the frightful conditions that existed, that partisan political reasons made it impossible for them to make admission at the time. Will you show me one man high in political preferment to-day who will not make the same answer and in making it practically say, "To hell with America, if her welfare affects 'the party'"? I am not pessimistic nor have I lost my belief in the sweetness of life, but the power to tax the people of the United States and pass its legislation is bigger game than Standard Oil, Steel, or the railroads, combined. Under Wilson its control slipped to a great group of bipartisan interests. Call America what you will, they are our Government. You say you will begin to believe there are not five or six men in America who care or who would do anything to prosecute investigation? There are not five or six public men who have the character to do it, in or out of the Army, in or out of political life, and there are none in commercial life. I do not know any who will sacrifice his job or his chance for preferment to speak the truth, be it what it may.

* * * * * * *

* * * At this time we have thousands upon thousands of airplane engines of various kinds, mainly Liberty motors. They kill our boys, that is true, but the Government does not care anything about that. They are, as they were, worthless, that is true, but the Government never cared nor does it care now about that. They killed people at the time they were ordered, and they still do; but the Government neither cared then nor cares now for that. And they have been packed in grease and are strewn about the land; within a month one of the last and "best" delivered from our Government was found with sand in the grease, put there by whom? By Government officials or by consent of Government officials. Of course, the Government cares nothing about that. What engines do they now propose to buy? Who is it in the Government that is so powerful, or who is it outside the Government that is more powerful, who can compel the Government to oblige every aviation company to use these damnable motors in every airplane they may build or import? That question should be asked, and it should be answered, for that is the case. I will tell you of this when I see you.

The airplane industry can not live in America unless it uses Liberty motors; and it can not fly if it uses them without killing, and as long as flying in America kills it will stagnate.

There is something profoundly rotten in the whole business. It was conceived and carried out with such intent to defraud—it was so bad in its conception and in its building, and finally in its production—so vast was the machinery of evil—that I doubt if we shall be able to do anything in aeronautics during this present generation because of what you now fear—there are not in all America the five or six men of power, or position, you seek, who care. There are not two. The Government must completely overhaul its aeronautical salvage, discard practically all the men heretofore connected with it, and put the entire department in the hands of new people, utterly free of all connection with it during or since the war. It would not be difficult to forgive much (and many) if there was a genuine plan of this sort adopted. The Government is choked with material, yet asking for more money. Note who is asking, who is recommending. Note that we are without safe landing fields across the country and that we have no system of night lighting at all.

You speak in your letter of my writing you personnally or marking as personal and confidential things I might not want to say to others. I shall remember that. But I have no objection to your using anything I say; and I shall send Mr. Harding a copy of this. I do not approve of many commissions and omissions in the Harding administration, but I have known and had the confidence of two such diverse characters as Roosevelt and Wilson as Presidents, and I have learned not to hold Presidents responsible for all of the Government all of the time.

I hope to be in Washington for a day and a night next week and shall make a point of seeing you. You say you have not heard from me since June 24. It seems hardly possible; but I beg you to be lenient with me, because I am so engrossed in work which I must finish. It does not mean that I have lost a particle of interest in the great question itself or the great service you have rendered it. You are the only man I have found who feels the personal responsibility toward a task assumed (as I felt it) and who has shown any of the patriotism in connection with it that I believe one must feel to serve a nation properly.

Sincerely yours, GUTZON BORGLUM.

As the evils continued, such leaders of clean aeronautics as Henry Woodhouse, whose reports and statements regarding national questions have been accepted by the United States Army and Navy and made part of the records of Congress for over 10 years, brought the evidence to Congress, and to the press the evidence of existing conditions. Here are a few of the thousands of articles printed in several thousand newspapers served by the Associated Press, the Universal Service, the Newspaper Enterprise Association, the United Press, and other leading newspaper associations.

The facts given in these articles have not been refuted; the charges have not been denied.

What can we answer to these newspapers and to the millions of readers—our constituents—who have read these charges, these uncontradicted facts, and ask what we have done to stop these evils, to prevent this continuous waste of taxpayers' funds?

[From the Times, Washington, D. C., October 23, 1921.]

"BY JUGGLING AND CONCEALMENT OF FACTS AND FIGURES, THE AIR TRUST HAS PREVENTED AN ACCOUNTING OF $1,740,915,758 APPROPRIATED BY CONGRESS, THE SCHEME BEING TO PREVENT INVESTIGATION UNTIL END OF 1921, AND THEN CLAIM IMMUNITY ON PLEA THESE ARE OUTLAWED WAR MATTERS."

(By Henry Woodhouse, president Aerial League of America, chairman of committee cooperating with Government in air investigations.)

(Written for Universal Service.)

Taxpayers will read here for the first time the records showing that the aeronautic appropriations made by Congress in the past four years have amounted to over two thousand million dollars.

By devious schemes, juggling and concealment of facts and figures and circulating of misinformation, the Air Trust has heretofore succeeded in suppressing part of these records and preventing an accounting of aeronautic appropriations aggregating the enormous sum of $1,740,915,758, made available at various times.

The appropriations made available by Congress for Army aeronautics were as follows:

Appropriations for fiscal year ending June 30, 1917	$13, 861, 000
Appropriated by—
Act of May 12, 1917	10, 800, 000
Act of June 12, 1917	500, 000
Act of June 15, 1917	43, 450, 000
Act of July 24, 1917	640, 000, 000
Act of Oct. 6, 1917	40, 000, 000
Act of July 8, 1918	8, 000, 000
Appropriated by—
Act of July 9, 1918	$760, 000, 000
Act of July 9, 1918	124, 304, 758
Act of Nov. 4, 1918	60, 000, 000
Act of July 11, 1919	25, 000, 000
Appropriation for year ended June 30, 1921	15, 000, 000
Total Army air appropriations	1, 740, 915, 758

For the Naval Air Service, Congress appropriated $362,592,197, as follows:

For the year ending—
June 30, 1917	$3, 500, 000
June 30, 1918	61, 133, 000
June 30, 1919	252, 959, 197
June 30, 1920	25, 000, 000
June 30, 1921	20, 000, 000
Total naval air appropriations	362, 592, 197

Thus the figures reveal Air Service appropriations aggregating the huge sum of $2,103,507,955, allowed by Congress for the fiscal years 1917 to 1921. Still these figures do not comprise many appropriations, such as officers and enlisted men's pay and subsistence and purchases of land for air stations, transportation of aircraft and aeronautic equipment, experimentations conducted by various Army and Navy bureaus to develop aircraft bombs, aircraft guns, radio and navigating instruments and other equipment, and the $1,000,000 for the purchase of aeroplane patents revoked.

Neither Congress nor taxpayers have been able to get an accounting showing exactly how much of these appropriations were actually spent and what it was spent for and what has happened to the aircraft motors and equipment for which hundreds of millions of dollars were paid to the members of the Manufacturers' Aircraft Association, who monopolized the aeronautic appropriations and charged exorbitant prices for inefficient and defective aircraft.

The Air Trust has a body of professional mourners in its pay, whose job is to delay the full accounting of the $2,000,000,000 air appropriations made by Congress in four years and circulate sob stories and make the public and Congress believe that the Air Service is in a pitiful state of destitution and must have additional large appropriations.

I have before me minutes of meetings of the Manufacturers' Aircraft Association showing appropriations of from $1,000 to $25,000 each made by the association for the purpose of conducting propaganda designed to mislead the public and Congress and cause further large appropriations to be made.

The evidence collected by the committee assisting the Government in aircraft investigations shows that not only the American public has been robbed on a gigantic scale in aircraft contracts, but it has been and is being prevented from learning the exact amount of Air Service expenditures and what has happened to the aircraft, motors, and equipment bought and paid for by the Government, the scheme being to delay investigations until the end of 1921 and then claim immunity under the plea that these were war matters and are outlawed by the three-year statute of limitations.

Many of the crimes committed are recent and do not come under the statute of limitation this year, but the Air Trust hopes to prevent any Federal action from being taken on these until they are outlawed by the statute of limitation next year and the year after.

The funds for continuing these schemes are coming from the recent contracts for inferior aircraft and motors placed with members of the Manufacturers' Aircraft Association by the Air Service, which amount to close to $10,000,000, on which they make huge profits.

As these aircraft are inferior, defective, and not needed by the Air Service they should be canceled immediately, not only to save the taxpayers from being robbed of additional $10,000,000, but also to prevent the continuance of these evils.

The only hope of ending these evils and safeguarding the lives of Air Service pilots rests on prompt action in canceling pending aircraft contracts and carrying into effect the recently announced intention of United States Attorney General Daugherty to submit such matters promptly to Federal grand juries.

Our experience in investigating aircraft scandals and preparing special reports on the aircraft situation for ex-President Wilson, Secretary Baker, and Congress, and for the present administration has convinced us that these evils would not exist to-day if the aircraft scandals of 1917–18 had been submitted to a Federal grand jury for action, and we estimate that by ending those evils then the United States Government would have saved at least $300,000,000 and would have received more and better aircraft in return, and the lives of hundreds of Air Service men who were killed by defective and inefficient aircraft would have been saved.

200 MEN KILLED IN AIR SERVICE IN PAST 2 YEARS—WOODHOUSE SAYS FEW DEATHS WERE DUE TO NATURAL HAZARDS, BUT MANY TO PREVENTABLE ACCIDENTS—DEMANDS FEDERAL INQUIRY—DECLARES GOVERNMENT IS FACING LOSS OF $50,000,000 ON ORDERS ALREADY ISSUED FOR NEW AIRCRAFT.

[Henry Woodhouse, president of the Aerial League of America and chairman of the committee cooperating with the Government in investigating the postwar aeronautical situation, has written a series of seven articles exclusively for Universal Service.

In these articles Mr. Woodhouse scathingly attacks the "Air Trust," which he declares made $1,000,000,000 in graft on Government aircraft contracts, and exposes various phases of the present situation, bares the causes of several recent air tragedies, and shows how this air combine is unloading millions of dollars in dangerous and obsolete aircraft on the Government.]

(By Henry Woodhouse, president Aerial League of America and noted aeronautical writer.)

(Written expressly for Universal Service.)

In the past two years about 200 Air Service men, including a dozen ranking officers, have been killed. Investigation shows the natural hazard of flying caused few of these deaths. The majority were due to preventable accidents.

Training of these men cost an average of $50,000 per man. Their deaths cost almost as much, as each death involved the destruction of airplanes, motors, and other equipment. These avoidable tragedies therefore cost the American public at least $20,000,000, in addition to the inestimable loss of life.

PREVENTABLE ACCIDENTS.

An investigation shows that the causes of many of these preventable tragedies still exist. Unless immediate steps are taken to institute sweeping Federal grand jury investigations, the Air Service death roll will continue to increase and the public be forced to pay more millions for aircraft destroyed.

The Air Service during the past few months has placed contracts for inferior, mechanically faulty, dangerous aircraft. These aircraft are absolutely unnecessary. Unless these contracts are immediately canceled a waste of $50,000,000 of Government funds will result.

The bare construction costs of these contracts will total $10,000,000, while motors, instruments, gun mounts, bomb racks, packing, transportation, and assembly, together with cost of housing, will bring the total over $50,000,000.

More than 200 single-motored Thomas-Morse biplanes are among those contracted for. These are erroneously classed as "pursuit planes." American aviators who might attempt to pursue enemy fliers in such planes would soon be at the mercy of the faster and better equipped enemy machines. There are hundreds of better planes than this type stored away in Government warehouses, unused.

DOZEN DIRIGIBLES IDLE.

Another order is for 35 bombing planes of the type that have caused the deaths of a score of persons since May 27, 1921. Machines of this type have been seen rotting away at Air Service fields.

Three dirigibles identical to the two dirigibles destroyed August 31 at Far Rockaway and the C–10, which exploded over Chicago, have been ordered. Dirigibles of this type have been proved unsafe and unsatisfactory. Their destruction has cost millions of dollars and several lives since the signing of the armistice. A dozen dirigibles of this type, which cost millions, are now stored away idle, unused.

And here is a real joker: Contracts have been let by the Army for 43 observation balloons at a total cost, equipped, of more than $10,000 each. These contracts have been let despite the fact that the Navy Department has so many of this same balloon on hand, unused, that they have recently been offered for public sale, brand new, at $2,500. Something seems to be wrong there.

As a matter of fact, the Army has made little use of lighter-than-air craft. An investment of $50,000,000 is represented in housing facilities, hydrogen generating plants, and equipment for these balloons, however.

NEW MACHINES DANGEROUS.

The Roma, a monstrous Italian semidirigible, bought by the Army Air Service, arrived at Langley Field recently in crates. At the present rate of assembly it will not be ready for its maiden cruise for many months.

The 235 airplanes, 3 dirigibles, and 38 observation balloons ordered recently are inferior, dangerous, and not needed. There are better, or equally as good ones, idle and unused, on which the American public is paying storage charges.

Contracts for these aircraft were not placed in accordance with the requirements of the law, investigation discloses. The law provides that bona fide bids be invited for aircraft and equipment needed and that contracts be placed at the lowest price for the best article.

Immediate cancellation of these contracts will save the American public $50,000,000.

UNSAFE PLANES SOLD UNITED STATES, SAYS WOODHOUSE—GOVERNMENT ROBBED OF MILLIONS, MANY LIVES IMPERILED BY GREED, HE CHARGES.

(By Henry Woodhouse, president Aerial League of America and noted aeronautical writer.)

SECOND ARTICLE.

About two years ago an aircraft construction company built a huge fantastic airplane. It is as big as a barn and as clumsy and impossible to fly. It was built with war profits. In design it was fully four years behind the times. Aviators who examined it declared they would sooner jump off the Brooklyn Bridge than attempt to fly it. Their chances of surviving were about even in either case.

Subsequently the plane was flown. On its test flight it came to grief. The pilot luckily escaped with his life. Aeronautical officials, however, sighed with relief, believing that would be the last of the dangerous contraption.

It was not. Following hasty repairs, the machine, to the amazement of those who knew, was bought by the Army Air Service at a fabulous price. It now stands useless at an Army flying field in Virginia. No one is willing to attempt to fly it. It has cost and is costing thousands of dollars for housing and upkeep.

SHOULD CANCEL PURCHASE.

How and why it was bought no one can explain. Army officials know the money was wasted. The contraption was not ordered in accordance with law, which requires that bids be invited and contracts placed for the "best aircraft available." Its purchase should be immediately canceled and the manufacturer compelled to refund the amount paid by the Government.

Action should be taken immediately before some senseless Air Service officer orders some pilot to fly the machine, with or without a load of passengers, as was done with the Curtiss Eagle ambulance, a much similar case.

The "Eagle ambulance" was an airplane designed for three motors. To cheapen its construction and cost of operation the manufacturers, however, replaced the three motors with a single Liberty motor.

When the "Eagle" was tested at Garden City it was found logy and unable to climb rapidly. It was generally conceded to be an experimental "dud," and it was taken for granted that radical improvements and changes would be made, meanwhile the plane remaining a shop experiment, not sold or used.

Some weeks passed, when aeronautical officials were dismayed to find this same faulty experimental airplane at Mitchel Field, the Army Air Service station on Long Island. It proved most attractive in its new coat of white paint, with a great red cross painted on the fuselage and the Air Medical Service insignia and serial number "A. S. 64243" on the tail.

This plane was not needed by the Air Medical Service. Better aerial ambulances had been evolved by the Engineering Division of the Army Air Service by converting surplus De Haviland planes. In fact, the Army officials were so pleased with the success of these converted ambulance planes that they issued for publication announcements of their construction.

These announcements were part of the official "Air Service News Letter," issued by the Director of Air Service. Copies are before me, and the Air Service Director can doubtless supply extra copies to the Secretary of War, General Pershing, and General Harbord, who have been asked to investigate the "Eagle ambulance" tragedy.

SEVEN CARRIED TO DEATHS.

As this plane was not needed as an ambulance it was stripped of its hospital equipment and hastily turned into a joy-riding limousine. A most dangerous arrangement of camp stools replaced the permanent seating arrangement. On these the passengers were seated on the fatal afternoon of May 28, 1921, when a flight was started despite storm warnings from the Government Weather Bureau. When the big, unwieldy plane went into its fatal nose dive the passengers and their flimsy camp stools piled up on the back of the pilot, pinning him powerless against the controls.

Utterly helpless, the seven passengers were instantly killed in a horrible manner. News of the crash was withheld from Government officials and the press while the evidence was burned. Later a report was made to the Secretary of War characterizing the tragedy as an "act of God."

It was asserted that the tragedy was due to lack of an air weather service. Air Service officers issued statements warning Congress to appropriate $50,000,000 to $80,000,000, in addition to the $50,000,000 already given the Air Service since June 30, 1919, for a weather bureau to prevent repetition of such accidents.

These are but two instances of many cases in which the American Government has been victimized by making the Air Service a dumping place for faulty, dangerous aircraft at exorbitant prices by a small group of manufacturers who monopolize Government business.

The official Air Service audits show that these manufacturers have gotten close to $150,000,000 in public funds for construction of aircraft without motors or equipment for the Army alone since April 6, 1917.

General Pershing's report shows that only 213 airplanes reached the American Expeditionary Forces up to November 11, 1921. To-day all that the public sees for its $150,000,000 paid for airplanes and an extra $500,000,000 paid for motors, dirigibles, and other equipment is a ghastly record of death and destruction.

A sweeping grand jury investigation is necessary to halt this evil and to save further loss of life and public funds.

COSTLY AIRSHIP FLEET CALLED A HUGE WASTE.

(By Henry Woodhouse, president Aerial League of America, and noted aeronautical writer.)

Where is America's costly airship fleet?

Where are the 30 dirigibles purchased by the Air Service since the signing of the armistice, which, with their costly accessories, hangars, and other equipment, cost taxpayers more than $50,000,000?

The recent tragic end of the ZR–2 and the destruction of three naval blimps at the Far Rockaway air station account for four. Where are the rest?

Where are the 917 observation balloons bought by the Army Air Service; the 162 observation balloons purchased by the Navy?

Why is the Air Service selling brand new observation balloons at less than a fourth of their cost and buying 38 similar ones at exorbitant war-time prices?

FACTS HIDDEN FROM PUBLIC.

The public has not yet been told that the proposed rigid dirigible construction and operating station is to cost $6,264,000. This stupendous expenditure is planned in addition to the millions already spent for dirigibles, though there is nothing to show for the money excepting the lamentable ZR–2 tragedy.

Why is the American public told of but a tenth of the total cost of dirigible and observation balloons?

As a citizen you are entitled to know. It is you who dig down in your pockets to foot these bills.

Do you as a taxpayer know that new, undeveloped motors for airships and airplanes are constantly being ordered, though the Army and Navy Air Services have more than 30,000 brand new engines stored away which have cost more than $300,000,000?

Why are steps not taken to stop this orgy of spending and waste?

Why is the Manufacturers' Aircraft Association consulted and permitted to decide who shall get the Air Service contracts? Why is the Air Service permitted to pay the exorbitant prices fixed by the "Air Trust"?

$100,000,000 EXPENDED.

These questions all deal with the lighter-than-air branch of the Air Service. This aerial arm has cost about $100,000,000 to date—about one-tenth of total aircraft expenditures.

The heavier-than-air branch, including all seaplanes, has cost more than $900,000,000 and shows a greater proportion of waste, favoritism, graft, and maladministration.

These questions are especially timely, due to efforts of the Manufacturers' Aircraft Association to create the impression that we have but one dirigible and to obtain contracts for more defective airships absolutely not needed.

Secretaries of War and the Navy and General Dawes, Budget Director, on referring to page 677 of the Navy's annual report for 1920, will find the actual dates of placing of contracts up to June, 1920, for 31 large dirigibles and envelopes.

The schedule of contracts for 15,000 airplanes, 45,000 motors, 30 dirigibles, 1,180 observation balloons, and other equipment bought and received by the War and Navy Departments will be found in the report transmitted to Congress by the Secretaries of War and Navy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920.

While these figures do not represent the entire Air Service expenditures, cost of instruments, raw materials, operation, and salaries being omitted, they show graphically how approximately $600,000,000 of the appropriations for aeronautics was expended.

A LETTER BY DANIELS.

In 1919–20, when the Air Trust circulated false reports to propagate a bigger dirigible program, wherein they sought to show that the Navy had but one dirigible and the Army none, Secretary Daniels wrote to Congress and to Secretary Baker protesting against such statements. His letter follows:

"The Navy, previous to the entrance of the United States into the war, had pushed the design of the small blimp which had been successful in submarine patrol, and soon after war was declared Navy personnel was flying these blimps. These were sent abroad, but they did excellent work along our coasts.

"During the war a very successful twin-motored airship was designed by the Navy and made its appearance soon after the armistice. This ship, the C class, is one of the fastest of its size in the world, and the trip of the C-5 from Montauk to St. Johns is proof enough of its cruising radius. The Navy has at the present time 12 single-motored airships, some of which are old in service; 7 twin-motored airships built and 3 building.

"The Navy has also the following foreign ships: One new Italian, semirigid; 1 old British Zero; 1 new British North Sea; 1 new French Zodiac gun carrier; 1 new French Chalais Meudon building. The following ships which have been used by the Navy in actual war operations: Two Zodiac Vedettes; 1 Astra Torres gun carrier; 1 Chalais Meudon, and 1 Astra Torres. The Navy has turned over to the Army 1 new French Zodiac gun carrier; 1 new Astra Torres gun carrier, and 1 C class, and has guaranteed delivery of two Navy D class."

What has become of these airships?

If these are still in existence, together with the hundreds of observation balloons and the Roma, they are more than sufficient to meet the needs of the Army and Navy. If these ships still exist, then 38 more observation balloons are absolutely unnecessary, and the contracts for them represent a reckless waste of taxpayers' money and should be canceled.

SEVEN DEATHS IN ARMY PLANE NOW LAID TO "JOY RIDE"—LIQUOR AND LOOSE CAMP STOOLS IN AIRCRAFT LED TO TRAGEDY—WOODHOUSE.

That the fall of the Army Curtiss Eagle ambulance plane near Morgantown, Md., on May 28, resulting in the death of Lieut. Col. Archie Miller and six other American officers, was a mere joy ride in an unbalanced plane, equipped with loose camp stools, and arranged by agents of airplane manufacturers as "propaganda," is charged by Henry Woodhouse, president of the Aerial League of America, in a statement filed with the Department of Justice yesterday.

The statement gives the finding of the league's committee which investigated that and other fatal flying accidents, and is in response to the department's request for information from the league.

Attorney General Daugherty was told in the report that the plane was designed for three motors and equipped with but one, "illegally purchased for the double purpose of causing payments of public funds to those who sold it and to supply an aerial limousine for joy riding and propaganda." The Air Service did not need this ambulance, the report continues, and points out just what was done elsewhere at that time in the way of improving the air ambulance service. The report goes on:

"The flights which ended in the tragedy were not legitimate but propaganda flights arranged by agents of a clique of aircraft manufacturers at Government expense to obtain support of Congressmen for large appropriations and retard grand jury investigations of apparent frauds in Army aircraft contracts.

"PLANE FITTED WITH CAMP STOOLS.

"To carry out these unlawful purposes the interior of the 'ambulance' was hurriedly stripped and, by what may be characterized as criminal disregard of the requirements of safety, there were placed in this unbalanced experimental airplane loose camp stools, on which the victims of this horrible tragedy sat in the eventful flight which ended with their death. In the morning flight from Washington to Langley Field the passengers included two Members of the House of Representatives, PHILIP P. CAMPBELL, of Kansas, and JOSEPH WALSH, of Massachusetts, who were invited as 'guests.'

"It appears that this flight was arranged especially for the purpose of securing the good will of congressional measures and resolutions, but Congressman WALSH was not aware of the motives back of the invitation.

"The flight was undertaken despite the warnings of the impending storm transmitted to the Air Service and to the Langley Field and other aviation fields by the United States Weather Bureau. The morning flight from Washington to Langley Field proved that the airplane was unbalanced and the air 'bumpy,' and the loose camp stools used as seats were wabbly, and the Congressmen and the French air attaché, Capt. Guy de Lavergne, wisely declined flying back to Washington that afternoon.

"RECEIVED WEATHER WARNING.

"It is not true that there were no warnings or means of finding what the weather conditions were. The records show that the Air Service has been supplied with daily reports and forecasts of weather conditions and, following the daily practice, the Weather Bureau had telegraphed to Bolling Field and Langley Field the following information:

"'Partly cloudy sky. Some risk of thunderstorms this afternoon. Moderate to fresh south to southwest winds surface and aloft.'

"This evidence disposed entirely of the unfounded claims that the accident was due to lack of warning of the impending storm and shows the deliberate misrepresentations resorted to by those responsible to conceal the facts and mislead Government officials and the public and newspapers.

"PARTY 'UNDER INFLUENCE.'

"It appears that the 'return party' was somewhat under the influence of alcoholic drinks taken to the Langley Field by agents of aircraft manufacturers. It has been a regular practice of these paid agents to supply Air Service officers from whom they seek favors with alcoholic drinks and other forms of entertainment.

"The only obvious deductions possible regarding the material causes of the tragedy are that when the aerial ambulance ran into the wind storm, before it crashed to the ground near Morgantown, Md., the pilot flew low and circled about seeking a landing place, and as the airplane tipped and nosed down the loose camp stools slid forward, throwing the passengers forward in a heap on the pilot, and the plane was plunged downward by their weight and struck the ground.

"Nothing else can explain the failure of the pilot to shut off the engine, which is the mechanical cause of the actual killing of the seven men.

"The pilot's inability to shut off the power turned the airplane's power plant into a murderous machine which pounded, tore, and ground the bodies of the pilot and passengers in such a horrible manner that, we are told, when the rescue party and Army officers arrived the bodies were only a mass of broken flesh and bones mixed with the broken camp stools, and the rescue party, who thought there were only three or four people in the plane, only found the actual number of victims from the number of limbs discovered in the horrible mass.

"QUOTES THE EAGLE'S REPORT.

"One of the many mysteries surrounding this tragedy was the suppression of the report of the tragedy for the Government officials and everybody else until after the airplane and other material evidence had been burned. The Brooklyn Daily Eagle for May 31 printed the following statement from their Washington correspondent, which appears to be correct, regarding the suppression of the news of the tragedy even from Government officials:

"'One somewhat extraordinary feature of the accident is the fact that the news was delayed so many hours in reaching Washington. The first news that was received here was at 11 o'clock Sunday morning, when a local newspaper received a tip by way of New York. The plane crashed near Morgantown, Md., not many miles from the Capital, at about 6.25 o'clock Saturday evening. It was seen to crash by Lieutenant Honeywell, of the Army Air Service, and also by persons aboard the Navy dispatch boat Dolphin, which was in the Potomac River off Indianhead. But apparently no word was sent either to the War Department or to Bolling Field, where the plane was awaited and where non-arrival obviously indicated trouble.'

"There is also evidence that extraordinary influence has been brought to bear on Air Service officers and others who were in a position to clear many of the mysterious aspects of this horrible tragedy, and that unlawful practice has been resorted to as a means of hushing and suppressing the facts and evidence. This in itself has had a profound demoralizing effect on the Air Service as a whole.

"WAR SECRETARY 'DECEIVED.'

"The Secretary of War himself has been deceived. Advantage was taken of the fact that he was very busy with the plans for the reorganization of the Army, and the reports presented to him misrepresented the facts, suppressed the evidence, and presented the tragedy as 'an act of God.'

"Thus even God is libeled and made responsible for this ghastly tragedy by those responsible.

"The committee has completed and will transmit to you within a few days the report of the investigation of the causes of the series of Air Service tragedies which have resulted in the death of over 150 Air Service officers and others between August 15, 1919, and August 15, 1921, and in the destruction of over 1,000 airplanes, motors, and other equipment which had cost over $50,000,000."

UNITED STATES AIR SERVICE LESS EFFICIENT THAN MEXICAN—COST CLOSE TO BILLION DOLLARS, BUT CAN'T COPE WITH 25 PLANES OF SOUTHERN REPUBLIC, SAYS PRESIDENT OF AERIAL LEAGUE—AIR TRAGEDIES PREVENTABLE.

[Henry Woodhouse, the president of the Aerial League of America, has just completed an exhaustive investigation of the United States Air Service. Woodhouse is the author of a textbook on military aeronautics, a textbook on aerial laws, a textbook on naval aeronautics, and other works which stamp him as an authority. He has written several articles especially for the Gazette, telling what he found to be the matter with our Air Service. This is the first.]

(By Henry Woodhouse.)

WASHINGTON, September 6.—What is the matter with the United States Air Service?

Why are there so many Air Service tragedies?

Why are we told that our Air Service, which has cost close to $1,000,000,000, can't cope with Mexico's air service, which has only about 25 airplanes?

What has happened to the 13,000 airplanes and 40,000 motors for which the American public paid close to $500,000,000?

These are a few of the questions being asked by the American public.

The situation, in brief, is as follows:

General Pershing reported two years ago that the total number of American-made airplanes delivered in France by November 11, 1918, the day of the signing of the armistice, was only 984, of which only 213 actually were at the front in squadrons on that date, although $500,000,000 had actually been spent.

The public was told that there were on hand over 20,000 motors, millions of feet of airplane spruce, millions of yards of airplane cloth, tens of thousands of propellers, airplane wheels, turnbuckles, wing beams, wing ribs, and other materials.

The country was told that these raw materials and accessories do not deteriorate with time and could be utilized for years hence in the production of airplanes of improved types.

PRODUCTION CONTINUED.

The production of Air Service airplanes and motors was not stopped immediately following the signing of the armistice.

By November 1, 1919, according to the official reports transmitted to Congress by Secretary of War Baker on December 17, 1919, giving the number of airplanes, engines, balloons, and dirigibles accepted by the Air Service between April 6, 1917, and November 1, 1919, the Air Service had received a total of 13,511 airplanes, on which had already been paid $113,720,043.39, and 41,673 airplanes on which had already been paid $244,838,162.80—and many contracts were still under liquidation; therefore additional payments were possible.

In addition, the Government had ordered and received 5,181 airplanes from France, Great Britain, and Italy, and over 500 of these latest European airplanes had been received in the United States in 1919, with a large number of best European motors.

Having this enormous number of airplanes and motors and practically an unlimited amount of raw materials for constructing additional airplanes of any type, and an appropriation of $25,000,000 for the year ending June 30, 1920, and other appropriations since which bring the total expenditures of the Air Service since June 30, 1919, to over $50,000,000, it was felt that the Air Service would not require large appropriations for years to come.

Also, it was believed the Air Service could sell thousands of airplanes and motors to the hundreds of ex-United States Army and Navy Air Service officers who were anxious to buy airplanes to use for commercial and scientific purposes.

HOW PLANES WERE SOLD.

But the Air Service refused to sell any of the airplanes to aviators during 1919. According to the report made by the congressional investigations—

"We spent $20,000,000 for 4,608 Curtis motors, 1,616 Curtis-type airplanes, and 100 Standard JN-1 airplanes, which we purchased from the Curtis Aeroplane & Motor Corporation, then sold them back to this company for $2,730,000.

"The War Department refused to sell these machines to aviators for less than $3,600 each, and provided in the contract by which they were sold to the Curtis company that the Curtis company should have the first opportunity to buy any other airplane which the War Department might thereafter declare surplus."

Statements have been made and circulated by Air Service officers and agents of manufacturers to the effect that unless Congress allows close to $100,000,000 additional aeronautic appropriations, in addition to the $25,000,000 allowed for 1919, the Air Service would not have sufficient airplanes to cope with Mexican air service.

Both Congress and the General Staff conducted investigations and found that the Mexican air service consisted of less than 25 low-powered scouting-type airplanes.

Apparently all that the Air Service has to show for the expenditure of over $500,000,000 during the war and over $50,000,000 since June 31, 1919, is a ghastly list of tragedies in which were killed over 150 Air Service men, including high officers, and were destroyed over 1,000 airplanes, motors, and equipment that had cost over $50,000,000. An investigation has shown that most of these tragedies were due to preventable causes and not to the natural hazards of flying.

PLUNDERING OF APPROPRIATIONS HINDERS WORK—PRESIDENT OF AERIAL LEAGUE OF AMERICA WOULD CALL HALT ON WHOLESALE GRAFTING.

(By Henry Woodhouse, president Aerial League of America, chairman of committee cooperating with Government in air investigations, author of textbook of military aeronautics, textbook of naval aeronautics, textbook of aerial laws, etc.)

NEW YORK, October 15.—What can we do to save part of the billion-dollar Air Service investment?

How can we organize an efficient air service with available resources?

How can we stop the continuous plundering of Air Service appropriations by the Air Trust if the congressional investigators have failed to stop the plundering?

For the thousand millions spent in aeronautics during the war the taxpayers have only seen a disgusting exhibition of inefficiency, graft, and killing of hundreds of Air Service officers by inferior airplanes; for the two hundred millions spent in aeronautics since the signing of the armistice we have little more than a ghastly record of over 200 Air Service men killed and hundreds of aircraft, motors, and other aeronautic equipment destroyed. Can anything be done to improve conditions—and how soon?

These are some of the most pertinent questions asked by Members of Congress, Government officials, and taxpayers.

All these questions can be answered in the affirmative. All these results can be accomplished by taking the following steps:

(1) Let General Dawes, the Director of the Budget, cause the immediate cancellation of all the contracts for airplanes, dirigibles, observation balloons, motors, and equipment placed by the Air Service since December, 1920. This will prevent the further dumping of obsolete, defective, and unnecessary aircraft and equipment on the Government by the Air Trust and will save about $50,000,000 of taxpayers' money this year, because, besides the exorbitant prices of the aircraft ordered, the present contracts involve the cost of housing and operating these unnecessary aircraft and other waste of motors, instruments, accessories, and aircraft supplies.

APPOINT DIRECTORS.

(2) Appoint two of the best men available to act as director of Army utilization and director of Navy aircraft utilization, the duty of these directors to be to take inventories to determine the exact number and condition and figure out the possible utilization of the thousands of Air Service airplanes and motors, hundreds of observation balloons, and the thirty-odd dirigibles; the tens of thousands of propellors, instruments, and accessories, and the millions of feet of spruce, millions of yards of airplane cloth, and other material stored away.

(3) Issue orders to Army and Navy Air Service to not approve for payment any of the pending claims for alleged aircraft contracts until these contracts can be reviewed and their validity and the efficiency and value of the aircraft and articles supplied are passed upon by a competent board.

(4) Remove the Air Service officers who have connived with the Manufacturers' Aircraft Association in preventing independent manufacturers and inventors from bidding for Air Service contracts; and institute a system of open examination and public review of bids, so that it may not again be possible for the Air Trust to charge exorbitant prices for inferior aircraft and to again prevent the Air Service from obtaining the improved aircraft submitted by independent bidders.

(5) Institute court-martial proceedings with a view of removing and punishing every officer of the Air Service who has accepted bribes, loans, presents, entertainments, and other favors or remunerations from aircraft manufacturers or their agents, or has assisted or connived with the Air Trust.

(6) Order the delivery or return to the Government of all airplanes, motors, propellers, metal parts, instruments, accessories, machinery, jigs, tools, hangars, and other equipment belonging to the Government but retained or borrowed by aircraft manufacturers or individuals.

(7) Limit Air Service flying to strictly legitimate Air Service purposes.

SOLVE PATENT PROBLEMS.

(8) To solve the problem of airplane patents steps should be taken to carry into effect the act of 1917.

In view of the fact that under the cloak of war secrecy the Manufacturers' Aircraft Association and its members and agents by misrepresentation and other unlawful practice and unlawful combine violated the above act and caused payment to themselves of sums aggregating over $5,000,000 for alleged royalties for the use of alleged airplane patents in the construction of airplanes on alleged contracts which they obtained by unlawful combination, restraint of trade, and other unlawful practice; and, further, in view of the fact that said alleged patents were not legally adjudged valid and had been sold to the British Government in 1914–1916 for less than $100,000 and had been offered for sale to the United States Government by the owners for less than $400,000, the United States Government may do one of two things, as follows:

(a) The Government may proceed with the purchase of the airplane patents as provided by the act of 1917 and sue the Manufacturers' Aircraft Association and its members to obtain reimbursements of the millions obtained by them for alleged royalties on said alleged patents; or

(b) The Government may assume that the payments made for alleged royalties on said alleged patents have amply paid for said patents and may, therefore, declare said patents public property, open for public use hereafter without further payments.

The latter would be the simplest way, and the Manufacturers' Aircraft Association and their members would no doubt prefer to agree to the latter than to face the penalties involved in the first proposition.

(9) In view of the fact that the continuous defrauding of the Government by the Air Trust is due mainly to the delay on the part of the Department of Justice to take steps to prosecute the malefactors, as ordered by Congress, action should now be taken at once by the Department of Justice to carry out the instructions provided in the congressional resolutions of April, 1920.

INVITE SUGGESTIONS.

(10) Let a circular be issued to the commanding officers and chiefs of branches and sections and boards of the Army and Navy air service, inviting their suggestions and cooperation in the matter of establishing economic management of air stations and branches and placing a premium for economic management of air service as a whole.

(11) To rebuild the whole of the Air Service and establish a line of demarcation between right and wrong, it should be made known that henceforth conduct will be judged by the West Point code of honor and moral code, and such practice as aerial joy riding, causing the destruction of aircraft and motors so as to reduce the stock in hand, and favoring manufacturers against other manufacturers or against the best interests of the Government, will no longer be tolerated but will be severely punished, as is provided by the West Point code of honor in the case of cadets who utter falsehoods or commit other ungentlemanly acts.

(12) Let the motto of the Army, Navy, and postal air services be, "Cooperation, coordination, concentration," each service working separately in friendly competition to achieve maximum efficiency at a minimum cost.

These 12 provisions can be put into effect immediately, without additional expense or additional laws, and if put into effect the evils that have ruined the Air Service heretofore will come to an end and the United States will have an efficient and economic air service in the Army, Navy, and Post Office.

AERIAL WEATHER BUREAU SCHEME CALLED OUTRAGE—WOODHOUSE SAYS MOVEMENT IN CONGRESS TO SPEND $80,000,000 FOR STATION IS PURE ROBBERY—IS NOT NEEDED, HE AVERS—DECLARES DAILY WARNINGS ISSUED NOW ARE ENTIRELY SATISFACTORY AND THE SYSTEM IS EFFICIENT.

[By Henry Woodhouse, president Aerial League of America and noted aeronautical writer.]

Of all the pernicious propaganda intended to rob the American public under the guise of aeronautical appropriations, the most brazen is the movement to induce Congress to appropriate $80,000,000 for establishing an "aerial weather bureau."

Having successfully deceived and robbed the American public of millions under the cloak of war secrecy, the Air Trust thinks it can continue to do so.

As quickly as deceptions are discovered, new ones are advanced. The aerial weather bureau is the latest.

DECEPTION A BOOMERANG.

But the deception proved a boomerang when the Air Trust alleged that lack of weather warnings was to blame for the "Eagle ambulance" tragedy at Morgantown, Md., May 28, when seven men were killed.

Here are a few facts which prove the claims of alleged absence of weather warnings were false:

(1) The records of the Weather Bureau transmitted to our committee state that on the morning of May 28 the United States Weather Bureau sent to Bolling and Langley Fields the following warning:

"Partly cloudy sky. Some risk of thunderstorms this afternoon. Moderate to fresh south to southwest winds, surface and aloft."

(2) Records of the Weather Bureau show further that the Weather Bureau has supplied a daily forecast to the Air Service for a number of years, including general forecasts as well as special telephone service of weather conditions prevailing in any part of the United States at any time of the day.

BOARD OF METEOROLOGY.

An interdepartmental Board of Meteorology was created September 22, 1919, by President Wilson, to bring close cooperation between the meteorological services of the Army, Navy, and Weather Bureau. The Navy wisely took advantage of the facilities offered by the Weather Bureau and now has a number of air officers trained in meteorology and aerology, who supervise aerologic affairs at naval air stations.

An Air Service letter issued by the Director of the Air Service July 27, 1919, after describing flights of various officers, prints the following statement indicating that the Air Service has received aerial weather forecasts for years:

"Before starting on this flight of 579 miles the aviators wired for the Aerial Weather Bulletin forecast and were assured fine weather for the trip, with moderate westerly winds. These forecasts will prevent aviators starting in apparently fine weather and running into a storm 100 miles from the starting point, with possible disastrous results."

Pioneer fliers have been using the Weather Bureau service since 1906, when the first balloon ascensions took place in the United States.

WEATHER BUREAU OPENED.

Three years ago it was decided that the Air Service should have its own weather-bureau service at the Washington headquarters. Eventually such a bureau was established and placed in active operation.

I called on the officer in charge and personally saw it satisfactorily functioning. The weather bureau was operated from the offices of the information group under direction of Maj. Gen. Charles T. Menoher, Director of Aeronautics.

In cooperation with the Government Weather Bureau the officer in charge had prepared a geographic chart which divided the United States into sections. The Weather Bureau collected information from each section and transmitted it to this Air Service officer, who in turn sent the information to the commanders of the Air Service aviation fields throughout the United States.

Reviewing the system in operation for two consecutive days I timed the officers and found it required less than half an hour in the morning and evening to transmit the weather information to all of the aviation fields. The only cost involved was that of the necessary telegrams.

WILL NOT STOP ACCIDENTS.

In face of the efficiency of the present Government and Air Service Weather Bureau requests for further facilities seem farcical.

Statements of Air Service officers and agents of the Manufacturers' Aircraft Association, made after each of the ghastly Air Service tragedies, that the Air Service needs from $50,000,000 to $80,000,000 for the establishment of a weather-bureau service are absurd. An $80,000,000 weather bureau will not stop Air Service accidents.

Aerial tragedies can be brought to an end by instituting Federal grand jury investigations. Witnesses and Air Service officers must be placed on the stand and be made to tell, under oath, what they know of the tragedies which have taken the lives of more than 150 Air Service men since August 15, 1919.

Arguments have not halted fatal aerial accidents and destruction of expensive airplanes, motors, and equipment. Talk will not bring our dead fliers back to life or return to the public pocketbook $50,000,000 represented by the thousand airplanes destroyed in crashes since August 15, 1919.

A Federal grand jury investigation is the solution. Such a probe will promptly halt the tragic deaths of our fliers, stop the drain of the Treasury by the Air Trust, and prove the first step toward making America supreme in the air.

WOODHOUSE EXPOSES AIR SERVICE THAT BALKED ALL IMPROVEMENTS IN PLANES NOT OFFERED BY MANUFACTURERS' CROWD—TELLS OF MORE DEATHS.

[By Henry Woodhouse, president Aerial League of America and noted aeronautical writer.]

The Senate investigating committee was prophetic when it stated in its report in August, 1918, that the schemes of the Manufacturers' Aircraft Association were designed to cause "discouragement of invention and the inevitable control of the aircraft industry by that association or some other interest through its agency."

It has happened, but in a horrible manner, attended by scores of ghastly deaths and destruction of aircraft for which the American public has paid hundreds of millions.

COULD SELL MAN-KILLERS.

As amazing as it may seem, it is a fact that the Air Service would not buy the most perfect and safest airplane made for even a single dollar unless the manufacturer is a member of the Manufacturers' Aircraft Association. But if you were a member of the trust you could sell the Air Service a man-killing, broken-down machine for a fabulous sum.

The Senate committee's report contains scores of pitiful tales of inventors and manufacturers who were not permitted to assist the Government during the war because they were not in the Air Trust.

Since the war the number of such cases has increased. Here is a typical instance:

There is conclusive evidence that the cause of the airplane bomb tragedy which killed several officers and men at the Aberdeen, Md., Army proving grounds and destroyed close to $100,000 in Government property was the absence of a safe chassis for a bombing plane.

CHASSIS WERE REJECTED.

Such a chassis had been deliberately refused and suppressed by certain Air Service officers. Evidence shows that several Army officers and favored manufacturers, who entertain them, caused the refusal and suppression of an ideal landing gear because it had been developed by a pioneer aeronautical engineer not a member of the Air Trust.

I can supply considerable first-hand information in this case as I was a member of the committee which investigated the deaths of Lieuts. C. K. Bronson and Luther Walsh, two naval officers killed while testing the ill-fated bombing device at Indianhead, Md., November 7, 1916. Having found, after investigation, that the chassis axle was an obstruction which caused the tragedy, our committee urged various aeronautic engineers to devise a chassis without an axle.

MARTIN'S PLANS REFUSED.

Some months later James V. Martin, pioneer among American aeronautical engineers, notified us he had evolved a chassis without an axle. Finally in September, 1920, he advised us that he had sold a number of important airplane patents to the Government for $1. Copies of letters were received by him from the executive Air Service officers who signed the purchase vouchers as provided by law. Copies of letters thanking Mr. Martin for his generosity in contributing his patents were also sent to us.

Subsequently, in February, 1921, we were advised that the Air Trust and Air Service officers who apparently connive with them, figuring the sale of such valuable patents to the Government would undermine their monopoly, had, incredible as it may seem, caused the signed agreement of sale to be rescinded. Despite the fact that the patents were the property of the Government, the transaction having been completed, Government officials caused the vouchers and other papers in the case to be taken out of the official files and returned to Mr. Martin.

TOLD PATENTS ARE WORTHLESS.

A letter accompanying them advised the inventor in effect that his patents were worthless.

Subsequently these officers awarded contracts to favored manufacturers embodying some of the features covered by the Martin patents. In the new contracts was a clause which provides that the Government shall bear the legal expense and burden of fighting any patent infringement suit which Mr. Martin might institute against the Air Trust.

An extraordinary feature of the case is that the Army General Staff investigated the matter and found the Army was being victimized. The contract section was immediately instructed to refrain from incorporating such an obviously dishonest clause in airplane contracts.

Nevertheless, it appears that the contracts secretly awarded during the past 60 days to the Air Trust contain clauses which obligate the Government to defend these favored manufacturers in patent-infringement suits.

WOODHOUSE TELLS MORE OF AIR "GRAFT" WORKED ON AMERICAN TAXPAYERS; ALSO EXPOSES BIG FIRE IN FRANCE THAT WRECKED PLANES BY THE SCORES.

[By Henry Woodhouse, president Aerial League of America and noted aeronautical writer.]

RECORDS MISSING FROM UNITED STATES FILES.

WASHINGTON, September 10.—Department of Justice officials are without a clue regarding the mysterious disappearance from the official files of a 105-page report on the aircraft investigation.

This report, which was prepared for the department by Henry Woodhouse, president of the Aerial League of America, and sent by him under registered mail, was received in Washington, the postal receipts show.

When the officials of the bureau investigating war cases came to make use of the report it could not be found, although a searching survey of the files was made.

The report covered in detail the destruction of 5,000 Air Service airplanes, motors, and other aircraft equipment.

While the American public was rejoicing over the signing of the armistice the Aircraft Trust was worrying over what appeared to be the end of the period during which they had obtained contracts for over $1,000,000,000 by schemes perpetrated under the cloak of war secrecy.

With the signing of the armistice the Manufacturers' Aircraft Association feared they might not be able to force the Government to continue the billion-dollar contracts their agents, acting in Air Service high positions, had awarded them.

RUSH THROUGH CONTRACTS.

Some of these contracts were but a few days old. They had been rushed through when agents of the aircraft manufacturers serving overseas and in Washington for a dollar a year, learned of the impending cessation of hostilities. Later these contracts were liquidated for huge sums, although they had done nothing toward fulfilling them.

Immediately after the signing of the armistice I received a visit from an official of the Manufacturers' Aircraft Association, whom I had known for some years as a small aircraft manufacturer.

He called on me because I was an active director of the Aero Club of America and vice president of the Aerial League of America, and because I owned the three leading aeronautical publications.

He told me frankly that he and other manufacturers had gotten together and figured out that in effect there would be lean days ahead for them unless steps were taken to destroy the American airplanes constructed for the war. He had been sent to attempt to induce me to have the Aero Club and Aerial League, as well as my magazines, urge the Government to destroy the stock of military and naval planes. This could be done, he stated, by claiming these airplanes were unsafe for civilian use.

MOLDING PUBLIC OPINION.

He declared it would be easy to create public opinion in favor of destroying the airplanes.

In answer, I stated if they could prove these machines, produced for training American aviators in this country and for our fliers overseas, as well as for the protection of 2,000,000 American soldiers, were unsafe, that I would certainly urge that the aircraft be burned, but would also urge that those guilty of unloading such machines be hanged as traitors.

He took the matter good-naturedly and came again. Other agents of the Manufacturers' Aircraft Association also approched me, as well as other directors of the Aero Club and Aerial League. We were invited to a sumptuous entertainment, where champagne and the best of wines and liquors flowed freely. This fête was attended by leading Air Service officers, many of whom became so highly intoxicated they could not stand.

PLANE BLAZE IN FRANCE.

Subsequently the three leading members of the Air Trust and Howard E. Coffin, ex-chairman of the Aircraft Production Board, and Benedict Crowell, Assistant Secretary of War, went to Europe as the official American aviation mission. While they were there the destruction of thousands of airplanes, motors, and equipment, which had been rushed overseas after the signing of the armistice, was ordered.

While this "aviation commission" was in France many aircraft contracts were canceled in this country, despite the heated protests of agents of the Manufacturers' Association. When the commission returned they found the country incensed by the reports of the great airplane bonfires abroad.

NEW METHODS ADOPTED.

New methods had to be found to cause destruction of the thousands of Air Service planes in the United States. Here is one method adopted:

"The hundreds of so-called 'aerial recruiting expeditions' sent out during the past two years, which cost many lives and millions of dollars in airplanes and equipment, were all faked excuses to take Army airplanes out of storage and cause their destruction to reduce stocks on hand and to create talking points for larger appropriations.

"When this so-called aerial recruiting campaign for noncommissioned personnel by the Air Service was announced the Aero Club of America and the Aerial League of America had on file approximately 10,000 applications from men who were anxious to join the Air Service. As there had been many Air Service officers and men killed in indiscriminate flying, and the cost of Army flying was—and still is—abnormally high, more than $50 a minute, the officials of the Aero Club and the league thought they could assist the Government to save lives and money by turning over a list of such applicants.

OFFICER CRIES FOR MERCY.

I was one of the officials of these organizations who called on the Air Service officer in charge of recruiting in Washington on this mission. The recruiting officer was told that our organizations were prepared to pay the expenses of notifying these 10,000 recruits. We asked whether they should be notified to apply direct to the Air Service or at general Army recruiting offices in different cities.

"For God's sake, don't do either," exclaimed the recruiting officer. "We have more recruits than are allowed by law."

He explained guardedly that the so-called "recruiting parties" were really sent out for "general propaganda." Between June, 1919, and August, 1921, 150 Air Service officers and noncommissioned officers, whose training had cost more than $5,000,000, were killed. Most of these deaths, investigation revealed, were attributable to unlawful propaganda campaigns.

It costs $50,000 to train an Air Service pilot, and there were wrecked and in other ways put out of commission during this period not less than 1,000 airplanes and motors and other aeronautic equipment that had cost not less than $50,000,000, and there was spent not less than $5,000,000 in additional general running expenses.

HUGE SUMS FOR FEASTS.

I have personally seen copies of the minutes of meetings of these aircraft manufacturers, showing appropriations and expenditures made by them ranging from $1,000 to $25,000 each, stated in the minutes to be for the purpose of entertaining executive Air Service officers—whose names are mentioned in the minutes—and to be spent by their agents in lobbying in Washington and elsewhere for the purpose of securing control of aeronautics, for the printing of propaganda, and for other unlawful purposes. I have also seen and have copies of the records of bank accounts from which these moneys were drawn. The evidence shows that these were funds obtained from the United States Treasury by misrepresentation, frauds, and conspiracies, and collusion with certain Air Service officers.

[Published by the Universal Service newspapers, October 2, 1921.]

"THERE IS NO VALID EXCUSE FOR THE FOUR DEATHS IN THE TRAGEDY OF THE $100,000 MARTIN BOMBER NO. 5—SAFER TWIN-MOTORED PLANES HAVE BEEN OFFERED TO THE AIR SERVICE THAT WILL FLY WITH ONLY ONE MOTOR GOING, BUT THEY WERE REJECTED."

(By Henry Woodhouse, president Aerial League of America, chairman of committee cooperating with Government in air investigations and author of aviation textbooks.)

(Written for Universal Service.)

Four more Air Service men lie dead and one is dying, and another twin-motored Army bomber costing over $100,000 has been destroyed.

We are told that while Martin bomber No. 5 was flying over Nicholas County, W. Va., recently one of the two motors stepped and the plane plunged down, crashed to the ground near Summersville, killing four of the five airmen on board. The mechanical cause of the accident is that one motor stopped and the plane could not fly on one motor, being one of the inefficient planes of that type forced on the Air Service by the unscrupulous Air Trust.

There is no valid excuse for these deaths, nor for the excessive cost of the bombers. The tragedy could not have happened if the Air Service had ordered the best airplanes offered by bidders.

SAFE PLANES REJECTED.

Twin-motored airplanes have been offered to the Air Service that will fly safely with only one motor going, even in a high wind, and the Air Service could have had these superior planes at less than half the price charged for the dangerous ones.

The better, safer, and cheaper airplanes were rejected because the bidders were not members of or contributors to the Manufacturers' Aircraft Association, the monopolistic organization that controlled the Air Service expenditures since 1917 and have made the Air Service the dumping ground for defective aircraft, for which they have charged and charge such exorbitant prices that it is clear that the graft and waste amounted to over $100,000,000 out of the approximate sum of $200,000,000 paid for the bare construction of airplanes, without motors, accessories, or equipment.

Had the airplanes been as good as could be made or bought, the indulgent American public would probably have taken its loss good-naturedly, as it usually does.

COULD HAVE SAVED LIVES.

There was hardly a question asked either when the War Department announced that 296 American Air Service officers had been killed in accidents during the war, besides the 236 who were reported as having been killed in action, although it was felt that many of these deaths could have been prevented if American manufacturers had supplied better airplanes for training and good ones for fighting.

The American public was extremely generous in its attitude toward war aircraft evils. It paid close to one thousand million dollars for the Army and Navy aeronautic programs and since the signing of the armistice has given close to $200,000,000 more for Army and Navy aeronautics. For these huge expenditures there is little more to show than a ghastly record of killing of hundreds of Air Service men due to the faulty aircraft supplied by the members of the Manufacturers' Aircraft Association at exorbitant prices.

These dangerous Martin bombers that have killed so many people and have been wrecked so fast cost the taxpayers over $100,000 each, or over four times their value.

These bombers were widely advertised as being capable of flying without danger with only one of the two motors going. The ghastly records of crashes and deaths have proven that these bombers can not fly safely with only one motor going, so stated by the pernicious propaganda circulated by the Air Trust to mislead the public while the Air Trust was arranging for more Air Service contracts for these dangerous planes at exorbitant prices. The last contract is for 35 of these dangerous planes, which should be canceled forthwith to save further waste of funds and further killing of Air Service men.

FRUITLESS EFFORTS.

The West Virginia tragedy is typically pathetic. It reveals through the lips of a dying victim the brave but fruitless efforts of the pilot to control a type of plane antiquated in design and dangerous in operation, which would long ago have been replaced by more efficient and dependable types had it not been for the Manufacturers' Aircraft Association's conspiracy to control the Air Service for the private benefit of its members and agents, who support luxurious yachts and most expensive automobiles and entertain executive Air Service officers at sumptuous parties with their ill-gotten gains.

One of the basic mechanical defects of Martin bombers is that they are inefficient and have the two motors located out in the wing and not connected, and when one motor stops they will not fly and control dependably on one motor.

Much has been said about this plane's ability to fly and control on one motor, but the truth, as the records show, is that only under perfect conditions can this plane be flown at all on one motor, and that in windy weather it is most dangerous to attempt flight with one motor, the plane tending strongly to swing into a tail spin, as it did in the West Virginia tragedy.

[Editorial from Press, Pittsburgh, Pa., September 9, 1921.]

TREASURY LOOTERS MUST BE PUNISHED.

The fact that it is not possible to secure the restitution of any worthwhile amount of the billions of public money which were grafted and stolen during the war and afterwards is all the more reason why Congress should consent to enact Attorney General Daugherty's proposed amendment of the statute of limitations to enable the Department of Justice to proceed with criminal charges against numerous profiteers and grafters whose prosecution will otherwise be barred.

It is not alone in the operations of the Shipping Board, by which presumably not less than a cool billion of the people's money was crookedly disposed of, that there is occasion for indictments. In the Air Service and other governmental war-time activities there was also amazing imposition upon Government and people, if we may believe testimony of apparently the most credible sort.

For instance, here is Henry Woodhouse, president of the Aerial League of America, expressly charging that not only money but human lives have been wasted in what he calls the most "ghastly" manner in order that unreasonable and inordinate profits might accrue to certain favorite contractors. After referring at length to two particularly shocking transactions, Mr. Woodhouse goes on to say:

"These are but two instances of many cases in which the Government has been victimized by making the Air Service a dumping place for faulty, dangerous aircraft at exorbitant prices by a small group of manufacturers who monopolize Government business. The official Air Service audits show that these manufacturers have gotten close to $150,000,000 in public funds for construction of aircraft without motors or equipment for the Army alone since April 6, 1917. General Pershing's report shows that only 212 airplanes reached the American Expeditionary Forces up to November 11, 1921. To-day all that the public sees for the $150,000,000 paid for airplanes and an extra $500,000,000 paid for motors, dirigibles, and other equipment is a ghastly record of death and destruction. A sweeping grand jury investigation is necessary to halt this evil and to save further loss of life and public funds."

It is inconceivable that Congress should continue to lay staggering tax burdens upon the country without at the same time aiding the Attorney General in every possible way to bring the Treasury looters to the bar of justice.

[Editorial in the Post Express, Rochester, N. Y., September 13, 1921.]

THE AIRCRAFT TRUST.

A condition of affairs both startling and shocking is revealed by Henry Woodhouse, president of the Aerial League of America, and publisher of the leading aeronautical periodicals. At the request of the Department of Justice he prepared a 105-page report covering the deliberate destruction, here and abroad, where bonfires were made of 5,000 Air Service planes, motors, and other equipment. This report was stolen from the department files in Washington, and Mr. Woodhouse was asked to send on a duplicate report, which he has done.

He asserts that the Manufacturers' Aircraft Association, known in popular parlance as the Aircraft Trust, engineered the destruction of the airplanes and equipment destroyed, and in collusion with certain Air Service officers were and are conspiring to have the Government destroy its entire stock of military and naval planes. To this end the trust repeatedly invited and sumptuously entertained leading Air Service officers, financed a costly lobby in Washington, and set on foot a propaganda to convince the people that the airplanes were unsafe for use and should be destroyed. Mr. Woodhouse alleges that the trust sought to enlist his aid, and gave him to understand that their object was contracts with the Government for new machines.

Between June, 1919, and August, 1921, declares Mr. Woodhouse, 150 Air Service officers, whose training has cost $5,000,000, were killed, and aeronautic equipment costing $50,000,000 was destroyed. Investigation is said to reveal that "most of these deaths were attributed to unlawful propaganda campaigns." Nothing more criminal and odious than these offenses charged has come to general attention, and the fact of the matter seems to be that interests which mulcted the Government out of $1,000,000,000 in airplane manufacture during the war have conspired to mulct it out $1,000,000,000 more. They are directly responsible for the destruction of property for which the American people paid hundreds of millions of dollars; and the shameful existing conditions can be remedied only if the Attorney General institutes without delay the Federal grand jury investigations ordered by congressional resolutions in April a year ago.

The Aircraft Trust is now behind a bill to create a bureau of civil aeronautics in the Department of Commerce, and to regulate the operation of civil aircraft, and is flooding the land with literature in its support. The bill is now in the Senate Committee on Commerce, and considering the interests behind it and the fight they are making for its passage, it is to be viewed with deep distrust. What the trust wants is probably what the people do not want. They are beginning now to dimly see why Air Service in America has been arrested in its infantile stage of development, why we have only colossal waste and a series of horrible fatalities to show for all our costly experimentation; and it seems not unreasonable to assume that similar base and greedy interests have been and are at work to foist costly, useless, dangerous gas-bag aircraft on the Government.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I will yield the gentleman from Wyoming one minute.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman who has just spoken has occupied nearly an hour presenting some very serious charges. I had hoped to be able to ask him if he had called the attention of the Attorney General to these matters that he has been discussing. My understanding is that he has not. The gentleman declining to yield, I was unable to ask him the question.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Will the gentleman permit me to make a statement?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I will yield three minutes to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. WOODRUFF. I do not require three minutes, although I thank the gentleman from South Carolina. But I will say this, Mr. Chairman, that while I made an attempt to secure an interview with the Attorney General I have not been successful, and I will say further that some of the things I shall put in the RECORD and which I discussed at length have been called to the attention of the Attorney General, as the record itself will show. I yield back the balance of my time. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman yields back one minute.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MANSFIELD]. [Applause.]

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, the capital of this Nation was recently the scene of what we then considered and what we yet hope will prove to have been the most important diplomatic conference ever participated in by civilized nations. The great World War, which was the direct and proximate result of a race in armaments, had but recently been brought to a termination, and the whole world was groaning under the burdens of taxation due to that great conflict. At the termination of hostilities all the nations that participated in the war, except ours, found themselves financially broke, while we were badly bent, financially speaking.

To the Congress of the United States is due the honor of initiating a movement for the relief of a tax-burdened world. A resolution was adopted, almost unanimously, requesting the President to call a conference for the limitation of armaments by the three great naval powers of the world—the United States, England, and Japan—the relative strength of whose navies was, in my judgment, in the order named.

The President in his wisdom saw proper to add other nations to the list and to extend the scope of the conference to include additional questions pertaining to the Orient, which, on account of their far-reaching possibilities, were deemed necessary of settlement at the same time, thus rendering still more remote any possible need or excuse for further burdening the taxpayers of this and other countries for expensive, unnecessary, and dangerous weapons of war.

The conference, under the guidance of the Secretary of State, was attended with abundant success, and the hopes of the most sanguine were fully realized. This was regarded as the termination and fulfillment of the purposes for which we entered the war and for which our brave soldiers shed their blood upon the battle fields of France.

We are now confronted with a proposition set forth in the minority report of the committee, which, if carried out, will, in my judgment, have the effect of nullifying one of the objects we had in view when we entered the war, and of reducing to a mere "scrap of paper" the conference agreement entered into for limiting armaments. After this agreement providing for the scrapping of such a large proportion of our Navy we now have the Navy Department, from its head to its foot, absolutely demanding that we shall increase the personnel of the Navy to even greater proportions than it has been the past few months, before the scrapping was commenced.

I make no pretense of expert knowledge about naval affairs, and can not say how many men are required to successfully man the ships that are to be in operation hereafter; but, if I am to make a guess, which it seems I must do, I would say that the bill as reported by the majority of the Committee on Appropriations has made provision for even a greater number than will be required.

The General Board has said that 120,000 men are necessary; the Secretary of the Navy says 96,000 and the President says 86,000. Those who favor the minority report tell us that the General Board, the Secretary, and the President all have inside information, and that we should carry out their recommendations. I ask them how it is possible for us to follow all of them when they differ so widely among themselves? Which shall we follow, the President, the Secretary of the Navy, or the General Board?

Between the President and the General Board there is a far greater difference than there is between the President and the majority report of the committee before us. If we can vary from the figures of the President to accept the figures of the General Board, we can far more easily, and with greater prudence and judgment, vary from them to accept the figures of such able and distinguished and experienced men as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY], and the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES], and the other gentlemen constituting the majority in this case.

They ask us, "Why have a Secretary of the Navy and an Assistant Secretary of the Navy, if we can not carry out their recommendations?" To those who make this inquiry I reply by saying, Why have a Committee on Appropriations, if we can not carry out their recommendations? This committee has labored long and zealously to work out this problem. They are men of great ability and wide experience. Some of them, at least, were passing upon naval problems and appropriation bills when some of the gentlemen now connected with the Navy Department under the Secretary were in their swaddling clothes.

I have no criticism to make of the Secretary of the Navy. If he honestly thinks we need 96,000 men and no more, I admire him for having the courage to say so. We are so accustomed to having men at the head of this department who make a complete surrender to those by whom they are surrounded that it is encouraging at least when we have one there who has the temerity to place his recommendation of personnel at 24,000 below the figures recommended by the General Board. This at least shows that he has not been completely mesmerized, as others before him have been.

But, Mr. Chairman, I will say that it has not always been customary for Congress to carry out the recommendations of the heads of departments in making appropriations. If we can not vary from their recommendations, then I will propound another question on the line with that asked by some of the gentlemen on the side of the minority report and ask, Why then have a Congress?

Mr. Chairman, I shall not go into the detail of figures. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY] and the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] have done that. Their statements show that this bill is providing for more men than we now have in the Navy, when, after the scrapping of the large number of ships agreed upon, we could not possibly need as many as we now need.

It has also been shown that we will have approximately the same number of men that England has provided for for the coming year. It has been further shown by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY] that Japan, with the limited number of ships allowed her by the conference, can not possibly use more than 40,000 men to advantage in her navy, and if she makes authorization for a greater number, as some seem to fear, it will add no strength to her naval power.

Mr. Chairman, we hear a great deal said as to the personnel of the English and Japanese navies, and some gentlemen seem to fear that they may provide a greater number of men than we provide for. To my mind there is no weight to that argument. If they should have more men than necessary to man their ships, it will only be an unnecessary burden upon their own taxpayers while adding nothing to their naval power. I care not what they may do along that line. Their farseeing statesmen may wait until we act and then make provision for double the number of men that we do. I could not blame them for doing such a thing, as it would be quite necessary in order to have their personnel more nearly on an equality with ours.

The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] has shown that the bill, while purporting to carry an appropriation of only $233,000,000, is in fact equivalent to $300,000,000, as it authorizes the expenditure of certain unexpended balances and other items that run it up to that amount. Then, in addition to all that, there are $60,000,000 to be paid to the contractors on the unfinished battleships that are being scrapped. This will make a total of $360,000,000 for naval purposes for the coming year, far more than twice the amount appropriated for any year prior to 1916, when we entered upon such a stupendous program of battleship construction.

I would like to call the attention of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] to another little item that might be included. The leading editorial in the Washington Post of to-day calls attention to the proposed ship subsidy of $50,000,000 to our merchant marine, as recommended by the President. The Post suggests that these merchant ships could be manned by the Naval Reserve as a necessary part of the public defense and let it be covered under a naval appropriation. This paper is considered the spokesman of the administration, and this additional amount would swell the grand total to $410,000,000, or $210,000,000 more than I hope the appropriation will amount to next year.

Mr. Chairman, the Conference on Limitation of Armament, about which we have heard so much and which won for us the plaudits of the civilized world, gave the overburdened taxpayers of this country the hope that it would relieve them of a portion of the heavy burdens of taxation with which they have been oppressed. The sacrifice of property which we made by that conference was perhaps considerably greater than the sacrifices of England and Japan combined, as we had a far greater number of capital ships than they in the various stages of construction.

Now, after agreeing to destroy nearly a half billion dollars' worth of naval craft of the highest type, we find the most bitter opposition to having a commensurate decrease in the annual appropriations for naval purposes. If it was the understanding that we were to continue in the race of expenditures, then why did we agree to destroy those magnificent ships? Mr. Chairman, I believe in keeping faith with the taxpayers of this country in carrying out that conference to the fullest extent. I now realize the difficulties the Committee on Appropriations had along that line, and I want to congratulate them upon the great efforts they have made to meet the expectations of the people. [Applause.]

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN]. [Applause.]

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Chairman, first of all I desire to pay my compliments to the distinguished gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY] for his wonderful address on yesterday, and I am saying it sincerely, although he and I are in complete opposition on this destructive, unscientific bill which is before the committee to-day. [Laughter.] The governor is a great lawyer and a great debater, and he could have argued just as consistently on yesterday for 50,000 men in this bill instead of 67,000, and have gotten away with that with equal grace, or for 40,000 even, and gotten away with equal grace. It is very much like the lawyer defending a house wrecker who wrecked the wrong building by mistake and is suing for pay for it. He is a wonderful exhibit of tireless energy. I have worked with him for 10 years on the Committee on Naval Affairs, and I admire him immensely, but this bill, gentlemen, is the climax of all bills ever introduced in Congress for totally ignoring the expert advice of the department which it affects.

I will venture to say, without the fear of successful contradiction, that in the past 10 years no bill has been introduced in this House that so completely ignored the expert advice of the department which it affected. The gentleman on yesterday did not say that a single part of this bill was recommended by expert opinion. The highest ranking officer in the Navy does not recommend anything that is in this bill, not a single item, excepting the names of the ships. But the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY] very cleverly said that there is no dispute between the department and the Committee on Appropriations as to the number of ships. We have numbered them and we have named them. So far so good. The names of the ships are not in dispute, but the gentleman says that with the appropriation for 67,000 men they are going to man the ships effectively and that the small Navy men are the judges. This bill was framed by little Navy men, so called.

I have always liked to follow our distinguished leader on this side of the aisle; he is a great man—not Governor KELLEY, but the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL]. I will put them both in the same class. They are great men and great leaders, but let me call the attention of the House, and particularly the younger Members in point of service, that the gentleman from Wyoming, from the day that he first put foot in this Chamber has been a little Navy man. He is our leader, but we are now face to face with a most serious question—the protection of our country—and each man must draw his own conclusions and vote accordingly. I have no argument with him about that.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRITTEN. Inasmuch as I have referred to the gentleman; yes.

Mr. MONDELL. I do not know what the gentleman means when he says a "little Navy man." I do not recall a time in my whole service in the House when I have been for the smallest program presented, when programs were presented smaller than those presented by the committee. I do not know of a time when I have not supported the committee of the House in the naval program. I did not go to the extreme, and I have not gone to what I considered the extreme position sometimes held by some of the gentlemen here, but there certainly never was a time when I could properly be classed as a "little Navy man," whatever that may be. I have not a naval station in my district, so I am not interested.

Mr. BRITTEN. Nor have I.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman is very close to a very large training station.

Mr. BRITTEN. It is being made very small in this bill. The Great Lakes Station has done more for the Navy personnel than all of the other stations combined. It can still be retained to great advantage.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Is that the secret of the gentleman's opposition?

Mr. BRITTEN. Oh, no; not at all. The gentleman and I are equally interested in Great Lakes.

Answering our distinguished leader, I will tell him what I mean by a "little Navy man." When our dear old friend on the other side of the aisle, Judge Witherspoon, that great naval annalist—and he was a great man—came in here with an amendment for one ship instead of two as carried in the bill, the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] voted for the smaller Navy, and again when a bill carried three capital ships, he would support an amendment for two ships. It is easy for him to say now that he has always been for an adequate Navy. What is the definition of the word "adequate," and who will define it for the Navy? He may be as much for the national defense as anybody else, but he has always been looked upon as a little Navy fellow. I am sorry that I can not follow him on this bill. It has been customary in the past on matters affecting the Navy to accept, at least in principle, the advice of the highest naval authority in America, not necessarily in detail, but in principle. What is that authority? It is the Navy General Board, is it not?

Who represents the Naval General Board in the Navy Department? Admiral Coontz, the highest ranking officer in the Navy; and, of course, when he and his various bureau chiefs come before Members of Congress and request specific appropriations, it is natural they do so from expert authority. And yet these gentlemen on the committee, the little Navy fellows, say, "You do not need 1,100 men on a ship. In 1916 you had only 850 on that same ship."

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRITTEN. I will yield, because you will yield me more time if I need it.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I will. Last year Admiral Coontz, who is a very fine and efficient naval officer, requested $680,000,000 for the Navy. Of course, Congress could not give him that sum of money. I was wondering if the gentleman from Illinois thinks we ought to have given him $680,000,000 for this current year?

Mr. BRITTEN. I just said that we do not always accept in detail the advice or the suggestions of the highest authorities, because some people may go too far one way, as you have done. I will say to the gentleman now that both the Navy Department and the administration have requested 96,000 men as necessary to properly man the ships provided for in recent treaties. The Committee on Naval Affairs of the House has gone on record, almost unanimously, by the introduction of a bill which is now on the House Calendar, for an authorization of 86,000 men. And I differ with expert authorities to this extent: I am inclined to believe they can get along with 86,000 men, although I am sure they could do better with 96,000, and all the evidence that has been presented to the Committee on Appropriations will prove that beyond the question of a doubt, and I will prove to you, gentlemen, by figures—authentic figures; not newspaper clippings; not by reference to our Navy of 1916, as the gentleman did yesterday—but prove to you in figures that we ought to be appropriating for not less than 84,000 men to-day. If we are going to accept the British ratio of tonnage and men and if we accept the Japanese ratio, we ought to be appropriating for 125,000 men for next year.

My information is not taken out of any Japanese newspapers, or out of any newspaper from England quoted yesterday, but it is accumulated by our best authorities, the Office of Naval Intelligence of the Navy, which has its channels in many, many directions for getting information. And they say—not this little naval committee—they say that on the ratio established by England we ought to be appropriating for 100,000 men at once and allow that number to work down to 84,000 by March 4, 1923, and, on the other hand, if we are going to accept the Japanese ratio—and, gentlemen, let me suggest to you that the Japanese ships are finely manned; that their navy, although smaller than ours by intent, so far as this treaty is concerned, will be superior to ours with only 65,000 men, because of the ability of superior personnel to properly handle their ships while we go along with skeleton crews.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield now?

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Does the gentleman say that the Committee on Naval Affairs decided there should be appropriated money sufficient for a personnel of 86,000 for the coming year?

Mr. BRITTEN. No; the gentleman knows I did not say that.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. What did the gentleman say?

Mr. BRITTEN. He knows I did not say that because he knows naval affairs too well to assume that. That is just one of the gentleman's ways to confuse the situation, as he did on yesterday, when he might have been talking about 40,000 men instead of 60,000 and gotten away with it. The Committee on Naval Affairs has a bill on the calendar now authorizing an enlisted personnel of the Navy at 86,000 men.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. The authorized strength now is 137,000 men.

Mr. BRITTEN. I understand that.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. What does the gentleman mean by saying that the Naval Committee wants 86,000 men?

Mr. BRITTEN. Of course, you and I are not going to waste any time in arguing unnecessary questions. You are confusing the issue.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I should be happy to know just what the Naval Committee had in mind when it suggested an authorized strength or a maximum strength of 86,000 men.

Mr. BRITTEN. The Committee on Naval Affairs has reported a bill which reduces the authorized enlisted strength of the Navy to 86,000, and that bill is now on the calendar. That is thoroughly plain.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Was it the intention of the Committee on Naval Affairs that the Congress should appropriate for 86,000 men for this current year?

Mr. BRITTEN. The Committee on Naval Affairs is not an appropriating committee, and it has not considered that side of it at all. The gentleman knows that.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I do not see any force in the gentleman's statement because it is not responsive to my question.

Mr. BRITTEN. I do not see any value in the gentleman's question. He is trying to befuddle this thing, and he is not getting away with it. [Laughter.]

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BRITTEN. I will yield to the gentleman from Alabama later.

Mr. OLIVER. It is very pertinent.

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes, I know; but the question of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY] appeared pertinent to him, and it was not. [Laughter.] But the gentleman from Michigan on yesterday called attention to the fact that the British Navy on March 1, 1923, will comprise 98,500 men. That is correct. That is according to their budget. And then he said, in order to throw a lot of sand in your eyes, that that 98,000 men included their marines and all their officers and the boys on the high seas, and then he added, "Of course if we are going to make a comparison of navies we shall have to include our marines, 20,000 of them." Then I said, "Our marines are not seamen at all; they are soldiers; they are landsmen; they do not as a whole belong on the battleships"; and I asked the gentleman how many of our 20,000 marines were afloat to-day, and he said, "I do not know." Yet he was willing to add our 20,000 marines to the 67,000 men carried in the bill, and say, "We are appropriating for 87,000 men for the Navy." The marine is a soldier and a land fighter. He is not a naval officer; he is not a ship man at all. But the British marines included in their 98,000 men are, every one of them, seamen, and they ought to be and are included in the British enlisted personnel. They are just as much seamen as are sailors in the British Navy. Is it quite fair to say, "Well, if you are going to include in the 98,000 for Great Britain 10,000 marines, all of them seamen"—and I do not think he told you the number—"we should also include our 20,000 marines who are not seamen." Of course, he ran the figures up, and then he said, "We will add our cadets and our midshipmen and our officers," and so on down the line, and, finally, when he got through, he took his glasses off and wiped them, with that luscious smile of his—and Lord knows how he can smile!—he wiped his glasses and said, "Why, gentlemen, you could almost close your eyes and hear the appropriation for the British Navy read and think that it referred to the American Navy." [Laughter.]

Mr. LINEBERGER. That is a joke.

Mr. BRITTEN. Exactly. It is a joke; but he gets away with it, and for the time being covered 20,000 non-Navy men into the service for comparative purposes.

Mr. Chairman, Great Britain has at the present time—January 1, 1922, list—15,107 officers and marines, of which 506 are officers and 14,601 are enlisted men.

She proposes by March 31, 1923, to reduce this number to 9,800 officers and marines, of which 400 are officers.

At the present time Great Britain carries 110 marines on each battleship and battle cruiser in reduced commission. She also carries 12 marines on each of her 33 light cruisers.

The British marines do not do any expeditionary work such as we perform in Santo Domingo, in Haiti, in Nicaragua, and in China. All that class of work is done by the Army. She has no expeditionary bases such as we have at Quantico.

At the present time we have about 1,980 marines afloat, and there are 5,069 engaged in expeditionary work, and 3,800 detailed at expeditionary bases.

The British marines when on board ships are part of the ship's company. For light cruisers they are used as servants. On the battleships and battle cruisers they man at least one of the big turrets complete.

Practically the whole British Marine Corps is at sea or in depots training for sea. It is purely a seagoing corps. They do not guard navy yards and stations.

Ninety per cent of the American Marine Corps is always ashore and is never assumed to be seagoing.

Mr. Chairman, I will say in a complimentary way to the gentleman that before he started to speak yesterday more than 50 per cent of this House would have voted favorably for 86,000 men, and when he got through I do not think they would have voted for 40,000; he is so convincing. But he wound up his very eloquent address by reading an extract from the President's speech to the Conference on the Limitation of Armaments—beautiful language, language as fine as was ever uttered by the mouth of man—and he suggested that "Of course we are going into this great world work now, and we must stand by the President."

The gentleman had a conference with the President the other day. When I asked him if he could consistently inform the House just what attitude the President took on the Navy appropriation bill, he got as pettish as a 6-year-old child that had just broken a slate or something, and said I ought to withdraw the question. There were no presidential strings on his telling the House. The Members of the House have been told, the committee has been told, the country has been told what the President's desires are. The gentleman from Michigan does not care to admit that the President wants 90,000 men. Oh, no; that would be violating a confidence. He sat with the President one night—he and my handsome colleague from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN]—sat with the President one night, and they had quite a talk about this very thing.

Mr. OLDFIELD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRITTEN. I have not the time now. Will the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY] give me a little time later?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I think so.

Mr. BRITTEN. You are not going to "think" about this?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Well, then, I will.

Mr. BRITTEN. You will?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes. Does not the gentleman believe that the President is able to do his own talking?

Mr. BRITTEN. He did, to you. [Applause.]

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Then I will ask the question in another way.

Mr. BRITTEN. Then the answer will be the same.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. In that event the answer will again have the applause of all the navy yards in the country. [Laughter.] I will ask the gentleman this: Does not the gentleman think that if he had a conversation with the President about any matter that he ought at least to have the consent of the President before making public the conversation?

Mr. BRITTEN. I will answer that by asking if the President requested the gentleman not to divulge his desires on this Navy personnel matter?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Oh, I know that there are gentlemen who would go up to the White House and talk with the President and then peddle what the President said up and down the street.

Mr. BRITTEN. I have never accused the gentleman of having a guilty conscience.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I have not pursued that course. If the gentleman ever should be consulted by the President about any matter, I am sure he would not do that.

Mr. BRITTEN. That merely accentuates what I have said in four or five different ways. The gentleman will try to befuddle an issue, and get away with it when he can. We had a naval officer named Sammy McGowan. He was a great man. He was Chief of the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts. That fellow, like Governor KELLEY, got away with anything because he had a wonderful smile. Governor KELLEY knows that he was not bound to secrecy in his conversation with the President the other night. There were others who had conversations with the President, and there was nothing secret about it. He had rather refer to the President's address at the opening of the armament conference than to tell the House plainly that the President of the United States and his administration and the Secretary of the Navy and the highest ranking naval authorities in America are for 96,000 men. He had rather tell you the other things.

Now the question is, Who is going to determine whether we ought to have 96,000 men or 67,000 seamen plus 20,000 marines who are not sailors. Of course, under an agreement with the Secretary of War I suppose we could put the Philippine Scouts on our ships out in the Asiatic Squadron.

Mr. OLDFIELD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRITTEN. No; I had rather not. I thank the gentleman very much. I know he desires to help me. The gentleman even goes a little further. You know he was very adroit about handling the Japanese situation. He was not interrupted, but here is how he handled it. He did not tell the House how many men are in the Japanese Navy to-day, not a figure. He did not tell the House that the Japanese 60 days ago appropriated almost $200,000,000 gold for their coming naval budget. I will give you the exact figures—$196,831,000, based on a yen at 50 cents. Gentlemen, in working and earning and producing capacity that is four times what our $233,000,000 is—four times as much. He did not tell you that.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. What was the date of that appropriation?

Mr. BRITTEN. February 22, 1922.

Mr. YATES. Was that for the Navy?

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes; Japan's naval budget. Governor KELLEY did not tell you that. When he started to analyze the difference between the Japanese Navy and ours he said we had so many men in our Navy in 1916. I asked him why he did not compare the proposed Navy under the treaty, the Japanese Navy of some 300,000 tons, with ours at 525,000 tons.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Can the gentleman state the amount of the Japanese appropriation that was for new construction?

Mr. BRITTEN. No; this is their entire naval budget.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes; including the new construction before their program was abandoned and old ships scrapped.

Mr. BRITTEN. No; this was in February of this year.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. The gentleman has not given the amount that was for new construction.

Mr. BRITTEN. No. I say I have given the total amount of their budget, and the gentleman can not confuse me by asking for the specific items that make up this amount, because they can not be given.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. If the gentleman can not give it——

Mr. BRITTEN. I will satisfy the gentleman fully on this Japanese comparison, because I have got the figures, and I did not get them out of a Japanese newspaper through our mutual friend, TINKHAM, of Massachusetts, either. [Laughter.]

The gentleman, instead of giving the actual number of men in the Japanese Navy and the actual amount appropriated for, talked about the number of men we had in 1916. Mind you, all of these figures as to Japan come from our best authority, the Intelligence Bureau of the Navy Department. The gentleman did not tell us that the Japanese had 76,000 enlisted men in their navy to-day, and he did not tell you that the new appropriation was to provide for 71,052 by March, 1923. No; when I asked him to compare our Navy with the Japanese Navy provided for under the treaty he said, "I think the best way would be to take the 1916 program of ours, and then we will take the number of men we had in our Navy in 1916 and assume that Japan is going to use that number of men." Where does he get that method of reasoning? Well, of course, he very ingeniously and knowingly selected the number of our personnel in the year 1916, because at that time the Navy General Board, the Committee on Naval Affairs, and almost every expert authority in the country were complaining because most of our ships had skeleton crews on them. In the Pacific we had 90 per cent of our ships laid up with skeleton crews, because we did not have the men, and Secretary Daniels successfully opposed any increases in the enlisted personnel, and the Navy was short of men. That is the reason. You who were here during those days remember that the Navy General Board made a specific request for some 26,000 more men, and Secretary Daniels pigeonholed that request. We brought it out of the pigeonhole by an indirect method and showed the situation up. Why would it not be much better to compare the Japanese Navy of to-day instead of using our personnel in 1916? The truth of the matter is that this treaty which has just gone through the Senate and which no doubt will be ratified by Japan provides that Japan shall have 300,000 tons, approximately, of capital ships. It provides that we shall have 525,000 tons, or thereabouts. It is remarkable also at this point to remember that we had only 500,000 tons of capital ships in commission on November 1, 1921, and the treaty provides that we are entitled to 25,000 tons more than that; and, besides, it gives us 135,000 tons more for first-line aviation carriers, a net increase of 160,000 tons of capital ships. The gentleman's committee appropriated for 106,000 men when we had but 500,000 tons of capital ships.

The treaty gives us 160,000 tons more than we had last year, and yet they are appropriating for 39,000 men less than they appropriated for last year. Those figures are taken from the hearings. They are positive.

Mr. Chairman, the authorized number of enlisted men in the Navy to-day is 137,000.

The actual number of men in the Navy is 94,000.

The Secretary of the Navy says he needs 96,000 to man the Navy specified by Mr. Hughes in the limitation of armament agreement.

The Appropriations Committee of the House has provided money for only 65,000 men.

The sum appropriated in the naval appropriation bill will provide for 67,000 men. This means a reduction before July 1 of 31,000 men, or nearly 33 per cent of the enlisted personnel. This reduction is made without previous warning in less than three months.

The radical reduction of the Navy to 65,000 men, the ruthless discharge of 33 per cent of the personnel in less than three months, will, first, leave the service without sufficient men to carry on its necessary duties; and, second, it will destroy the efficiency and morale of those that remain.

The proposed treaty "limiting naval armaments," chapter 2, part 1, contains the names of the battleships to be retained by the United States.

With 65,000 men the Secretary of the Navy states that only 12 of these ships can be kept in full commission.

The relative strength of the British, American, and Japanese navies had just been set by the Limitation of Armament Conference in the ratio of 5-5-3.

If 65,000 men are provided in the Navy, two plans are open to this country, and two only.

PLAN 1.

The battleships, cruisers, destroyers, and submarines provided by the Limitation of Armament Conference can be manned, together with a limited number of absolutely necessary auxiliaries; but, if this plan is adopted, it will be necessary, first, to remove all the fleet from the Atlantic coast and to concentrate the Navy in the Pacific. This will reduce all Atlantic coast navy yards to a condition of practical disuse. Portsmouth, Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Norfolk, Charleston, and Pensacola will suffer. Second, protection of American trade and other interests in China must be curtailed. The Special Service Squadron in Central America, protecting American trade and other interests, must be abandoned. The invaluable work being done in Europe, in the Mediterranean, Black Sea, and so forth, in assisting expansion of American trade and commerce and in protecting the property of American citizens in those regions, must be eliminated.

PLAN II.

If the necessary international duties mentioned above are performed—that is, if the China Squadron, the European Squadron, and the Central American Squadron are continued, then 65,000 men will not man more than 12 battleships, with necessary auxiliaries. The Limitation of Armament Conference allowed the United States 18 battleships and Japan 10 battleships.

Mr. Chairman, the serious condition outlined above confronts the force afloat if the enlisted personnel of the Navy is reduced to 65,000 men.

The necessary naval activities ashore will be still further impeded. It will be necessary to fill 32,000 vacancies in the enlisted personnel during the next fiscal year. The time available for training these men will be very short, owing to the reduced number of men allowed. The result on efficiency and morale of the service is apparent.

Partly trained men in large numbers must be sent on board ship. The efficiency of the Navy will thus be reduced. All but two training stations must be closed. In all probability Great Lakes, Newport, Alexandria, Va., will be shut down. Many navy yards, torpedo stations, aviation stations, communication stations must be abandoned.

A large number of civilian workmen will be thrown out of work. Very valuable public property must be allowed to deteriorate. The money loss will be very great.

For many years the policy of the Government has been to maintain an adequate Navy, and every effort has been made to attract to the service young men of American citizenship; to give them an honorable career in the Navy, leading to commissioned, warrant, or petty officer rank. Only such a course could give to the Nation the number of skilled men that go to the manning of the fleet. The present sudden and radical departure from this policy involves a breach of moral contract with many thousand of these men who implicitly believed the promises that the Government, through its agents, has made to them in the past. It was this group of men to whom the country turned when, in 1917, it became necessary to furnish armed guards to merchant ships. These were the men available to carry out immediately the naval activities which the country proposed in 1917. These were the men who instructed and drilled the new men called out by the duration of war. After long service, after creditable and honorable service in the late war, many of these men must be discharged without warning, and the privileges which they believed were theirs must be ruthlessly taken from them.

The result of these ruthless cuts in the personnel of the Navy is to drive out of it the trained and experienced men, to be replaced by new enlistments and recruits. The number of the first enlistments has rapidly increased since 1919 and numbers now about 70 per cent.

There is no similarity between the trained personnel working as a team for the defense of a country and the operation of a labor market, where the contractor hires by the day and week and discharges when the work is done. It is this phase of personnel employment from which the Shipping Board is beginning to escape that this bill seeks to inculcate in the Navy.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRITTEN. As soon as I get this one thought out of my mind's eye.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. This is a good place for you to stop.

Mr. BRITTEN. I am the best judge of that. [Applause.] But the gentleman has thrown me entirely off my line of argument, and I will have to yield to him.

Mr. Chairman, if that bill had been framed by the British and Japanese delegates to the armament conference, instead of by an American congressional committee, and if they had intended to wreck our Navy, they could not have more deliberately reduced the United States to a third-class naval power than the appropriation bill contemplates.

Treaties promoted by the recent armament conference for world's peace and safety have designated America as a first-class sea power with 18 first-line fighting ships and a total tonnage of 500,000. Unless all these ships are thoroughly manned and highly efficient, any money expended on the Navy is wasted and the losses of an extravagant war are forgotten.

The present authorized strength of the Navy is 137,500 men.

The Committee on Naval Affairs in attempting to meet the desires of the President have introduced a bill changing this authorization to 86,000 men, while the bill from the Appropriations Committee provides only for 65,000 men, a number insufficient to man what Navy is left us.

A ranking general of our Army recently said, "If you must slash appropriations in the interest of economy, at least keep the Navy large enough to protect our coast lines long enough for us to mobilize an army. The Navy must be the first line of defense, and is therefore of much greater importance to the country than a skeleton Army."

Mr. Chairman, our Navy has suffered in the past through constantly changing policies by various Congresses, until now when an international treaty for the first time in more than a hundred years definitely fixes a policy for 500,000 tons of first-line ships. In the interest of world's safety our ships must be maintained at the very highest point of efficiency, and yet we find a congressional committee that appears willing to force upon the country a much smaller ratio of men per ship than even Japan would countenance or England has.

I do not believe that the country will stand for this wholesale scuttling of the Navy, and the quicker it is aroused to indignation the better for future economy.

The appropriation bill would almost immediately throw 33 per cent of the enlisted men out of the service and so thoroughly destroy the morale of the balance that our Navy would become a joke as a world protector.

The Secretary of the Navy says he needs 96,000 men to man the Navy established by Secretary Hughes in international agreements.

The President of the United States says he is willing to compromise on the number of men and earnestly hopes for from 80,000 to 90,000 enlisted personnel.

The Committee on Naval Affairs has almost unanimously recommended an authorized strength of 86,000 and this number I believe is the least that the Navy can successfully operate with, yet appropriation is made for but 65,000.

Mr. Chairman, should a limitation of 65,000 men be inflicted upon the Navy it would mean the shutting down of practically every yard and station on the Atlantic coast and the concentration of our forces in the Pacific. It would mean the curtailment of protection for the Panama Canal. American interests and trade in China as well as in Central America would be hampered. The invaluable work being done in Europe, in the Mediterranean and Black Seas for the expansion and protection of American trade would have to be discontinued for lack of men.

Sixty-five thousand enlisted men will allow but one hospital ship for the entire Navy; aviation, the very backbone of our new national defense, would be limited to 2,100 men ashore and afloat, a most ridiculous comparison with the numbers carried in foreign aviation forces.

Students and enlisted personnel in trade schools would be cut to 500, while men under training at the various stations would be cut to less than 3,200 and would, of course, necessitate the practical abandonment of every training station in the United States.

Our ridiculously balanced Navy would have to get along with two colliers, one repair ship, one store ship, and one aircraft carrier.

Ships can not operate without men, and cold tonnage in steel commands no respect.

The Armament Conference naval ratio of 5-5-3 for Great Britain, United States, and Japan, respectively, will be changed to 5-3-3 with America on the tail end.

No log-rolling, pork-barrel extravagance during my 10 years in Congress has been so wasteful and ill-timed as this reckless demoralization of the Navy under the cloak of economy.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I want to inquire whether or not the gentleman thinks that the men carried during the present year, to the number of 18,000 men, on the destroyers should be provided for in this bill?

Mr. BRITTEN. Oh, I refuse to go into an argument as to how many men ought to be carried on a destroyer. You could carry 110 or 85, and under certain conditions you could carry 135 men.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. The gentleman was saying——

Mr. BRITTEN. What difference does it make whether we appropriate for 110 men or 85 men?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I am not speaking of quotas. The gentleman was saying that we did not expect to keep any more men on the capital ships——

Mr. BRITTEN. No; I did not say that. What is the idea the gentleman desires to bring out through his own language, and then I will try and answer it?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I think we are not very far apart——

Mr. BRITTEN. Only about 19,000 men.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Last year we appropriated for 106,000 men, and at that time we were having in commission only 18 capital ships.

Mr. BRITTEN. I did not say anything about the number of ships; I said 500,000 tons.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. That is the same thing, 500,000 tons; and now we propose to keep the same number in commission with 67,000 men, but all of the 301 destroyers——

Mr. BRITTEN. Who said so?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. The committee——

Mr. BRITTEN. Oh, of course, they say it; and I am going to show that they are wrong. [Laughter.]

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I am asking the gentleman this, if he will listen.

Mr. BRITTEN. I am listening as much as the gentleman from Michigan listened to me yesterday.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I may say to the gentleman that the situation is quite different, and it would have been better if he had listened to me yesterday.

Mr. BRITTEN. It is different; I have the floor to-day. [Laughter.]

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. This is what I want to ask the gentleman: Does the gentleman think that we ought to appropriate for keeping all the destroyers for the coming year in full commission?

Mr. BRITTEN. Oh, you might as well ask me if we ought to keep certain tenders in commission.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. It makes a difference of the 19,000 men that the gentleman says constitutes the difference between us.

Mr. BRITTEN. I am not talking about wiping all the destroyers out of existence; you would not dare do that now.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. We have 301 altogether, and a difference of 200 out of commission would make a difference of 20,000 men. Now, I am asking the gentleman if he wants us to carry that additional 20,000 men?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I will yield to the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. BRITTEN. Will not the gentleman make it 10 minutes?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I will yield five minutes at a time. We will see how good use the gentleman makes of the time. [Laughter.]

Mr. BRITTEN. Well, that is what I call a manipulation of the big stick. I have to be kind to the gentleman now. [Laughter.] I will answer the gentleman in this way: If the Navy General Board and the president of the War College and the highest naval experts say that we need 200 destroyers because of our experience in the war, because the destroyer has found a new place in naval warfare—and we have no great battle cruisers—I will be for what they want, and I will tell you why. The gentleman yesterday said when he was around the Committee on Naval Affairs it was assumed that four destroyers would go with a battleship, and that was enough. But the truth of the matter is 44 destroyers may accompany a battleship now, because submarines, aviation, antiaircraft, and so forth, radio, and aviation have so changed modern warfare that I am willing to leave the number of ships and men, as well as the operation of our craft, to our best naval authorities. [Applause.]

Are you going to let a lot of little Navy fellows tell the highest naval authorities in the country that they do not need 1,100 men on a ship, that they have to get along with 900 or less? Then, the gentleman from Michigan refers to his list of ships on page 3 of the committee report, and he says that there is no dispute about this thing, that they are in complete accord with the Navy Department, that they want to satisfy the Navy Department. Let me tell you how he arrives at his desires in building up a case. I remember when he was over in our committee and we leaned on him very heavily, because he is a very able man. We would call in the department and say, "We are going to appropriate $200,000,000 for the Navy this year; show us how you can spend it." He called in the Navy Department the other day and said, "We are going to give you 65,000 men; how will you distribute them?"

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Oh, nothing of the sort.

Mr. BRITTEN. I will qualify my remarks by saying that I got that information from the naval officer himself.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. It does not make any difference from whom the gentleman got it. The committee did not proceed in that manner.

Mr. SWING. I would refer the gentleman to the page in the hearings where the question was asked—page 347.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I will say this: That after arriving at the figure of 67,000, and they insisted that the number was not adequate for an 18-battleship fleet, we asked the Navy Department to apportion that number of men to such ships as in their judgment they would man with that number.

Mr. BRITTEN. Oh, the gentleman is finally getting around to it, and he will be my way with both feet in just a minute or two. I have got it right here. Let me tell the gentleman what transpired. This naval officer came to my office and I said, "Admiral, can the Navy get along with 65,000 men?" and he said, "I have just brought you a statement that I was asked to give to the Committee on Appropriations"—this little Navy committee here—and he said, "Here is the way we distribute the 65,000 men," and out of the 18 first-line ships only 12 of them are fully manned.

Distribution afloat.

	Personnel.
12 battleships, first line (95 per cent complements)	14,244
6 battleships, first line (in ordinary)	1,236
4 cruisers, second line	2,596
3 light cruisers, first line	1,257
3 light cruisers, second line	876
1 aircraft carrier, second line	339
1 mine layer, second line	356
65 destroyers, first line (90 per cent complements)	6,630
50 destroyers, first line (50 per cent complements)	2,850
4 light mine layers (90 per cent complements)	380
84 submarines, first line	2,579
ABSOLUTELY NECESSARY AUXILIARIES.
10 patrol vessels, gunboats	866
4 patrol vessels	430
5 destroyer tenders	2,309
7 submarine tenders	1,882
1 aircraft tender	286
1 repair ship	430
1 store ship	268
2 colliers	328
7 oilers	763
2 ammunition ships	354
5 cargo vessels	451
3 transports	833
1 hospital ship	361
8 tugs (including 6 station ships)	340
10 mine sweepers (2 mine sweeping, 7 fleet towing, and 1 air tender)	477
4 auxiliaries, miscellaneous)	388
Flag complements	791
Fleet aviation	1,100
	46,000
Ashore	19,000
Total	65,000

That is a matter of record. Of course, if we want to get along with 12 fully manned ships, 65,000 men will suffice. Then we go down the line and we find that there is provided only one hospital ship for the Navy, that there is provided only one repair ship for the Navy, one store ship, and without going into all of these figures in detail they cut down ships wherever it is possible in order to meet the desires of this little Navy committee. Then the gentleman comes in and says that they are in complete accord, that there are 18 ships by name, and that they are the ones that are named by the Navy Department, but only 12 of them can be put in commission; and let me say to you gentlemen to-day, and I am just as serious as I can be about it, that 65,000 or 67,000 men will make our Navy from 10 to 15 per cent inferior in fighting value to the Japanese Navy within five months from to-day. There is no question about that.

Men fight with ships; and when the Navy Department sent a statement like this to the Committee on Appropriations, and said that with 65,000 men they can man only 12 of these first-line ships, that means that our Navy is instantly reduced not only in its fighting spirit but in its morale. How do you suppose the men feel when they see themselves grabbed by the seat of the pants and thrown out of their lifetime vocations and desires?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has again expired.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Is my colleague satisfied, from the attitude of the Navy Department, that if we appropriate for an enlisted personnel of only 65,000 men, only 12 of the 18 capital ships will be kept in commission or——

Mr. BRITTEN. Fully manned—yes; I am satisfied.

Mr. MANN. Does that mean with a full complement?

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes.

Mr. MANN. What would be the lack of complement for the other six?

Mr. BRITTEN. Twelve battleships, first line, 95 per cent complement, 14,224 men; six battleships, first line—for the six of them—1,236 men; less than 200 men on a ship. That is what 65,000 or 67,000 men would mean.

Mr. MANN. How many more men would it take to give the full complement to the entire 18 capital ships?

Mr. BRITTEN. Answering the gentleman's question exactly as it is put, it will take about 1,100 men per ship additional, making the deduction, of course, for the 1,236 already included.

Mr. MADDEN. That would be about 5,500 men additional?

Mr. BRITTEN. Let me suggest this, that the battleship does not go alone——

Mr. MANN. Oh, I understand that.

Mr. BRITTEN. About 1,100 men per ship, and that figure of 1,100 will be questioned by these little navy fellows.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Would 86,000 men man all of these 18 ships?

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes; the Committee on Naval Affairs by its action thinks that 86,000 men should be adequate.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. What does the Navy Department think?

Mr. BRITTEN. They requested 96,000.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. And so it comes about that the gentleman is willing to set his judgment up against that of the Navy Department. I am both pained and shocked.

Mr. BRITTEN. I am willing to vote for 86,000 men, and I hope that most of the House will, because that is what the country wants. The country is not going to stand for our Navy ranking third with the navies of the world. [Applause.]

Mr. McARTHUR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes.

Mr. McARTHUR. And is it not true that in the presentation of this bill the Committee on Appropriations is seeking to usurp the legislative functions of the Committee on Naval Affairs, which has had a bill on the calendar in this House dealing with this question since the 22d day of March?

Mr. BRITTEN. Of course we all know that that is true. This is a one or a two man bill. The entire Committee on Appropriations considered this bill very seriously, with its 63 pages, for 10 minutes last Saturday morning. Sure, they know all about what is in the bill. I tried to get a copy of it Friday afternoon and could not because the committee was to get it next morning, and after debating it very seriously for all of 10 or 12 minutes they voted it out unanimously. This little Naval Committee says that we do not need more than eight or nine hundred men on one of these first-line ships. They talk about the 1916 ratio that we had before the war. Before the war there were two radio sets on one of those big ships. There are five now. We did not have the highly specialized fire control in those days as we have it to-day, and fire control, spotting the shot, spotting the target, is the most important operation aboard ship.

Unless you can tell the fellow down below where the shot lands, you will never hit, because the pointer does not see the target most of the time.

There was practically nothing for aviation in 1916. Let me tell you what these gentlemen are going to do. They are going to provide 2,100 men for aviation ashore. England's Navy has 10,000. When I was in Europe last year I was told by our attachés that many of the best Italian and French aviation instructors in Europe were now instructing the Japanese how to fly. Do you know what is going to happen if this bill goes through for 67,000 men? The most important branch of the Navy is going to suffer the worst, and that is aviation. We can not develop at once a flyer, a spotter, a bomber, a combat man, one who is to fly from the deck of a ship in a rough sea. He has to fly off the deck of a ship with a land plane and come back to that ship or die.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I will give the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. BRITTEN. The gentleman is very kind. I am going to be very polite to him in the future. [Laughter and applause.]

Let me tell you, gentlemen, that if there is one black blotch on our war record it is in connection with aviation. And I predict to you, gentlemen, that unless the enlisted personnel is set at such a figure that aviation will come into its own we might just as well kiss ourselves good-by if we have to fight an up-to-date power whose aviation is superior to ours. Because they will lick us; they will wipe us off the face of the sea, if they have got good aviation and we have not. Aviation will decide the sea battle first, almost before the capital ships have fired a shot. We will start to shoot at 20 or 30 miles, long before we can see the ship over the horizon, and that shot should be spotted by an aviator, and he will immediately be attacked by the enemy. He has got to fight for his life. And any man knows that he will never get back to his ship.

In a time of turmoil and battle aviators must protect themselves, and it is the survival of the fittest. Aviators will find the enemy, destroy him if possible, guide or direct big-gun fire.

Are you going to limit this force to a couple of thousand men when aviation is in its infancy? Are you going to provide according to this schedule here that was presented by the gentleman from Michigan, on page 8? He shows that in naval training stations and trade schools they appropriated for the wonderful number of 1,300 men. Think of it. Thirteen hundred men in training for the American Navy in our training stations and trade schools learning aviation, radio, and everything that goes with the modern, up-to-date Navy, and these little Navy gentlemen, with all the assurance that this is just exactly as it ought to be, say that they have provided liberally for the Navy.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. The gentleman speaks of an allowance of 1,300 men for training; that number is allowed not for training but for men assigned to schools as caretakers, instructors, and the like, not students.

Mr. BRITTEN. How many do you provide in training?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. We provide for 7,000 unassigned men. If you figure 7 per cent for sick, the prisoners, and those in transit, or about 4,500 men, that will leave about 2,500 for training. And we have less than 5,000 men in training now, with 96,000 men in the Navy.

Mr. BRITTEN. I will read the gentleman's language:

> Having in mind the reduced establishment made possible by the pending treaty and by the policy of keeping in commission only the 18-battleship fleet and necessary patrol craft, the committee believes that the number of men contained in the table below will be ample for shore purposes.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. The men assigned to training stations in the table given by the committee are not under training but take care of the station and act as instructors.

Mr. BRITTEN. I remember the gentleman's language of yesterday very well.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. The gentleman is either thinking wrong or unconsciously misinterpreting the situation.

Mr. BRITTEN. I may be misinterpreting, but I am reading the gentleman's report.

Mr. Chairman, let me explain a few defects in that hastily prepared report.

On page 1 of the committee's report under the heading "Appropriated, 1922," there is given a total of $413,239,949.23. The committee fails to state that in the second deficiency act, fiscal year 1922, there was appropriated and reappropriated $10,000,000 on which about $7,147,718 did not come out of this year's savings.

In the same tabulation at the foot of the first page the committee neglects to state that the "Estimates, 1923," of $425,000,000 is the department's estimate for a Navy of 106,000 men as submitted. The sum "Proposed, 1923," of $233,000,000 is the amount proposed by the committee itself on the basis of 67,000 men, for which the basis was supplied by the committee, and the items which make up the total of $233,000,000 were also supplied by the committee in modification of the department's figures.

It is noted in the middle of page 2 that the committee states that it has proceeded on the assumption that sufficient personnel "should" be provided to keep these capital ships in full commission together with all the necessary destroyers, submarines, and so forth, and every other auxiliary necessary to make the 18-battleship fleet complete, well rounded, and properly manned and officered. As a matter of fact, the committee after saying that these things "should" be done does not carry out its premise in any way whatsoever (see pages 216 to 232 of the hearings).

It is noted at the bottom of page 2 that the committee says it had difficulty in determining the allowance of personnel for ships to be kept in commission on account of varying opinions of naval experts. As a matter of fact, there is no difference of opinion in regard to the complement of ships. The ships' complements are definite numbers. These figures are subject to examination. On page 224 of the hearings will be found a statement of the proposed allowance for 1923 for certain ships as submitted by the department. In submitting this allowance the department had already made considerable concessions in reductions of personnel. The proposed 1923 allowance on page 224 is only 95 per cent of the official complements of the ship. The ships require even more men than this to man them fully.

Mr. Chairman, on page 3 it is noted that the committee used as the basis for its figures the numbers of personnel actually on board on the 1st of February, 1922, and the figures in the middle and at the bottom of page 3 are stated to be on this basis. The personnel allowed by the committee in this tabulation is entirely inadequate, even as the personnel on the 1st of February, 1922, was entirely inadequate, at which time it was reported that a considerable number of the battleships were unready for active service on account of inadequate personnel.

The figures of the committee only serve to perpetuate the department's difficulties in trying to keep the fleet running as based on the inadequate appropriations for the year 1922. The figures of the committee amount to a statement that the number stated is sufficient and that the ships shall not have any more personnel than happens to have been on board on the 1st of February, 1922. This action is not only fatal to the ships and to the service but it is entirely illogical as a method for determining upon complements of ships. It will be noted in the committee's table on page 3 that identical ships are allowed different numbers of personnel for no other reason than because they happen to have different numbers of personnel on board on the 1st of February, 1922. The crew allowed the Tennessee, 998, is among the smallest, while it is known to all that the Tennessee, California, and Maryland are the largest and most modern ships on the list. On the same page two ships, the Connecticut and the Pueblo, are both omitted. (See p. 224 of the hearings.) The correct figures are on pages 216–232 of the hearings.

On page 6 is found the following statement:

> The foregoing constitute, with the exceptions hereinafter noted, the number of vessels which the department itself indicated to the committee it desired to operate next year, without any suggestion from the committee as to the number of enlisted men that might be appropriated for. They call for a total of 49,492 men. * * *

As a matter of fact, the table of ships submitted by the committee were the ships that the department said it could keep in commission on a personnel of 90,000 plus 6,000 apprentices, as is shown on pages 216 to 222 of the hearings, and similarly on page 232 of the hearings. The committee's statement that the list of ships calls for a total of 49,492 men is an absolute misrepresentation of facts. With the committee's remarks in the same paragraph, on page 6, the number of men allowed by the committee, according to the statements of the committee, are totally inadequate, as will be seen by referring to the department's tables referred to immediately above. The allowance of 50,000 men for a Navy afloat is incorrect as based upon the list of ships.

With regard to the Eagles (p. 6 of the report), used for training Naval Reserves, and the recommendation that the Naval Reserve be trained on board the regular cruising vessels as was done in the case of the old Naval Militia, the committee has absolutely prevented this by failing to appropriate money for the pay of these reserves while under training, and also failed to allow necessary money to pay their transportation to and from the ships.

The statement in the committee's report, on page 8, that "On February 1, 1922, we found 12,633 men at shore stations" is not complete, as this figure does not include men employed on district vessels, men in training at training stations and trade schools, men on general detail, men sick in hospitals, prisoners, and men in transit. Complete data was furnished the Committee on Appropriations covering these details, but only portions of this data is referred to. The following is the distribution of men at shore activities as of January 1, 1922, the date of the last complete report:

Distribution of personnel as of January 1, 1922.

Yards and stations	1,359
Receiving ships and barracks	1,945
Training stations and trade schools (instructions and overhead)	2,032
Hospitals (operating crews)	1,978
Prisoners (cooks, etc.)	23
Communications	1,228
Aviation stations	2,754
Ammunition depots and torpedo stations	605
Recruiting stations	709
Total	12,633
General detail, men under training, patients in hospitals, prisoners, students at trade schools	12,814
Total	25,447
Men in transit, not available for duty	4,062
Total	29,509
Men on district vessels	3,352
Total ashore		32,861

(See p. 297 of the hearings.)

Mr. Chairman, referring to the table submitted by the committee on page 8 of the report as providing necessary men for shore activities, no provision is made for shore based submarine tenders which require 1,600 men, district and navy-yard craft which require 1,500 based on a 67,000-man Navy. How the committee reached its conclusion in regard to this table is not known, as the figures do not conform either to the number of men now employed or to the number requested by the Navy Department for a 65,000-man Navy, or any other sized Navy. The number of men provided will never man the treaty Navy.

On page 10 of the report of the committee it is noted that the committee has reduced the cost of the ration from 50 cents to 45 cents. This price of 45 cents is a pure gamble, but the Navy Department would prefer to use 50 cents as the cost of the ration. The Navy Department's estimate for a 65,000-man Navy was $16,328,838, as found on page 987 of the hearings. For a 96,000-man Navy the department's estimate was $23,112,204.

On page 10, under the heading of "Fuel and transportation," line 4, the statement is made that—

> The original estimate for fuel for 1923 called for $25,000,000, but that was based on an enlisted strength of 106,000 men and contemplated using a great number of vessels which it is intended by the committee shall be placed out of commission or sold. The department's revised estimate, submitted at the hearings, is $17,426,053.81. The committee propose $16,000,000 and believes that this sum will prove adequate if the department continues to watch the fuel expenditures as closely as it has during the past few months.

There must be no mistake regarding this statement regarding "Fuel and transportation." The revised estimate of the Navy Department, based on 96,000 men, is $23,060,685. In accordance with the direction of the subcommittee on appropriations, the department submitted a list of ships which it considered possible to keep in commission with an enlisted personnel of 65,000 men. (See p. 364 in the hearings.) The amount named by the department for fuel and transportation for the Navy of 65,000 men was stated as $17,426,053.81, as based on this table, without any allowance being made for emergency. (See pp. 1025 and 1026 in the hearings.) The amount named in the appropriation bill is $16,000,000, which is $7,060,685 less than the amount requested by the Navy Department for the Navy of 96,000 men, and not $17,426,053.81, as stated in the report. It should be distinctly understood in this connection that the so-called department's revised estimate of $17,426,053.81 was a figure arrived at on premises prescribed by the subcommittee itself, the subcommittee having prescribed a basis of 65,000 men and having also prescribed in part the basis upon which the expenditure of fuel was to be estimated—namely, the amount of steaming which each ship would do per month. In no correct sense can $17,426,053.81 be considered "the department's revised estimate."

Under "Public works" it is noted that large sums have been left out for the continuation and betterment of Pacific coast bases.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. It takes a certain amount of information to even read a thing intelligently.

Mr. BRITTEN. It takes a large lot more to write it, and that is what the gentleman did not have when he wrote this.

Then he goes on and makes a total of 2,965, and then, to show our liberality, he has thrown in an extra 7,000 for hospitals, sickness, and those in jail and in other places not specified.

Mr. BEEDY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes.

Mr. BEEDY. Do I understand the gentleman agrees with the chairman of the subcommittee that this additional number of 7,000 has given to the department every man they requested?

Mr. BRITTEN. It certainly does not.

Mr. BEEDY. That was the statement made by the chairman yesterday.

Mr. BRITTEN. Certainly not. I am glad the gentleman called it to my attention.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. How many men did the Secretary of the Navy ask for aviation?

Mr. BRITTEN. I do not know; approximately 5,700.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I yield five minutes more to the gentleman, because this is important. The committee allowed for the two new ships for aviation, which are to be put in commission soon, the number of men the Secretary of the Navy asked for, and in addition——

Mr. BRITTEN. How many?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Whatever number was desired. I think it was about——

Mr. BRITTEN. I thought the gentleman might say that he expects me to know, and then he smiles.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. If you fill up your mind with small details——

Mr. BRITTEN. That was the reason I asked the gentleman the question. I have seen him picking up pins and rubber bands and small details for some time past. [Laughter.]

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Well, be that as it may, we allowed whatever number was requested—632 for the two ships.

Mr. BRITTEN. What do you mean by 632? How many men did the Secretary request for each one of these plane carriers?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. You mean the prospective carriers? He did not request any.

Mr. BRITTEN. He may not get any under this bill.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Of course he will not, because the Secretary of the Navy is a sensible man, and he would not ask Congress to appropriate men for carriers that have not yet been authorized, and when authorized can not be completed for two or three years.

Mr. BRITTEN. I am glad to have the gentleman's complimentary remarks about the Secretary. Stand by him, old boy, and give him what he needs. [Laughter.]

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. The Secretary is abundantly able to take care of himself. But, coming back to what we allowed for the carrier and tender that will soon be put in commission——

Mr. BRITTEN. They are converted ships.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. If the gentleman would listen——

Mr. BRITTEN. What are they?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. If the gentleman would listen he could hear much better.

Mr. BRITTEN. I do not want to be instructed along your line.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Of course, if the gentleman does not want information——

Mr. BRITTEN. Not along your line, because I heard you yesterday for an hour or more. I was interested, but not convinced.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I think, perhaps, that is true.

Mr. BRITTEN. The gentleman asked a question about aviation. They requested 5,700 men.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Will the gentleman allow me to make a statement right there, giving just what the department desired for aviation? I will yield more time to him.

Mr. BRITTEN. All right.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. The Secretary of the Navy will have at his disposal one airplane carrier and one tender for the coming year. Those are new, so far as the naval service is concerned, the Shawmut and the Langley. Now, of course, it is necessary to have the men to run those carriers. Whatever number he has asked for has been allowed.

Mr. BRITTEN. What is the tonnage of those two ships?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I did not build them; they are small ships.

Mr. BRITTEN. What is the tonnage of both of them? I will tell you. They are 19,000 tons combined. I will keep you informed about the Navy. [Laughter.] I had an idea when the gentleman came in here with a one-man bill that he knew something about it yesterday. He spoke for an hour and 15 minutes extemporaneously and camouflaged where he could get away with it.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Let me take the camouflage off, so that even the gentleman from Illinois can see. [Laughter.] If the gentleman will only listen, he will improve greatly. Listening is the greatest art in the world——

Mr. BRITTEN. Next to giving advice. [Laughter.]

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. There are those two ships that the Navy Department did not have before, and they asked for a certain number of men for those particular ships. They did not ask men for ships that had not been authorized or built. We gave them the number they asked for on those two. Then they asked for 600 men that they said they wanted to put on the battleships upon which the catapults are to be placed, and we not only appropriated the money for the catapults but for the 600 men who go into the fleet aviation because of these devices.

Mr. BRITTEN. How many men do these catapults require?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. And, adding those to the number allowed on shore, gives 3,200 men, beside many civilians, the entire number asked for by the Secretary of the Navy for aviation. [Applause.]

Mr. BRITTEN. That is very convincing.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes. Truth ought to carry some weight.

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes; I am satisfied that the gentleman thinks that is true. And yet the Navy Department this morning says they requested five thousand six hundred and some.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. What does the gentleman mean by "the Navy Department"?

Mr. BRITTEN. Men in authority in the Navy Department.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Does the gentleman mean the head of the Bureau of Aviation or does he mean the Secretary of the Navy? Or does he mean Admiral Coontz, the Chief of Operations?

Mr. BRITTEN. I hope you will withdraw your question. I may have some confidential information, but it did not come from the White House. You put me in a very embarrassing position, and I hope you will withdraw the question. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has again expired.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I will give the gentleman two minutes more. I am glad the gentleman has learned so quickly. He has learned already the lesson I sought to teach him yesterday. [Laughter.]

Mr. LINEBERGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a brief question?

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes.

Mr. LINEBERGER. The gentleman has stated that the British have between 10,000 and 11,000 men for naval aviation. I think the House would be interested in knowing how much the Japanese have under this 5-5-3 agreement for naval aviation.

Mr. BRITTEN. I do not know. We have not been able to get those figures. The Bureau of Naval Intelligence does not know how many men are under instruction in Japan to-day in naval aviation, but they do know the names of the Italian and French instructors who are teaching them. Based on the Japanese ratio, we ought to appropriate for 125,000 men for the coming fiscal year. The gentleman from Michigan suggests that we provide some 17,000 for shore duty. For 100 years, gentlemen, the Navy Department of America has always figured 2 men afloat to 1 man ashore. That ratio promotes efficiency. That puts a man on the ship in shape to be a seaman. The Japanese Government provides for 35 per cent ashore. The English Government provides 6 out of 10 afloat and 4 ashore.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has again expired.

Mr. BRITTEN. I would like to have a little more time. I would like to call the attention of the House to certain things, particularly where your greatest reductions in the bill are made.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. How much time does the gentleman need?

Mr. BRITTEN. Five minutes, and if the gentleman thinks I ought to have a little more time, let me have it.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I yield to the gentleman five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for five minutes more.

Mr. BRITTEN. I want to impress the House and the gentlemen on this side in particular with the fact that in the past, for 10 years prior to the war—I will not say during war, because then everybody voted one way—but prior to the war it was this side of the House that made the Navy what it was. [Applause.] Now, gentlemen, do not feel that you have to follow your leader over here because of the eloquent speech he made yesterday. I say in all sincerity that there is not a naval officer in America that stands for this bill. There is not a single naval authority who stands for it. The administration does not stand for it. It will be amended at the other end of the Capitol if we do not take the bit in our mouths here, or else we will have a third-class Navy if this bill becomes effective. We will be third, after Japan.

Now, gentlemen, the disarmament peace treaty has imposed a specific obligation on us. The world expects us to live up to the treaty, and if we live up to the treaty we will have to properly man 500,000 tons of ships and 135,000 tons of airplane carriers. The Aviation Bureau requested $17,000,000, but the committee allows less than $8,000,000. Engineering requested $16,881,336 on the basis of 65,000 men. Think of it! These officers were trying to comply with the request of this "little Navy" committee by making a 65,000-man Navy, and the Bureau of Steam Engineering made a request for $16,881,336, based on 65,000 men.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Does the gentleman know that nearly $4,000,000 of that was for new construction of towers in all parts of the world for radio?

Mr. BRITTEN. If they are for towers and for direction of the merchant marine, as many of these towers are, I am for it. That is the way they manage to get through the fog. We are establishing them on the Great Lakes, and thereby we enable ships to save life and property. It is very easy to say you do not need them, but I say the country is entitled to it. They cut the appropriation from $16,881,336 down to $12,100,000.

For construction and repair the Navy Department requested $16,465,000, based on 65,000 men. The committee gave them $14,200,000.

Fuel—there has been some argument as to whether fuel has been properly managed and handled by the Navy, but of course ships can not operate without fuel. Everybody knows that.

Mr. KNUTSON. And they can not maneuver without fuel.

Mr. BRITTEN. The department's estimate was cut more than $6,000,000. The department requested $23,000,000 and the committee recommend $16,000,000. That is a tremendous cut.

Mr. Chairman, let me read two letters from Secretary Denby about this fuel item:

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, April 10, 1922.

Hon. FRED A. BRITTEN,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. BRITTEN: Referring to your verbal request regarding fuel and transportation, I would state as follows:

The original estimate of the Navy Department, based on a Navy of 106,000 enlisted personnel, was $25,000,000. The revised estimate, based on 96,000 men, as submitted to the Committee on Appropriations, was $23,060,685.

In accordance with the direction of the Subcommittee on Appropriations, the department submitted a list of ships which it considered possible to keep in commission with an enlisted personnel of 65,000 men. (See page 364 in the hearings.)

The amount named by the department for fuel and transportation for a Navy of 65,000 men was stated as $17,426,053.81, without any allowance being made for emergencies. (See pages 1025 and 1026 in the hearings.)

The amount named in the appropriation bill is $16,000,000, which is $7,060,685 less than the amount requested by the Navy Department for a Navy of 96,000 men.

Yours sincerely,

EDWIN DENBY.

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, April 10, 1922.

Hon. FRED A. BRITTEN,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.
